"The two principal tenor solos were finely sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE MORNING POST says:

"Of two tenor songs, one 'The Vision of Peace,' the other from the last act, both are modelled on Wagner; the second is the more striking. The orchestration in the first is heavy, so that the vocalist has a hard fight. Mr. John Harrison sang both extremely well."

"Two of them well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says:

"The solo parts of which were taken in first-rate style by Mr. John Harrison."

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says:

"Two long solos allotted to the hero were sung by Mr. John Harrison, who earned great applause by his beautiful voice and method, and his sincere and rehned dramatic expression. His performances stamp him as an artist of the first rank."

THE GLOBE says:

"Two tenor solos, well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE STAR says:

"Both were sung with conspicuous beauty of voice and expression by Mr. John Harrison, who thereby showed himself more than equal to the severest of artistic tasks."

PROMENADE CONCERTS, QUEEN'S HALL.

THE STANDARD, Oct. 2, 1903.

"The singing of Miss Lillie Wormald, a promising young recruit to these concerts, proved entirely to popular taste, the artist deserving the highest commendation for her rendering of exacting songs."

THE MORNING POST, Oct. 2, 1903.

"Miss Lillie Wormald, who made her first appearance at these concerts, possesses a high soprano voice of excellent quality which has been well trained. She sang the difficult Bell song from Léo Delibes' 'Lakmé' with great fluency, and was deservedly applauded."

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

ORCHESTRAL UNION CONCERTS (Miscellaneous), GLASGOW.

"It is seldom so fine a singer as Miss Lillie Wormald comes to Glasgow unannounced by preliminary paragraphs. Miss Wormald has a voice of beautiful quality, which she uses with wonderful skill. . . . The audience were delighted, and the usual encore song was asked for and granted. Miss Wormald, however, had to return to the platform many times after all her solos."—Glasgow Herald, Nov. 30, 1903.

"Delightful is the adjective most applicable to Miss Lillie Wormald's brilliant vocalisation."—Glasgow Daily Mail, Nov. 30, 1903.

"The efforts of Miss Lillie Wormald, the vocalist of the evening, well deserved the tribute which they received from the audience. She possesses a charming voice, of considerable flexibility, and was heard to the utmost advantage in the 'Scene et Légende Hindoue,' from Delibes' 'Lakmé.' Her other contributions comprised items by Bizet, Dvorák, and E. Dell'Acqua, which evoked an ovation of applause. Dr. Cowen's 'A Birthday Song' was conceded as an encore."—Glasgow Daily Record, Nov. 30, 1903.

CITY CHORAL SOCIETY'S CONCERTS, BIRMINGHAM.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS,

48, DYNE ROAD, BRONDESBURY, N.W.

Telegrams:—SOLOIST, LONDON.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).

(Westminster Abbey.)

Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—

"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH."—TONBRIDGE.—"Mr. Montague Borwell was a perfect exponent of the fiery Prophet. He is the nearest approach to Santley I have heard for a long time. The dramatic instinct, the necessary sarcasm, and the devotional spirit of the Prophet were all there. The great air, 'Is not His Word,' being sung with much spirit, the top F rang as resonantly as a bell. The beautiful air, 'It is enough,' was splendidly sung, and Mr. Borwell had to repeatedly bow his acknowledgments."—Tonbridge Free Press.

"ELIJAH."—STOURBRIDGE.—"Mr. Montague Borwell sang the part of Elijah with fine dramatic expression. His taunts to the Priests of Baal were marked with bitter sarcasm, his appearances to Ahab with dignity, his lament on his betrayal by the people and his invocation to God were most impressive."—County Express.

"FAUST" (BERLIOZ).—BALYMONEX.—"Mr. Montague Borwell gave a very dramatic exposition of the part throughout . . . His rendering of the Serenade was simply splendid, whilst his enunciation throughout the whole work was perfect."—Coleraine Constitution.

"FAUST" (GOUDON).—SOUTHEND.—"The pick of the principals was Mr. Montague Borwell, whose singing both technically and artistically, was admirable. . . . His rendering of the Cavatina, and Valentine's death scene being beyond reproach."—Observer.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

"ELIJAH."—WEYBRIDGE.—"Possessing a soprano voice of fine quality and wide compass, Miss Winifred Marwood maintained a very high standard of excellence in the whole of her contributions, of which perhaps 'Hear ye, Israel,' was the most effective."—Survey Advertiser.

"ELIJAH."—TONBRIDGE.—"Miss Winifred Marwood made a great impression by her rendering of 'Hear ye, Israel.' It was sung as it should be—prayerfully, and not shouted to the people."—Tonbridge Free Press.

"HIAWATHA."—WEYBRIDGE.—"Miss Winifred Marwood, a soprano of wide range and pleasing method, and Mr. Montague Borwell, a resonant baritone, took the solos in the second scene, and their treatment of the deeply pathetic picture left little to be desired."—Survey Advertiser.

"L'ALLEGRO."—BRIGHTON.—"Miss Winifred Marwood, who made her first appearance at the Society's Concerts, sang the soprano solos, and showed the possession of a voice of bright, clear, and resonant quality, with a cultured and finished style of vocalization. She achieved conspicuous success in her rendering of 'Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,' for which she had to acknowledge the enthusiastic applause of a delighted audience."—Daily News, London.

The Musical Times.

JANUARY 1, 1904.

MUSICAL TIMES PRIZES.

The Proprietors of THE MUSICAL TIMES offer two prizes, of the value of Fifteen Guineas each, for the best composition of—

- (1) An anthem, with organ accompaniment.
- (2) A part-song, without accompaniment, for four voices: soprano, alto, tenor, and bass.

The words of the anthem must be selected entirely from the Bible, and the words of the part-song should be either non-copyright, or the property of the composer.

No composition (when printed) must exceed in length eight pages of THE MUSICAL TIMES, wherein the successful anthem and part-song will appear.

The prize compositions to become the property of the prize-givers.

Competitors are advised to seek after melody and to avoid eccentricity; natural expressiveness and singable music, in which English composers of past generations have so greatly excelled, should be kept prominently in view.

The authorship of each composition must be indicated only by a motto, or nom-de-plume, written at the top of the manuscript; such motto, or nom-de-plume, to be also written outside a sealed envelope accompanying the composition and containing the name and address of the composer.

The awards will be made known in the May issue of this journal.

Compositions, which must be sent in on or before March 31, should be addressed to:—

and endorsed 'MUSICAL TIMES COMPETITION.'

MDCCCCIV.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR, cordially expressed with a hearty hand-shake in imagination, is the sincere wish of the Editor to all his readers on the opening day of 1904.

This gripped greeting is conveyed through the medium of new type, impressed on better and pleasanter paper than that which has hitherto been used in this journal. As the Postmaster-General has decreed that any news more than a week old is no news, THE MUSICAL TIMES is treated at St. Martins-le-Grand as a letter, and not as a newspaper, with the result that the postage is now twopence on each copy, instead of three-halfpence. As stated last month, the Publishers intend to bear the extra cost of postage on the copies that are annually subscribed for; therefore the old rate of subscription will still be maintained, viz., Five shillings per annum, post free.

A further reference to typographical matters may be made in a tribute which, on this New Year's Day, we desire to pay to our printing staff for the care they exercise, month by month, in the mechanical preparation of THE MUSICAL TIMES for the press. So much—so very much—depends upon the manner in which the matter is presented to the eye, that our readers will doubtless gladly endorse this word of appreciation so justly due to 'the printer.'

To turn to matters literary. The present issue may serve as a sample of what may be expected during the year upon which we have just entered. The repeated suggestion that the Cathedral and College articles should be re-issued in book form encourages us to continue this series of illustrated chit-chats. Chester, which appears this month, will therefore be followed by other English and Irish Cathedrals, Colleges, old Parish Churches, &c.—all so rich in antiquarian, historical, and musical interest, and moreover furnishing a fruitful source of picturesque illustration.

The Biographical Sketches—that of Mr. Edward German is the sixtieth of the series—will be continued. Among modern musicians who have recently 'sat' specially for this purpose is Mr. Edward MacDowell, the eminent American composer, and the account of his life—the most complete that has hitherto been published—will shortly appear in our columns. Some of the distinguished dead will, as heretofore, come into the series—in all cases, both ancient and modern, with special portraits.

In the 'Church and Organ' section the histories of familiar hymns and their tunes may from time to time be continued, as they seem to be appreciated; for example, the account of 'The Evening Hymn' has been reprinted in numerous newspapers up and down the country. Other branches of Church Music will be similarly treated, e.g., some notes already made on the metamorphosis of S. S. Wesley's masterly anthem 'The Wilderness' are only waiting an opportunity to be developed.

Among other subjects which we have in mind as being of general interest, are: Lady Violinists (with portraits); Some old Concert Rooms in London and elsewhere (illustrated); The Masters of the King's Musick (with portraits); A short history of the Madrigal Society; and Our oldest Choral Societies. A continuation of the Music Library series, in the form of gossip on some public and private collections, is contemplated. In this connection a special article (or articles) will appear describing the important Loan Collection which the Worshipful Company of Musicians proposes to hold this year. A further instalment of the late Sir George Grove's interesting analyses may also be looked for.

Lastly, in the month of June, THE MUSICAL TIMES will complete the sixtieth year of its existence. The occasion will serve for something in the way of special commemoration, of which more anon.

CHESTER AND ITS CATHEDRAL.

And following Dee, which Britons long ygone Did call 'divine,' that doth by Chester tend.

SPENSER.

Picturesque antiquity is a strong characteristic of Chester. Its picturesqueness never fails to charm those who visit and re-visit the old city, while in regard to its antiquity, one historian carries us back to a great-grandson of Noah! Writing in the year 1611 this chronicler of Chester says:—

A ROMAN TOMBSTONE.

The first name that I find this city to have been supposed to have borne was Neomagus; and this they derive from Magus, the son of Samothēs, who was the first planter of inhabitants in this isle, after Noah's flood, which now containeth England, Scotland, and Wales; and of him was called Samothēs, and this Samothēs was son to Japhet, the third son of Noah; and of this Magus, who first builded a city even in this place or neer unto it, as it is supposed, the same was called Neomagus. This conjecture I find observed out the learned Knight, Sir Thomas Elliott, who saith directly, that Neomagus stood where Chester now standeth.

With all due respect to this gentleman, any suggestion of Ark-like times cannot conscientiously be dovetailed into the ancient history of Chester. The Roman Period finds us on surer ground. One has only to visit the Grosvenor Museum at Chester for proof thereof. Fortunate indeed be he who is favoured with so well-informed a cicerone as Mr. Robert Newstead, the able Curator of this interesting Institution. Therein he will see a fine collection of Roman altars and tombstones of the second century. These relics of a bygone age were taken from the Roman cemetery of Deva, and used in building the city walls; they were discovered in recent years when repairs were found to be necessary. By the courtesy of Mr. Newstead we are enabled to give a photograph of one of these ancient tombstones, still in a wonderful state of preservation. The inscription (translated) is as follows:—

To the memory of Caecilius Avilus of Ementa Augusta, optio of the Twentieth Legion, who served 15 years and died at 34. His heir had this erected.

This tombstone—50 inches high by 25 inches wide—bears a full-length figure of the optio (a rank a little below that of a centurion), with a long staff in his hand and a bundle of tickets (?) in his left hand. Another interesting relic in this fascinating Roman collection is some leaden water-piping, 4 inches in diameter, bearing this inscription, countersunk on a raised panel 48 inches long:—

(This lead pipe was made) when Vespasian and Titus were consuls for the ninth and seventh times respectively and when Cn. Iulius Agricola was Governor of Britain.

This ancient pipe—which would astonish any modern plumber—takes us back to the year 79, when the famous Agricola was Governor of Britain.*

Many other treasures and objects of interest—especially the beautiful ornithological specimens prepared by Mr. Newstead—might be described if space permitted; mention must, however, be made of the fine set of Chester Records—not bewigged gentlemen, but a quartet of instruments dating back to the 17th century, instruments immortalized by Shakespeare. This Chester set, comprising soprano, alto, tenor, bass—as shown in the photograph—has been fully described by Dr. J. C. Bridge, who is hardly less zealous as an antiquary than he is in his duties of Cathedral organist.*

To return for a moment to the Roman period, it should be noted that the ancient city on the Dee has the proud distinction of being called Chester (from Castra, or the Anglo-Saxon Cæstra), without any prefix—e.g., towns like Colchester, Manchester, Winchester, &c. Moreover, it retains to this day the characteristics of a Roman town in the regularity and precision of its four main streets which intersect at equal distances from the ancient gates of the city. And what shall be said of its famous walls? No more interesting ‘constitutional’ could be taken before breakfast—or at any time—than the two-mile tramp which this old-world city-girdle affords. Here, in defiance of old Father Time, the ravages of war and tumult, these city walls, with their ancient towers, have stood for a thousand years. As one paces that paved promenade one compares Chester with the Zion of the Psalmist, and recalls the familiar words: ‘Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces: that ye may tell it to the generation following.’

With the bare mention that Chester was ravaged by the Danes in 980, that it was the last place to hold out to the Conqueror (in 1070), we may now pass on to the Siege of Chester in the year 1645. Standing on the walls is a mouldering old tower, part of the mediæval fortifications of the city, now known as the Phoenix Tower, of which we give a photograph (p. 14). Here King Charles I. stood and saw his soldiers defeated on Rowton Moor in a smart cavalry action in which William Lawes, the brother of Henry Lawes—Milton’s ‘Tuneful Harry’—was slain. Fuller says that he ‘was respected and beloved by all such persons as cast any looks towards virtue and honour,’ and further, that ‘the King (tho’ he was already in mourning for his kinsman, Lord Bernard Stuart, killed at the same siege) put on particular mourning for his dear servant, William Lawes, whom he commonly called the Father of Music.’ The body of the soldier-musician is said to have been buried in the Cathedral, but there is no record of the interment, nor any trace of a monument. The following quaint epitaph, probably inscribed on a monument, has, however, fortunately been preserved:—

Concord is conquered—in the Urn there lyes
The master of great Music’s mysterys :
And in it is a Riddle, like their Cause,
Will Laws was slain by those whose Wills were Laws.

Bishop Creighton has well and truly said that ‘Chester itself contains almost an epitome of English History,’ and proofs are not lacking in support of that statement.

In addition to what has been already said in the course of this article, some further historical references may be made before we proceed to speak of the Cathedral. King Henry III. not only made Chester a County Palatine, but settled the Earldom of Chester on the heirs apparent of the Crown, whereby the Prince of Wales is also Earl of Chester. Like unto Coventry, Chester is celebrated for its Mystery Plays, said to have been composed by the celebrated Ranulph Higden, a monk of Chester, and author of the famous ‘Polychronicon.’ These dramas, all founded on sacred subjects, were acted at Whitsuntide by the various trade companies of Chester. We give a list of those performed on Whit-Monday.

The Rows form one of the most attractive and interesting features of Chester. They should be seen and walked along rather than described. As quaint old Thomas Fuller (1608-1661) in 'The History of the Worthies of England' says, 'Here is a property of building peculiar to Chester, called The Rows, being galleries wherein passengers go dry without coming into the streets [i.e., the roadways], having shops on both sides and underneath, the fashion whereof is somewhat hard to conceive. It is worth their pains, who have money and leisure to make their own eyes the expounders of the manner thereof, the like being said not to be seen in all England; no, nor in all Europe again.' Antiquaries are divided in opinion as to the origin of these Rows, some claiming for them Roman origin. But there they are to this day, and anyone with an eye for the picturesque will revel in their Music played no unimportant part in these old plays, for instance, in 'Noe and his Shippe' there is a very fine drinking trio for Mrs. Noah and her two 'gossips' which was doubtless performed by the professional musicians from the monastery. The following items of expenditure relating to the Chester Plays are taken from the Harleian MSS., as quoted in Canon Morris's valuable book 'Chester in the time of the Plantagenets and Tudors.'

curious constructiveness and also in the many beautiful specimens of timber houses of the 'black and white' style of architecture which abound in various parts of the city. Admirers of Norman architecture will not fail to visit the noble church of St. John, wherein strength and dignified beauty are manifested. It may be mentioned in passing that the organ specially built for and used at the Coronation of Queen Victoria in Westminster Abbey is embodied in the instrument now in St. John's Church. It was the first C organ in England.* Here also were held the yearly services connected with the great Guild of Minstrels in Chester. For the long period of 500 years the family of Dutton of Dutton exercised rights over all the minstrels of Chester, and the 'lay of the last minstrel'—as the Vicar of St. John's aptly expresses it—was heard in the church on St. John-the-Baptist's day, 1756. Licences were originally issued to fiddlers in the city and county for a fee of 4½d., afterwards raised to half-a-crown.

The Cathedral. — Chester Cathedral cannot perhaps claim to be in the front rank of English mother-churches in regard to external beauty—for example, the West front has been spoiled by the erection of modern buildings. In the year 907 Ethelred founded a house of secular canons named after the Mercian saint Werburgh. The abbey of St. Werburgh, one of the richest in England, became a cathedral after the dissolution of the monasteries. The sacred edifice is an irregular structure built of red sandstone, crowned by a massive central tower 127 feet in height. Like most of its fellows, its style varies from Norman to Late Perpendicular, one of the most striking features being the fine Perpendicular window of the West front. The Nave, which is considerably below the level of the street, has to yield to the Choir in attractiveness. The South Transept, long used as

St. Oswald's Church, is very much longer and more spacious than the North Transept; the latter, by-the-way, is practically non-existent from a distant point of view, as it is entirely shut off by the organ case (see the illustration on p. 18).

The glory of Chester Cathedral is its Choir, one of the most beautiful in England. It belongs to the brief period of transition between the Early English and Decorated styles. The curious and elaborately decorative Triforium, equally with the delicate stall work, cannot fail to impress those who come under the spell of this combined beauty. The Misereres are interesting and often amusing. We give a photograph (on p. 13) of one which represents a lady beating her husband with some domestic weapon. The poor man is on his knees; his 'better-half' is holding him by the tip of his hood while she administers vigorous chastisement. Her costume should be noted. Another of our photographs (p. 15) is that of a remarkably fine Bench End of the 14th century, immediately under the Dean's stall. It represents a Jesse Tree, a favourite subject with mediæval workers. There are no fewer than twenty-seven figures carved on the panel. The Poppy Head is very fine, quite equal to anything in the Choir. The elbow represents the Palmer pilgrim and his staff.

We may now pass on to the consideration of the organs in the Cathedral. The inventory of the monastery shows 'a paire of organs.' The old historian already quoted from thus quaintly records an organ early in the 17th century: 'The Quire itself is most finely beautified, first over the entry thereof, with a most stately Gallary furnished with a very deep and Tuneable Organ, serving for the daily Church-Musick at Divine Service.' Father Smith built the next organ. 'This instrument originally had but one set of keys. The Choir organ was added by Snetzler, who also put in a new trumpet.' Thus wrote the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, under the headings 'Father Smith' and 'Chester Cathedral,' in his manuscript collection of organ specifications now in the possession of the present writer. It may not be without interest to give the specification of the Father Smith-Snetzler organ—originally of one manual and without pedals—in order that it may be compared with the present four-manual and pedal instrument:—

This organ—and its successor, or successors—stood on the Choir Screen; but at the restoration of the Cathedral in 1876—with which the name of Dean Howson is worthily associated—was placed by Sir Gilbert Scott in the North Transept, as shown in the photograph on p. 18. In order, however, to keep up the tradition of the Choir-Screen position, some of the choir organ stops are there located, with the practical advantage of being convenient for accompaniment purposes by reason of their close proximity to the singers. The following is the specification of the present four-manual organ, designed and built by Mr. Charles H. Whiteley, of Chester, in 1875-6:— 72 stops. 3,917 pipes.

The bellows are blown by steam power, a six horse-power engine being employed for the purpose.

There are separate wind reservoirs with different pressures to each manual, ranging from $\frac{3}{4}$ inches to 7 inches.

The Pneumatic Lever is applied to the Great, Swell and Pedal Organs—the Swell to Great Coupler, and also to the drawing of all the stops, except the Choir and Echo Organs.

The Echo Organ is in a swell box and voiced to a very light pressure of wind. The Solo and Echo Organs are controlled from the same (uppermost) manual.

Every stop, except the Lieblich Bourdon, Viola, Vox Angelica on the Echo Organ and the Orchestral Oboe on the Solo Organ, extends throughout the full compass of the manuals. The stops draw at an angle of 45 degrees, and the stop jamps and key fittings are splendidly fitted up in polished oak, beautifully carved, and with solid ivory draw knobs.

The Couplers are arranged in a row over the Upper Manual.

The Dean and Chapter have since expended the sum of £600 on mechanical improvements to the organ, which were carried out by Messrs. Gray and Davison.

The Roll of Organists of Chester Cathedral contains some distinguished names. It begins with the year 1541, when one John Byrcheley was appointed. To him succeeded respectively Thomas Barneys and one White (or Whyte). Concerning

Following Mr. Whyte came a Robert Stevenson, who, in 1583, supplicated for a degree in music at Oxford, stating that he had been 'thirty-three years a student.' It was not, however, till four years later (in 1587) that he was granted the degree of Mus.B., while nine years elapsed ere he obtained that of Mus.D. Upon the death or resignation of Stevenson a very distinguished man became Chester's 'chief musician' in the person of Thomas Bateson, the madrigal composer. Bateson was organist from 1599 to 1608, when he became organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin. The following extracts from the Treasurer's accounts during this period of his organistship at Chester are interesting:—

1601.	Dec. 12	—Paid to Mr. Bateson for ye new Organ Booke belonging to o'r Quier	xls
1602.	Nov. 3.	—For a Sheep skynne to mende ye Bellowes of ye Organs	vjd

„	Nov. 3.	—To Beedle & his man for two dayes & half about ye Organs	ijjs

Concurrently with Thomas Bateson another eminent madrigal composer held office in Chester Cathedral—Francis Pilkington by name. In the title of his first publication (1605) he thus describes himself:—

The First Booke of Songs or Ayres of 4 parts: with Tableture for the Lute or Orpherion, with the Violl de Gamba. Newly composed by F. PILKINGTON, Bachelor of Musicke, and Lutenist, and one of the Cathedrall Church of Christ, in the Citie of Chester.

London: Printed by T. Este, dwelling in Aldersgate-streete, and are ther to be sould. 1605.

In his 'Second Set of Madrigals and Pastorals' (1624) Pilkington sets himself forth as 'Lutenist and Chaunter of the Cathedrall Church of Christ and blessed Mary the Virgin, in Chester.' As a matter of fact he came to Chester as a Conduct, or Lay Clerk, and, upon his ordination, he subsequently became a Minor Canon and Precentor of the Cathedral.

It is not necessary to give a detailed list of Chester Cathedral organists, as are they not all noted in Mr. John E. West's 'Cathedral Organists'? But special mention may be made of one Peter Stringer—not a violinist, as his name might suggest, but at various times a chorister, Conduct, Minor Canon, Precentor, Organist and Treasurer of the Cathedral in the 17th century. In a letter addressed by the Dean of Chester to 'Mr. Subdeane Bispham and Mr. Chanter Stringer,' these two gentlemen are described as 'the most antient stagers now resident in this Church.' Here is the letter, as printed in Mr. West's book:—

There is an hon'ble Maid lately deceased at Mr. John Anderson's, being the Hope and Anchor in our Northgate St., within the City of Chester, viz.: The Lady Jane Montgomery, sister to the Right Hon'ble Hughe, Earle of Mount Alexander in the Kingdome of Ireland; who, being a great lover of the ceremonies of our Church while shee lived, desired to bee buried in our Church when shee dyed. And since shee had the quire so much in her heart living, I adjudged it fitt to bury her in the heart of our quire now shee is dead, her Executors paying to the Cathedrall all customarye dues and justifiable fees which belong unto us. Now, by reason of the late distraction in this Kingdome and my frequent absences from this Church, my memory not well serving mee in every particular thereof, and the R't. Reverend John, Lord Bishop of Chester, having a great kindness for her family, as well as a great love unto Justice, desiring that shee may not bee imposed upon by any kind of exaction: You two being the most antient stagers now resident in this Church, I doe require you, upon virtue of your oathes formerly taken, y't you declare unto mee in writing what the former fees and customes have been in the like case; that as I may not impose upon such hon'ble persons, so neither præjudice our Successors in this Church; etc., etc.

From 1699 to 1704 one John Demonticall was chief-musician at Chester, a gentleman of whom absolutely nothing is known. Can any of our readers furnish some information concerning this fiendish-named organist? Mention must of course be made of Edmund Baker, a pupil of Dr. Blow and the teacher of Dr. Burney, as he held the organistship at the time Handel was weather-bound at Chester on his way to Dublin (in 1741) to produce his oratorio of the 'Messiah.' Mr. Baker supplied Handel with Mr. Janson, one of the Cathedral lay-clerks, the gentleman who could 'sing at sight, but not at first sight'! Handel doubtless visited the Cathedral, and probably played on Father Smith's organ. To Edmund Baker succeeded (in the year 1764) Edward Orme. He was a prominent Freemason, and held the post of Deputy Herald of the city; he also served the office of Sheriff. Moreover, Mr. Orme originated the Chester Musical Festivals. The first of these music-makings was held in the year 1772, when three oratorios were 'performed in the Broad Isle of the Cathedral,' and 'a Concert of Select Musick' was given in the Exchange Hall, the proceedings terminating with a Masked Ball which, it is satisfactory to learn, was conducted 'with the greatest elegance and decorum.'

Before saying a few words in conclusion concerning the present organist, Dr. J. C. Bridge, we may accompany him in a walk through the beautiful cloisters to the Choir School, of which the head master is the Rev. J. M. New, M.A., one of the Minor Canons of the Cathedral, and formerly Vice-Principal of St. Mark's College, Chelsea. Here are some twenty-six young gentlemen hard at work—the curriculum including Latin, the ordinary English subjects and shorthand, special attention being given to mathematics. Ex-choristers can attend the King's School at half-fees, and several of those who have availed themselves of this privilege have greatly distinguished themselves in their mathematical studies, due to the excellent grounding they received at the Cathedral Choir School. The boys board at home, yet Dr. Bridge—an ex-chorister himself, but of the time when semi-barbarism prevailed in English cathedrals—looks well after his little men. Every morning after service, milk with bread and butter is supplied before school-work is begun: 'You can't expect boys to do good work on an empty stomach,' he very truly observes.

Again, let us go with Dr. Bridge, just before the hour of Evensong, to the Refectory, formerly used as the King's School. Here Charles Burney, Randolph Caldecott, and doubtless many other boys with artistic tastes were educated. The beams of this ancient and spacious apartment used to be covered with paper darts, thrown up by former 19th century; the present three-manual instrument was erected by Mr. C. H. Whiteley about thirty years ago.

The Refectory is now used as the practice-room of the choristers, and here they drill and perform their dumb-bell exercises. Although Dr. Bridge is a strict disciplinarian, he is one of the most scholars. The choristers have knocked them down by throwing up indiarubber balls, and one of these darts bore the signature of Randolph Caldecott, who was a native of Chester. The miscellaneous concerts of the early Chester Festivals were held here, and many other concerts have also been given within these walls. It has contained an organ since the beginning of the kind-hearted of men. Immediately before every service each chorister is obliged to 'clean up'—no dirty hands or faces; moreover, the boys walk in step as they make their way to their places in the Cathedral. The service is very reverently performed—we do not remember to have heard Stainer's Sevenfold Amen more devotionally rendered. Suffice it to say that the singing of these simple strains typified the reverence and orderliness which so eminently characterize the musical services of Chester Cathedral. Organist, assistant-organist, choristers, and lay-clerks unitedly seem to realize the sacredness of their office in so commendably discharging their important duties. Dr. Bridge has an able assistant in Mr. J. T. Hughes, an ex-chorister and his former articulated pupil. Mr. Hughes, who succeeded the late W. T. Best as organist of Derby Parish Church, Liverpool, and who conducts the Chester Orchestral Society, is an excellent all-round musician.

Dr. Joseph Cox Bridge, M.A., is the present organist of Chester Cathedral. The son of John Bridge, a lay clerk, and younger brother of Sir Frederick Bridge, he was born at Rochester, August 16, 1853, and became a chorister in the Cathedral there. He is therefore one of the distinguished quintett—the others being Philip Armes (Durham), J. Frederick Bridge (Westminster), Daniel J. Wood (Exeter), and the late Joseph Maas,—all of whom were Rochester choristers. Mr. H. E. Ford, of Carlisle, the doyen of English Cathedral organists, and Dr. Crow, late organist of Ripon Cathedral, are also 'old Rochester boys.' Dr. Bridge officiated as assistant organist at Rochester, and, like his brother Frederick, was for a short time organist of Shorne Church, Kent. He then became a pupil of and assistant to his brother at Manchester, and subsequently held the organistship of Exeter College, Oxford (1871-6), where he graduated in Arts and Music. In 1876 he became assistant organist of Chester Cathedral, and in the following year succeeded to the full office on the retirement of the late Mr. Frederick Gunton. His compositions include 'Daniel' (an oratorio), 'Rudel' (a cantata), a Requiem Mass, church music, part-songs, &c. Special mention should be made of a very agreeable Symphony in F, composed for the Chester Triennial Musical Festival of 1894, of which the various movements were suggested by historical incidents connected with the City. The whole idea is most ingeniously carried out, the final movement—'The Abbey of St. Werburgh'—being founded on the Cathedral bells, which, as might be expected at Chester, play the Westminster chimes.

Dr. Bridge—who is a member of the Chester Archaeological Society and a man having various interests—has done splendid work for the cause of music in Chester during the twenty-seven years of his official connection with the ancient city. He founded the Chester Musical Society, which he has conducted and financed for twenty years—a Society which is still in a flourishing condition. Moreover, he not only revived, in 1879, the Chester Musical Festivals, which had been dormant for half-a-century, but in many ways he has earned the respect and esteem of not a few Cestrians. In the course of a sermon preached in the Cathedral on 'Mayor's' Sunday, November 9, 1902, before the Mayor and Corporation of the city, who attended in state, the Bishop of Chester (Dr. Jayne) uttered the following gratifying and spontaneous 'appreciation' of Chester's genial organist:—

How was Freedom acquired? Was it by sloth or by self-indulgence? We all knew that the answer must be quite the contrary. It was by self-discipline; it was by going into training; it was by self-control. That was the way the athlete won his freedom in his bodily powers. Let us go to the artist in any of the branches of art. Let us go for example to the organist of this Cathedral, who for a quarter-of-a-century, as they knew, had been serving splendidly the cause of music not only in this Cathedral, but ministering musical delight and culture to the city and neighbourhood. Let us ask him how we were to become masters of song or of instrument; how we were to win our freedom in music. Was it by taking things easily? Was it by neglecting practice? Was it by the conceit which thought that because we had a natural taste, because we were born musicians, therefore we could become consummate singers and have freedom of voice and freedom of instrument? We knew he would tell us a very different tale.

DOTTED CROCHET.

EDWARD GERMAN.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Cross-country travellers journeying from Chester or Crewe to Shrewsbury and beyond pass through Whitchurch, an old market-town situated in the northernmost part of Shropshire. It is the chief among the thirteen (or more) places named Whitchurch in Great Britain. Eyton, in his 'Antiquities of Shropshire' (1857-60), states that the town was originally named Weston, and he gives the following extract from Domesday concerning it:—

Willelm de Warene holds Westune of Earl Roger. The Earl Herald held it [in Saxon times]. Here are 7½ hides, geldable. In demesne are IIII ox-teams and two Serfs; and [there are] VI Neatherds, XXIII Villains, IX Boors, and one Radman, with VIII teams, and yet XIII more teams might be [employed] here. The Wood will fatten 400 swine, and therein are III Hayes.

Furthermore, according to Eyton, the district in olden times was very thinly provided with churches. Shortly after Domesday, a church was built of white stone at Weston, whereupon its name was changed to Whitchurch. This ancient white church, by-the-way, fell down on the last day of July, 1711. An attractive feature of Whitchurch consists of the beautiful meres which lie in close proximity to the town—meres rich in perch and roach. 'This is a mere detail,' some reader may be disposed to observe; not, however, if he be a devotee of Izaak Walton, like unto the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Edward German (whose baptismal name is German Edward Jones) was born at Whitchurch, on February 17, 1862. He began his musical life in the capacity, it may be said, of an organ blower! The organ he blew was that in the Congregational Church, Whitchurch, played by his father, who there held the post of voluntary organist for a period of thirty years. The boy, who received much encouragement in music from his mother, taught himself the violin, and he began to harmonize tunes in his own way. At the age of six he had started a boys' band,—of a kind—of which he was bandmaster. The rehearsals took place in a warehouse on the banks of the canal. This band only wanted a trumpet, a drum, and a pair of cymbals to make it complete; but, alas! the surreptitious acquirement of the needed brass and percussion caused this juvenile organization to collapse. At the age of twelve young German joined the local choral society as an alto. Music, however, was not then regarded as his vocation in life. He had a great fancy for engineering; he would run a mile to see a wheel go round, and his parents decided that he should become an engineer. His mother took him to Laird's ship-building yard at Birkenhead with a view of his entering that establishment as an apprentice, but only to find that he was just too old, much to the delight of the music-loving boy, and—may it be said?—of his mother also.

He was still in his teens when he formed and conducted a second band. This instrumental organization consisted of himself and a curate (1st violins), a photographer (2nd violin), a watch-maker—doubtless an excellent timeist—(flautist), and a bricklayer (cornet player), while the juvenile conductor's sister supplied the bass and filled in the harmony upon the pianoforte. These orchestral practices took place at home, the music performed—principally quadrilles—being arranged for his quintet of players by the youthful conductor at a time when he was supposed to be studying engineering. Yet other interests claimed the attention of the young gentleman. He acted in character, and sang songs at public entertainments. In the quietude of an attic he constructed, unaided, a marionette show, with elaborate scenery painted by himself, and dolls obtained direct from London. He composed some shivering music—fiddled by the gardener—in order to increase the effect of the 'storm scene' in this home-made show. His early predilection for the stage, though evidenced in a mild sort of way, foreshadowed his subsequent and intimate connection with dramatic and operatic enterprises. These diversions were, however, interrupted when Edward German became a boarder at Bridge House School, Chester, where he entertained and astonished the masters and his schoolfellows with spirit seances and exhibitions of conjuring skill.

After he had left school it was necessary to decide upon a career. Music had more and more asserted itself in his life, and at the age of eighteen Edward German again left home, to study the art as a profession. In January, 1880, he entered the house of Mr. Walter Cecil Hay, the well-known (and now venerable) professor residing at Shrewsbury. 'The nine months that I passed under Mr. Hay's roof were perhaps the happiest time in my life,' recalls Mr. German at this interval of twenty-three years. 'Mr. Hay was an enthusiast in music. He conducted an excellent orchestra, conducted concerts, taught me harmony and instrumentation, and I made music the whole day long, beginning at six o'clock in the morning. Mr. Hay had a splendid library of music, especially full scores. We played no end of trios and violin duets (Pleyel and Viotti). I also practised the organ a good deal, and was able to play the D major fugue of Bach. I look upon that three-quarters of a year at Shrewsbury, under Mr. Hay's instruction, as a most important formulative period of my life.' Mr. Hay, in response to our request, has kindly supplied the following reminiscences of his gifted young pupil:—

In 1879 I was conducting the Whitchurch Choral Society, and German (who resided in the town) used to come and help us—to our great delight—with his violin, his playing of which was correct and very sympathetic, so that the most difficult choruses were learnt easily by the soprani, to whom the violin gave a capital lead. About the beginning of 1880 it was decided that German should adopt music as a profession, and I was asked to prepare him in violin, piano and theory by taking him in my house for a term or two. This I did, and during the time he was with me he worked capitally, early and late, and after a busy day he would get me to play Mozart's Violin Sonatas with him for an hour before retiring to roost. I was then Diocesan Inspector of Choirs for the Rural Deanery of Shrewsbury, and when inspecting a country choir I used to take German with me. On those occasions his organ accompaniments were always good, and much appreciated by the rural singers who were busy preparing for the annual Choral Festival in Lichfield Cathedral.

I used to tell my daughter that he would make a second Sullivan, and he once gave her a song of his composition which began in this characteristic style:—

In September, 1880, Edward German became a student at the Royal Academy of Music. He took two 'principal studies'—the organ, under Dr. Steggall, and the violin, first under the late Henry Weist Hill, and then as a pupil of Mr. Alfred Burnett, 'who,' he says, 'is unsurpassed as an orchestral leader.' His theory professor was the late Mr. Banister; but for seven years he studied composition and orchestration under Professor Prout with the greatest possible advantage. The Principal, Sir George Macfarren, gave him every encouragement to compose. German soon began to make his mark at Tenterden Street, first as a violinist. He joined the ensemble class, then under genial Prosper Sainton, and played viola in the Posthumous Quartets of Beethoven, his colleagues being Winifred Robinson, H. C. Tonking, and J. E. Hambleton. Although not a pupil of his, Sainton lent him his Guarnerius violin (worth £800) to play the De Beriot and Mendelssohn concertos upon at an Academy concert and annual examination respectively.

Within the first year of his pupilage at the Academy, German won the Tubbs prize bow. THE MUSICAL TIMES of the years 1881 to 1887 (inclusive) records various appearances and achievements of the young man from Whitchurch. As a composer we find his name in public performances, against a Pizzicato movement (1883) and a Bolero for violin and orchestra (1884). He tried very hard for the Potter Exhibition, but failed. To qualify for this in regard to organ playing he used to walk at six o'clock in the morning from his lodgings in Hampstead Road to Westminster Chapel in order to practise the organ, the long walk to and from and the practice creating a keen appetite for breakfast. The year 1885 brought him much to the front, when he gained the Lucas silver medal for the composition of a Te Deum (in F) for voices and organ. In 1886 he produced his operetta (performed by the Operatic Class of the Academy) entitled 'The Two Poets,' afterwards called 'The Rival Poets,' libretto by W. Herbert Scott. In the following year his first Symphony (in E minor) was performed at an orchestral concert given under the late Sir Joseph Barnby's direction by the Academy students at St. James's Hall, on July 16, 1887. Concerning this youthful achievement THE MUSICAL TIMES said:—

The Symphony is undoubtedly a work of great promise, though it is somewhat unequal. The first movement is in themes and workmanship thoroughly admirable, and the piquant Scherzo is even better. But in the slow movement Mr. German indulges in the modern vice of straining after effects by over-orchestration, and the result is unsatisfactory. However, this defect may be due merely to inexperience, and we have every confidence that Mr. German will develop into a composer worthy to rank with those who are already at work in the formation of a genuine English School. (THE MUSICAL TIMES, August, 1887.)

This criticism, while just, was distinctly prophetic. At the same concert THE MUSICAL TIMES critic selected 'for special praise Mr. H. J. Wood, who played the first movement of Prout's fine Organ Concerto in E minor'—the said Mr. Wood having since been heard of in another capacity. It may be of interest to give the names of some of Mr. German's fellow-students at the Royal Academy of Music—G. J. Bennett, Ben Davies, Edwin H. Lemare, John E. West, and Henry J. Wood, all of whom, including the subject of this sketch, have made their mark in the art of music.

In 1887 he left the Academy after seven years of pleasant and profitable study within its walls. He had been made a sub-professor of the violin, had taken some half-a-dozen medals, including the Lucas already mentioned, and was elected an Associate on leaving the Institution. His election to a Fellowship, the highest honour the Academy can bestow upon its former students, took place in 1895. In the year that he left Tenterden Street he, with four fellow-students, made a tour in Germany, concluding with a visit to Bayreuth, where he heard and saw 'Parsifal' and 'Tristan.' 'What a sensation that was!' he says.

During his studentship at the Academy, Edward German had to earn his daily bread. 'Hard work, hard work,' he remarks with emphasis, 'nothing can be attained without it.' He played second violin at two guineas a week, with seven shillings extra for matinées, in the Sullivan operas,—'The Pirates,' 'Iolanthe,' and 'Princess Ida'—and he is not ashamed to say that he has fiddled in a Drury Lane Pantomime! Among his teaching engagements was that of professor of the violin in succession to Dr. McNaught at Wimbledon School. Mr. Barry Pain was then a classical master at that seat of learning. The two masters collaborated in preparing a performance of the Antigone of Sophocles, with original music by German, which was completed; but owing to an outbreak of illness in the school the event did not come off. In this Wimbledon connection we may quote from the biographical sketch of

Dr. McNaught (which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March last), in which he says :—

Among those with whom my work has associated me I gladly reckon Mr. Edward German. When I abandoned teaching the violin I was fortunate in being able to induce so excellent a violinist to take up some suburban pupils. This led to his playing first violin in a private orchestral band which I conducted for many years. I well remember how the otherwise tedious journeys home were enlivened by various discussions. One topic was whether there was a career for him as a composer. In view of what has happened since, I feel that I showed a sad lack of foresight in cold-watering the idea. Other discussions revealed a vein of awesome transcendentalism in his beliefs and experiences that may some day find vent in his music, now so far from being morbid or introspective

‘Can you conduct?’ This question was addressed, with startling suddenness, by Mr. Randegger to the subject of this sketch when they met on the steps of the Academy one afternoon late in the year 1888. ‘Mr. Mansfield has taken the Globe Theatre, and he wants a conductor. Will you go?’ German went. It was a turning point in his life, and for this he never forgets to acknowledge his indebtedness to Mr. Randegger. Mr. Mansfield provided a first-rate band of twenty-eight players, including such artists as Griffith, Dubrucq, and Hutchings of ‘the wind.’ In recalling the incidents of those days, Mr. German observes : ‘Orchestral players generally are not nearly so much appreciated as they ought to be.’ The music given or performed at the Globe was of the highest class, and his excellent players entered con amore into the artistic nature of this unusual theatrical music. The chance for the conductor came when Mr. Mansfield produced Shakespeare’s ‘King Richard III.,’ on March 16, 1889. For this, Mr. German composed an overture, entr’actes and all the incidental music, which, in the words of the late Sir George Grove, ‘was highly praised in the newspapers at the time, for appropriateness, grace and vigour.’

At the termination (June, 1889) of the Globe engagement, which lasted seven months, Mr. Mansfield gave a supper at the Langham Hotel, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. John Hare, Mr. Joseph Hatton, Mr. J. L. Toole, and Mr. Joseph Bennett being among the guests. Mr. Mansfield proposed the toast ‘Joseph Bennett.’ The distinguished critic in his reply glided into the subject of ‘music wedded to the drama,’ and said that Mr. Mansfield must be complimented upon having secured the services of a gentleman who was so sound a musician, one whose music was so characteristic and that never lacked interest, adding that the ‘Richard III.’ music was perhaps the best example he had known of the art of wedding music to the drama. These words were received with great enthusiasm. So completely was the composer taken aback at this spontaneous tribute to his gifts that he could only say : ‘I cannot make a speech, but I thank you all very much for your kind appreciation of my music to “Richard III.”’ Mr. German regards this event as a red-letter day in his life, as he then and there resolved to still further improve music when allied with the drama.

The overture to ‘Richard III.’ was performed at the Crystal Palace, February 22, 1890, under the direction of that staunch friend of British composers, Sir August Manns, who in a recent letter to the composer assured him ‘of my esteem of your musical gifts and culture, and my good-will towards you as a brother artist.’ On December 13, 1890—the name of Edward German again appeared in a Crystal Palace Saturday programme, when he conducted the first performance of his Symphony (No. 1) in E minor, a work founded on the earlier symphonic composition of the pupilage days to which we have already referred. Sir August Manns took no end of pains in preparing the Symphony for performance, even to blue-pencilling the band parts with phrasing marks, &c., with his own hand. We venture to quote the first paragraph of the analysis of the Symphony ; it is from the pen of the late Sir George Grove :—

In introducing Mr. German’s picturesque overture to Richard the Third to the audience of the Saturday concerts in February last, we spoke of a possibility that the whole of the music incidental to that drama might be thrown into the shape of a Suite for grand orchestra. We venture to congratulate the young composer on the fact that he has resisted the temptation, has allowed his theatrical music to remain as it was composed, and has given us to-day, instead of a mere réchauffé, a Grand Symphony in the complete and authentic shape settled by the great masters. The writer heartily wishes him every success in his laudable musician-like undertaking.

Speaking of Sir August Manns, Mr. German says : ‘He never turned a deaf ear to me, and I find it impossible to look back on the old Crystal Palace days without feelings of emotion.’

With the bare mention of a Funeral March in D minor, performed at one of Mr. Henschel’s concerts at St. James’s Hall, in January, 1891, we must pass on to the ‘Henry VIII.’ music which has made known so widely the name of Edward German. In an interview he had with Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum Theatre, the eminent actor said to him : ‘I heard your music to “Richard III.” at the Globe—therefore I ask you to write music to “Henry VIII.”’ These words caused Edward German to tread the Strand pavement with a light step, and he began to compose as he walked along. The music consisted of an overture, five entr’actes, much ‘incidental,’ and a setting of ‘Orpheus with his lute.’ The last-named originated thus : Sir Henry Irving suggested that the words should be set as a trio, and be sung by three maids of Queen Katherine. ‘They must be very artistic singers,’ said Sir Henry ; ‘tall and graceful,’ added Miss Ellen Terry ; ‘and not wanting an exorbitant fee,’ interposed Mr. Loveday, the stage manager. Bound by this triple condition, and having in his mind an accompaniment of muted strings and harp as a happy, or, as Mr. Toole has said, ‘harpy’ thought, German hied him off to the Royal Academy of Music to seek out the three artistic, tall and graceful, and non-exorbitant damsels to sing his music. It is not necessary to enlarge upon the success which attended the 'Henry VIII.' music, especially the 'Three Dances,' which are known the world over. Suffice it to say that thenceforth Mr. German decided to give up all his teaching engagements and to devote himself entirely to composition.

The remaining creative events in his life may be briefly epitomized as they are so well known. Early in 1892 (the 'Henry VIII.' year) his Gipsy Suite was produced at the Crystal Palace. The output of 1893 included incidental music to Mr. H. A. Jones's play of 'The Tempter' (Haymarket Theatre), and the second Symphony in A minor, composed for the Norwich Festival. The latter work was soon afterwards played at the Crystal Palace, when, at the request of Sir August Manns, the composer conducted the entire concert. Another Lyceum commission brought forth the 'Romeo and Juliet' music, followed by the Orchestral Suite in D minor, composed for the Leeds Festival, both in the year 1895. Concerning examine the original score, very much in the nature of a skeleton, of this posthumous and unfinished work by Sullivan. Only the first two numbers were completed by him; for the rest he left nothing but melodies without basses—not to mention thirteen numbers absolutely untouched. Therefore Mr. German had the slenderest of material to go upon in completing the work. How reverently he discharged the duties laid upon him is a matter of common knowledge. In the same year that 'The Emerald Isle' was produced (Savoy Theatre, 1901), 'The Rival Poets'—a re-arranged and enlarged edition of 'The Two Poets' of the Academy days—was performed at St. George's Hall, under Mr. Randegger's enthusiastic direction.

'Merrie England'—libretto by Captain Basil Hood, produced at the Savoy Theatre, April 2, 1902—is an opera for which Mr. German has a peculiar affection. In this connection he shows, with natural satisfaction, a letter from his friend Mr. Hamish MacCunn, written from Edinburgh, where, under his conductorship, the Savoy company had performed the work to crowded audiences.

FACSIMILE OF A FAMILIAR STRAIN IN THE SHEPHERDS' DANCE, 'HENRY VIII.' MUSIC.

the latter work, Sir Charles Stanford, after hearing it under Sir A. C. Mackenzie at the Philharmonic, wrote to the composer: 'Your Suite is delightful; my College children would play it beautifully'—and they did, Sir Hubert Parry conducting it in the absence through illness of Sir Charles Stanford. Moreover, the incident was a graceful act on the part of the Royal College of Music towards a former student of the older Institution in Tenterden Street. Omitting operas for the present, the succeeding works during the next few years—and to the present time, in fact—consist of incidental music to 'As you like it' (St. James's Theatre, 1896); English Fantasia, Philharmonic Society, and Symphonic Poem 'Hamlet,' Birmingham Festival, both in 1897; 'Much Ado about Nothing' (St. James's Theatre, 1898); 'The Seasons,' Symphonic Suite, commissioned for the Norwich Festival of 1899; 'Nell Gwyn' music (Prince of Wales's Theatre, 1900); and 'A Rhapsody on March Themes,' played at the Norwich Festival of 1902.

Concerning the Savoy operas, the first to be mentioned is 'The Emerald Isle,' most of it planned and sketched by Sir Arthur Sullivan, but completed by Mr. German. It is interesting to

In the language of the vernacular, Mr. MacCunn said, 'Whether it be haggis or harmony, "mountain dew" or melody, the land-o'-cakes kens fine when it meets with a good thing. Hoch aye!' After Scotland has thus spoken of 'Merrie England' need anything more be said? 'A Princess of Kensington' (the libretto also by Captain Basil Hood), produced at the Savoy Theatre in January last, completes Mr. German's present contributions to the operatic stage.

Mr. Edward German, it need scarcely be said, takes his art seriously, though the character of some of his music might convey a different impression. The success of his orchestration is not a little due to the practical knowledge he acquired during many years' experience as a violinist in various orchestras. The vein of melody that he has struck seems to be in no danger of being exhausted, and the rhythmic nature of his music reflects his vigorous personality. He is now at work on a new light opera and an orchestral work, the latter for this year's Cardiff Festival. His hobbies are fishing and photography; applying these diversions to his music, we may say that he has adopted a line of his own, with results that are by no means of a negative nature.

It may be convenient for reference if we give a list of Mr. Edward German's published compositions under their respective heads :—

MUSIC FOR THE PEOPLE.

The philanthropic application of music to brighten dreary lives and uplift weary souls, is one that calls for sympathy, encouragement and publicity. A case in point is the well-known Oxford House Settlement at Bethnal Green. In the winter of 1898, Mr. A. P. Charles, an enthusiastic worker in that good cause, started the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association. In 1899 a choir was formed of working folk living in the neighbourhood and continues to flourish. Each member pays a subscription of sixpence a quarter, and it is satisfactory to learn that they are very keen in their attendance at the weekly rehearsals—in fact, they love music. The capacity of these East-end singers may be estimated when we say that they have performed during the last four years 'The Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Creation,' 'Hymn of Praise,' 'Golden Legend,' 'Hiawatha,' and 'Acis and Galatea,' in addition to 'Faust' (Gounod) and 'Carmen' in concert form. These works are given complete, the band consisting of about two-thirds amateur and one-third professional players. Orchestral concerts are also given. These elevating music-makings are held in Excelsior Hall—an excellent name, by-the-way—at which charges of admission are 2d., 3d., 6d. and 1s.; but two-thirds of the accommodation is rightly appropriated to the cheapest parts of the building. The difference between the cost of the performances and the receipts at the same is met by personal subscriptions of sympathisers with the movement. So much for the organization, what of the results?

Some notes on a pilgrimage made to Excelsior Hall, Bethnal Green, on a soaking wet Saturday night last month, may answer this question. On that occasion Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed, under the able direction of the Society's conductor, Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, with a capital quartet of soloists—Miss Fanny Chetham, Miss Maggie Stirling, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Robert Grier. The choir sang with admirable point and verve, the choruses being rendered by those enthusiastic singers as if their hearts, as certainly their voices, were in the music. It was an interesting sight, that large audience of work-a-day people listening with keen enjoyment to the strains of Mendelssohn's music. And how attentively they listened (many of the men smoking their pipes), and how vigorously they applauded! Strange as it may seem, those good folk of Bethnal Green were so impressed with 'Woe unto them,' well sung by Miss Maggie Stirling, that they insisted upon its repetition—and this an air in a minor key, and not one that might be considered a 'popular' song! This incident in itself speaks volumes for the appreciative taste of that Saturday night audience, who in behaviour, enthusiasm, and genuine appreciation of good music might put to shame many a brilliantly-dressed gathering at the West-end of the town.

Mr. A. P. Charles (Excelsior Hall, Bethnal Green, E.) asks us to state that he would gladly welcome some tenors in the chorus, and that he has room in the band for a few more 'really good amateurs,' especially violoncellos and a clarinet. The musical critics of the London newspapers—whose beat extends from Queen's Hall to St. James's Hall, with a reluctant visit to Kensington now and then—may have an opportunity of making known this good work when the Oxford House Musical and Dramatic Association gives a concert at St. James's Hall on May 16, which the Princess of Wales hopes to grace with her presence. On this occasion doubtless many will be glad to show their appreciation of and sympathy with so commendable a cause.

This propaganda of music in other districts of the Metropolis finds a good outlet in similar work done at the Bermondsey Settlement on the other side of Old Father Thames. Here Mr. John E. Borland, to whose excellent work we have previously referred, has a first-rate choir and orchestra. It was a red-letter day in the lives of those musical Bermondseyonians when Sir Hubert Parry went down there to conduct his 'War and Peace.' How he enjoyed the heartiness and zeal with which his music was interpreted! And did not the eagerly attentive audience encore Wagner's 'Walkurenritt'? Nor is this kind of thing confined to London. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, the vigorous young organist of York Minster, writes us in this glowing strain: 'I think at last we have turned the corner! At my York Symphony concert last Thursday (November 26) we had a very large audience, when Mr. Edward German conducted some of his things. You will be glad to hear that we sold 1,055 penny tickets! We were also well backed up in the front seats.' Yes, we are glad to hear it; and we trust that Bethnal Green, Bermondsey, and York may have many imitators in such well-directed efforts towards creating and spreading a love for good music in the hearts of the people.

ROBERT BURNS.

'A List of Works which have been Performed by the Royal Choral Society' is the title of a document which has been compiled and issued by the secretary of that Society, Mr. John Hedley. This long list gives the very respectable total of seventy-five oratorios, cantatas, &c., which have been given at Kensington under the auspices of the Society. We find that Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion has been given fourteen times and the Choral Symphony three times, although the locale of the concerts is not an ideal place for the interpretation of the latter work. In order to show that native productiveness is not neglected by the Society, Mr. Hedley divides his catalogue into two portions: (1) British, and (2) Foreign composers. This classification shows that out of the seventy-five works here scheduled, no fewer than thirty are British products. These are facts that cannot be refuted; and, while they speak for themselves, they should prove interesting and instructive to those who are prone to be hasty in their conclusions. We understand that the Society will perform 'The Apostles' on April 21, at the last concert of the season. The cast will consist of Miss Susan Strong, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black. Dr. Elgar will conduct this London performance of his oratorio.

While we in London are often familiar with the sight of empty benches in our concert-rooms, even when men like Richard Strauss and Felix Weingartner are (or ought to be) the attraction, we are told that in far away New Zealand a very different state of things prevails. In this connection the attention of our readers may be called to a communication from our Special Correspondent in New Zealand (p. 47), which we feel sure will be read with unusual interest. In a covering letter, our representative in this music-loving Colony further writes as follows in reference to the recent Musical Festival at Wellington:—

We turned away hundreds of pounds, as the police ordered us to close the doors when the people were standing four deep everywhere. It was a great sight. The Opera House was jammed to the doors every night, and it holds 1,700 people thus packed. The ticket-takers, with an experience of fourteen years, tell me that they have never known anything like the rush on any other occasion. At the Pit and Family Circle entrances people literally fought for tickets, and one of our Committee had his dress-coat torn from his back in trying to stem the rush! Of course our expenses were extremely heavy—about £770, but we took just over £1,000 clear in the six nights.

English visitors would not believe it possible we could do so well as we did musically; but we had a good orchestra and a splendid chorus, while the soloists were excellent. No doubt our great success financially was due in a large measure to the magnificent singing of Mr. Hamilton Hodges, a coloured gentleman with Indian blood in his veins. He claims direct descent from Hiawatha on his mother's side.

I feel sure Mr. Hodges would create a great sensation in London if he could be plumped down there.

We have already been asked to give a bigger Festival next year to signalize the opening of the new Town Hall in connection with a large Industrial Exhibition. We are forming into a big Musical Union, and it is proposed to do 'Israel in Egypt,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' 'The Spectre's Bride,' 'Hiawatha' (complete), and 'Elijah' as a nucleus, in addition to one really good novelty.

Altogether it was a great week. After the first night every seat for every performance was booked in advance.

Advanced New Zealand!

Mr. Wilfred Bendall writes us from Nice, under date of December 17, 1903:—

Last evening I was present at a soirée probably unique in musical annals. Sixty years ago Monsieur Antonio Gautier, with his brother, who still plays the violin, started meetings for the performance of string quartets in his house, situated in the old Italian quarter of the town. These meetings have been continued every winter without cessation up to the present time. Last night he gave a grand soirée to celebrate the opening of the sixtieth season.

M. Alfred d'Ambrosio (who is already well known in London by his charming violin pieces) played his new Violin Concerto, accompanied by pianoforte and quatuor. The programme also included Svendsen's octetto, as well as several small pieces by d'Ambrosio. All musical Nice was present.

M. Gautier has an immense library of string music as well as a most remarkable collection of stringed instruments of all sorts and periods.

M. Gautier rigorously excludes the local press from his musical meetings, but I thought a notice in THE MUSICAL TIMES would be of interest to your readers—as the circumstances seem to me without parallel—and it might be pleasing to him.

An interesting event is with pleasure recorded in connection with the Middlesbrough Musical Union and its honorary and enthusiastic conductor. On the 7th ult. Mr. Nicholas Kilburn was presented with two pictures and upwards of one hundred volumes of music,—complete editions of Mozart and Schubert and full scores of Wagner—in addition to a gold watch and a diamond ring to Mrs. Kilburn. The Nibelungen ring was given to Mr. Kilburn. As Mr. Kilburn lives at Bishop Auckland, he has travelled some 25,000 miles during the twenty-one years he has so ably discharged the duties of the Middlesbrough conductorship—moreover, he has only missed his weekly visit (during the season) on three occasions! No wonder that the Union delighted to honour their esteemed chief. Congratulations to him and to them.

The following letter has been addressed to Dr. Cowen, conductor of the Scottish Orchestra, by Dr. Richard Strauss, who last month conducted that excellent organization in Scotland:—

Dear Dr. Cowen,—Your orchestra has afforded me such delight that I cannot lose the opportunity of telling you about it. Heartiest thanks for the noble and brotherly way in which you have made such splendid preparation for my concerts. I hope to have the opportunity some day of reciprocating your great kindness. The rendering of the orchestra was of the very first rank, and did the highest possible honour to the conductor of this distinguished body. Once more thanking you most warmly, and with the kindest regards,—I am, yours sincerely,

DR. RICHARD STRAUSS.

Praise most worthily bestowed.

In an interesting article in Le Courrier Musical, November 15, 1903, entitled 'De quelques améliorations souhaitables pour le développement de l'art musical en France,' signed M.-D. Calvocoressi, occurs the following:—

When in Spain three years ago, I heard M. Pedrell's 'Los Pireneos,' a manifestation of national art calculated to arouse the attention of musicians, and yet only brief mention was made of it in a few French papers. The same silence prevails with regard to the Russian school. Only a few articles have been written about the 'Feuersnot' of Strauss. There is much talk in England about Edward Elgar; do we know anything at all about him here? And yet news of this kind would be interesting if only as documentary evidence, so as to know once for all what to think of such matters. I am quite sure if I tried to find out what is known in England or in Germany about French or Russian masters, I should learn about as much. But, after all, the fault of others, to quote Sancho-Pança, is no excuse; it ought, on the contrary, to prompt us to better doing.

No doubt there are many matters in our musical life open to improvement, but M. Calvocoressi evidently does not know that Mr. Henry J. Wood has made us very much acquainted with Russian music; neither are French modern composers entirely unknown to us.

The original manuscript of Bach's first Sonata for violin solo is in the Royal Library at Berlin. It bears the superscription Violino solo senza Cembalo, also the following:—

This excellent work in Joh. Seb. Bach's own handwriting, I found at St. Petersburg in 1814, among old papers that had belonged to the pianist Palschau, and which were destined to be sent to wrap up butter. Georg Palschau.

CATHEDRAL MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The members of the chorus are requested to bring with them copies of Hamlet's 'Samson' to the practice at the Choristers' School next Tuesday, December 8, at 8.15 p.m.

A correspondent, in sending us the above cutting from a newspaper published in an English city, asks us if we can tell him where he can procure a copy of 'Hamlet's Samson.' We are very sorry, but we have not the ghost of an idea.

A London newspaper, in the course of a dramatic criticism, says: 'Mr. ——— has recently developed a passion for the flute, on which he accompanies himself in a very touching little ditty.' A correspondent asks: 'How can a man, though an actor, play the flute and sing at the same time? Orpheus with his lute would seem to be nothing compared with Mr. ——— with his flute!'

A reputed saying of Rubinstein's:—'X plays Beethoven's Sonatas with velocity, and Czerny's Studies with feeling.'

As we go to press, we have received, by the courtesy of Messrs. Paling, of Sydney, N.S.W., the following interesting cablegram:—

'First Australian performance "Gerontius" great success; congratulations from all concerned. Delay, conductor.'

THE STAINER MEMORIAL IN ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The spirit of John Stainer seemed to hover round the little company gathered together in St. Paul's Cathedral on the morning of the 16th of last month. The occasion, an intensely interesting one, was the unveiling and dedication of a memorial to a former Chief-Musician of the great Cathedral. This chaste memorial, placed on the Eastern wall of the aisle of the North Transept, is from the studio of Mr. Henry A. Pegram, who has courteously acceded to our request for a description of his beautiful conception. Mr. Pegram writes:—

'I with pleasure send a short description of the Stainer Memorial. When I received the commission, I asked Sir George Martin to give me the titles of some of Stainer's finest anthems. He replied that he thought "I saw the Lord" was the finest. I therefore attempted to incorporate in my design a suggestion of this anthem. The result is—as indeed from the nature of the theme it must be—inadequate. Briefly stated, the monument may be described as follows: The upper part of the Panel contains the subject of Stainer's anthem "I saw the Lord." The Prophet Isaiah, with outstretched arms, kneels near an altar, from the smoke of which arises the vision—Christ enthroned and encircled by Seraphim. In the base of the Panel is the portrait of Sir John Stainer in profile, surrounded by a laurel wreath, and underneath is inscribed: "To the Memory of Sir John Stainer, Art. Mag., Mus. Doc., Organist of this Cathedral 1872-1888." The monument is in low relief, and of that kind of Sicilian marble known as "Bianco Chiaro."

The Dedication Service (at 11 a.m.) was as simple as it was appropriate. The Cathedral clergy and choir, with the Dean at their head, made their way to the site of the Memorial, where had already assembled Lady Stainer and her sons, in addition to old friends and fellow-workers of genial, warm-hearted Stainer. The Memorial was unveiled, Psalm 24 sung, and then Canon Scott Holland—an old friend and valued colleague of Sir John in his cathedral work—delivered an address in perfect harmony with the surroundings; indeed, nothing could have been in better taste or more sincere than his appreciative words—they came from the heart and they went to the heart. Canon Scott Holland has kindly supplied us with the following authentic version of his 'appreciation':—

'We are met together to secure that the name of John Stainer shall never be forgotten by the generations to come in the Cathedral which he loved so dearly and served so well. Those who in after years pass to and fro will at least stop to read the record on this beautiful marble tablet of one who did in his own day the work that he was called upon to do. It is for them we place it here, for we ourselves need no such reminder. The very sound of his name is enough for us, and here in St. Paul's it is always spoken with a touch of peculiar emotion and affection. There is a word often used on epitaphs in a conventional sense which speaks of a "fragrant" memory—but I know no word which could more fitly express our recollections of John Stainer. In every remembrance of his activities, in every memory of his look, or voice, or gesture, there is fragrance, the fragrance which comes from the magic of personal charm.

'We knew his gifts, and admired them as the world did—his fertility of resource, his rich equipment, his ready and wide expert knowledge, his rapid workmanship, his unerring insight, his mastery over all the tools and implements of his craft, and the incomparable brilliancy of his execution. But still, through all the gifts, what we felt was the charm of a personality so joyous and free, so fine-tempered and sympathetic, so gracious and winning. It was the man that we loved, and he was one of the most lovable men on earth.

‘He was a boy here in this Cathedral, so that we may claim some share in the honour of producing him, and he had a great master at the organ. But they were weird, crabbed days, when the boys could roll their pennies in a race from the Dome to the West door, down the gaunt, solitary Nave, without fear of obstruction. It was then that he began the friendship with Arthur Sullivan, a boy at the Chapel Royal, a friendship that lasted through life, and is sealed by the close neighbourhood of the two tablets which now recall their names in St. Paul's.

THE JOHN STAINER MEMORIAL

‘He was hardly more than a boy when, with his curly head, he was given one of the supreme posts of his art in Magdalen College Chapel, and still as I recall in my Oxford days the music that haunted that most perfect and exquisite shrine under his inspiration, “fragrance” and “magic” are the words that again bring back to me the tone of that wonderful music. He was brought up to this Cathedral at the moment of its great revolution. In two short years an entirely new Chapter came into existence, which was determined to see whether the full capacities of the building could not be brought into the service of a splendid worship. The music had hitherto been a tiny trickle of sound tinkling along in a dim corner to the favoured few. It was to become a tidal flood, possessing and pervading and ensouling the entire fabric with the spirit of praise and thanksgiving. The old school of music could not conceive the task, and it withdrew in dignity and honour in the person of one who will always be revered in St. Paul's—Sir John Goss. Stainer was given a free hand to do all he could by a Chapter that entirely trusted him. The wonderful thing is the pace at which he accomplished his work. By help of his personal fascination and flawless temper he had brought it all about within a year. He started the Choir School himself; the Choral Eucharist filled the Dome; the voluntary choir for the great evening service was drawn together by personal attachment to him; and within hardly more than a year he had already attempted the great “Passion” music of Bach.

‘For all this we owe him a debt that it is impossible to exaggerate; and above all for the evidence that was felt from end to end of the music of its control by a man who was himself loyal to the faith, and inside the secret of worship. We who were there to pray and give thanks never found the music fail to respond instinctively to our demands; nor did he ever suffer the music to wander outside its dedicated function of worship, which is in this place at once its limitation, but also its glory. Those well know what I mean who remember, for instance, the way in which Sunday after Sunday, at the quiet moment when communicants were passing to the altar, he would improvise on the theme of his own beautiful hymn “Author of life Divine.” It is this spirit which has given such influence to his “Sevenfold Amen.” I remember looking at Stainer's face as it was sung at the funeral of Mr. Gladstone when all England was gathered in Westminster Abbey, and I wondered whether he was thinking that a man has not lived in vain who has lodged something of his own within a great national tradition, so that, for generation after generation, those few bars of music will be heard wherever England is gathered for some historic and immemorial moment. He put this tone and temper into our music in this Cathedral, and to him we owe that mystical movement which sways our music at St. Paul's as with the beat and pulse of a living thing, so that with a glamour of its own it floats and haunts and envelopes. It is ours to see that this tradition of his shall never fail. This shall be his real monument.

‘Meanwhile we place this marble panel close by the gates where he so often passed. There is something pathetic always in the death of a great executant, so much perishes with him and is gone for ever.

Well, it is gone at last the palace of music I reared, Gone! and the good tears start.

Therefore to whom do we turn but to Thee,
the ineffable Name!

Builder and Maker, Thou, of houses not made with hands.

‘We remember him before God and we send our prayers after him into the silence, giving thanks to God for one who was His chief instrument in enabling this Cathedral to become a House of Prayer for all people—for one who made its worship no longer a hidden treasure for the elect, but poured it out as an unstinted boon for all and any who, out of this sad city, might enter in at the doors to feel after a God Whom they desired to know—to seek, and to listen, and to adore.'

Stainer's unaccompanied setting of 'God so loved the world' was then most tenderly sung, just as he would wish it to be sung, by the Cathedral Choir, under the direction—we may say the affectionate direction—of Sir George Martin, Stainer's intimate friend, pupil, colleague, and worthy successor at St. Paul's. After prayers had been read by the venerable Dean and Canon Scott Holland, the memorable little service terminated with the Sevenfold Amen; and as the simple strains floated through the vast sanctuary, they touched with pure emotion the heart-strings of those who had known and loved the composer of those thrilling harmonies.

As one by one the company reluctantly left the spot so closely associated with him who had been deservedly honoured, the noon-day sunshine—which almost turned December into June—streamed into the Cathedral, thus recalling the sunny nature and the warmth of affection so truly characteristic of John Stainer.

HERBERT SPENCER.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS BY SIR HUBERT PARRY.

The death of Herbert Spencer—which took place at Brighton on the 8th ult., in his eighty-fourth year—was an event of special interest to musicians, as he, the greatest English philosopher of the 19th century, took a very keen interest in the art of music. One of his essays, written nearly fifty years ago, treated of 'The Origin and Function of Music,' and he recently returned to the theme in his 'Facts and Comments,' an interesting book noticed in these columns in June, 1902 (p. 383). There is no need to recapitulate Herbert Spencer's 'views' on music, but it may be said that he had quite outlived all modern developments in the art.

Knowing that Sir Hubert Parry had experienced pleasant intercourse with the great thinker, we asked him to jot down some of his recollections of Herbert Spencer for THE MUSICAL TIMES. Sir Hubert very kindly responded to this request in the following words:—

'My recollections of talks with Mr. Spencer are very scrappy and uncertain, and too many of the things I remember most vividly were naturally such as I profoundly disagreed with. They usually had nothing to do with music. One which I remember most definitely was about football, which he at the time condemned very decisively as a brutal and demoralizing game. I could not help chaffing him a little about it, as he looked so supremely unlikely to have any practical experience. He took it quite well, but just persisted in reiterating his objection and suggestions. One of the latter was that anyone who shinned anyone on the opposite side should be fined half-a-crown!

'Another talk was about theatres (some thirty years ago); and when I expressed surprise at his appearing to be so well up in what was going on (some of which was trivial rubbish), Mr. Spencer said: "I cultivate amusements on principle."

'Another time we were talking about contemporary Art, and, after pouring a good deal of scorn upon the most prominent painters of the day, he ended solemnly with the remark that "Art had a great future before it, in the line of making machinery beautiful—that there was so much room for application of beauty of design and detail in the making of the cylinders of engines, and piston-rods and cranks and driving wheels."

'About music he once informed me, as a thing I ought to know, that the art was passing into such a state of extravagant complexity that it was a physical impossibility for the ear to disintegrate the confused mass of sound. I argued that a first-rate conductor like Richter, for instance, could hear every single part in the most complex piece of orchestration, and even if one little hautboy played a wrong note he could pick it out, and that if he could not he would not be worth his place. But the philosopher merely repeated that it was purely a scientific question, and that it could be demonstrated that the human ear could not identify the details or unravel the complications of more than a certain number of sounds at a time, as the apparatus was not provided for it. I merely answered that his theory was contrary to fact and experience, and we both remained where we were.

'I have not time to enter into the big question of evolution. Whatever his judgment was on matters of detail, the general exposition of his principles of evolution and psychology and so forth have had an effect on the interpretation of artistic developments which is of supreme importance.'

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE AUSTRIA.

The anthem which Mr. Alfred Hollins has specially composed for the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES concludes with a verse of the hymn 'Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him.' An opportunity is therefore afforded of giving a brief history of the hymn and its associated tune, composed by Haydn. The authorship of the hymn—really a versification of Psalm 148—is unknown, although some hymnals assign it erroneously to the Rev. John Kemphorne. It first appeared in an addenda of five hymns printed on a four-page tract and pasted into the hymnal in use at the Foundling Hospital a hundred years ago (Psalms, Hymns, and Anthems of the Foundling Hospital). The sheet is headed:—

Hymns of Praise. For Foundling Apprentices Attending Divine Service to return Thanks.

No. 4 of this set of five hymns is 'Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him. Music by Haydn.' It is headed 'Hymn from Psalm cxlviii: Haydn,' and is printed in four stanzas. As the Rev. Dr. Julian says in his invaluable 'Dictionary of Hymnology' (from which the above information is obtained): 'The use of this hymn in all English-speaking countries . . . is very extensive.' It is curious that a hymn which has found a place in nearly all hymnals, irrespective of denominational differences, should have come into existence in this anonymous and obscure manner.

The hymn has always been associated with Haydn's Hymn to the Emperor, or the Austrian National Hymn. During Haydn's two visits to England (1791 and 1794) he was much struck with our National Anthem, let us hope with the music rather than the words. The opportunity for him to immortalize his name in a national strain came in the year 1797. Haydn's friend, Freiherr van Swieten, suggested the idea to the Prime Minister, Graf von Saurau, who commissioned the poet Lorenz Leopold Haschka to write the words, 'and,' he records, 'I applied to our immortal countryman Haydn to set them to music, for I considered him alone capable of writing anything approaching in merit to the English "God save the King."'

It is interesting that Haydn found the opening strain of his tune in a Croatian folk-song. Here it is:—

The remainder of Haydn's theme is original, but he did not get it all at once. His original sketch is in the following form—and ultimately produced a perfect thing.

He then altered the section to in this manner—

The air was sung for the first time (and with orchestral accompaniment) in the National Theatre, Vienna, and in many provincial theatres in Austria on the Emperor's birthday, February 12, 1797. The Emperor, himself present at the National Theatre in Vienna on that occasion, was greatly moved by the simple strains of Haydn's noble music. He sent, through Count Saurau, his portrait enclosed in a gold box to the composer, who in acknowledging it said:—

Your Excellency,

Such a surprise and such a mark of favour, especially as regards the portrait of my beloved monarch, I never before received in acknowledgment of my poor talents. I thank your Excellency from my heart, and am always respectfully at your command.

I am, with deep respect, your Excellency's obedient humble servant,

JOSEPH HAYDN.

The music, first published by Artaria (Vienna) in 1797, soon found its way to England, where Haydn had several personal friends. Dr. Burney seems to have been the first to adapt the melody to English words in his arrangement for three voices (two sopranos and bass) and chorus, and published in London in or about 1800, and entitled 'Hymn for the Emperor, translated by Dr. Burney: composed by Dr. Haydn.' The first stanza is sufficient to prove that Dr. Burney was a better historian of music than a poet:—

God preserve the Emp'ror FRANCIS,
Sov'reign ever good and great;
Save, O save him from mischances
In Prosperity and State!
May his Laurels ever blooming
Be by Patriot Virtue fed;
May his worth the world illumine
And bring back the Sheep misled!

(Chorus). God preserve, &c.

The first to introduce the melody into England as a hymn-tune appears to have been Dr. Edward Miller, the composer of the tune 'Rockingham.' It appeared in his second collection of Psalmody, entitled—

Dr. Watts's Psalms and Hymns, set to new music, consisting of upwards of fifty original melodies, or tunes, in three or four parts, composed by EDWARD MILLER, MUS. DOC. [? 1802].

It is there named 'Haydn,' and headed 'The celebrated Hymn, by Haydn, composed for the Emperor Francis of Germany [!] adapted to English words.' The words are those of Charles Wesley's hymn, beginning 'Jesus, soft, harmonious name,' but as showing how little the matter of phrasing and the co-ordination of musical and verbal accent prevailed a century ago, this line of the tune may serve as a specimen—

The tune appeared in the Foundling Collection published in the year 1809, a copy of which has been kindly lent us by Dr. Davan Wetton, the present organist. This was edited by William Russell, then organist, who furnished an interlude, after the custom of the time, in this form—

Various names have been bestowed upon the tune by different editors, e.g., Haydn, Austria, Vienna and Cheadle, the last by Webbe in his collection, though it is difficult to understand the connection between the Austrian National Hymn and the Lancashire town. Confusion worse confounded is often caused by the absurd vagaries of editors in the arbitrary re-naming of tunes.

The Emperor's Hymn, composed at the age of sixty-five, is a strain of which Haydn was very fond—and no wonder. He afterwards employed it as the theme for the slow movement in the Quartet in C (Op. 76, No. 5), where it appears with a set of masterly variations. The late Dr. E. T. Chipp wrote a fine organ fantasia, with variations, on the tune.

Pohl tells us that the 'Hymn to the Emperor' was Haydn's 'favourite work, and towards the close of his life he often consoled himself by playing it with great expression.' As he lay on his death-bed, he called his servants round him for the last time, and having been carried to the pianoforte, he solemnly played the tune three times in succession. This was on May 26, 1809. Five days later his genial spirit took its flight. Could he have had a more beautiful Nunc dimittis?

AN OLD ANTHEM BOOK.

The Rev. F. M. Millard, Otham Parsonage, Maidstone, writes as follows:—

I have in this house a manuscript book of anthems, formerly belonging to my grandfather, the Rev. Charles Millard, Precentor of Norwich Cathedral about the end of the 18th century. Three of the twelve anthems in the book appear to be but little known; and one at least appears to be of considerable interest. The contents of the book are given as follow:—

Lord, remember David	Mr. Hawkins
Arise, O Lord	Mr. Hawkins
In Jewry is God known	Norris
The Lord is King	Crofts [sic]
My song shall be alway	Purcell
I was glad	Purcell
Be merciful unto me	Purcell
Awake, put on thy strength	Wise
O Lord my God	Humphry [sic]
I am well pleased	Aldrich
Open me the gates	Wise
O give thanks	Purcell

The words of the fourth anthem, 'The Lord is King,' described in the book as 'sett by Mr. Crofts,' are from the 97th (not the 99th) Psalm. It begins with a treble solo in common time, in the key of D major. Next follow solo and chorus in $\frac{3}{4}$ time, 'Clouds and darkness are round about Him,' also in D major. This is followed by a solo in D minor, 'There shall go a fire before Him,' followed by chorus in D major, 'The heavens have declared His righteousness, &c. Hallelujah.'

I may say that I have been in correspondence with the Precentors of three Cathedrals, and with one College organist, and this anthem seems unknown to any of them. The anthems by 'Mr. Hawkins' seem also little known; they are of simpler character, each consisting of a long solo and short chorus, in one case (as I read it) in G minor, in the other in D major. I should be glad to know if you would wish to hear more of the Anthem by (as it is presumed) Wm. Croft.

CANON DONALDSON.

Truro Cathedral has lost a good friend and invaluable Precentor in the death of the Rev. Canon Augustine Blair Donaldson, who died at Truro on the 10th ult., aged sixty-two. He was appointed Canon Residentiary and Precentor in 1885, two years prior to the consecration of the Cathedral. During the intervening eighteen years Canon Donaldson was actively associated with the building of the Cathedral. He took a prominent part in planning and carrying out the admirable arrangements connected with the dedication of the Nave on July 15 last, an important event that was specially reported in these columns. Two processional hymns for choral festivals came from his pen, and he took an active part in the formation of the Diocesan Choral Union. As the author of 'The Bishopric of Truro,' and a popular and excellent Guide to Truro Cathedral, his name is well known. He was a working vice-president of the Truro Philharmonic Society. In this, and in many other interests connected with Truro and its neighbourhood, Canon Donaldson will be greatly missed.

ORGAN RECITALS.

At the beginning of another year it may be desirable to re-state the method on which our monthly summary of organ recitals is compiled. The very large number of programmes regularly received are carefully examined in detail month by month from two points of view—educational and general interest. As a rule we have not space to mention more than one piece in each programme; but it not infrequently happens—this month for example—that several are of such a 'vain repetition' nature as not to call for mention. The organ fugues of Bach, which every organist plays, may be taken for granted. Furthermore, no arrangements will find a place in this monthly list; only music actually written for the organ. We shall always be glad to receive and notify organist and choirmaster appointments.

Dr. A. L. Peace, Ulster Hall, Belfast. (Re-opening of the organ)—Introduction and air with variations on 'The Harmonious Blacksmith,' E. T. Chipp (a former organist of the Hall).

Obituary.

MR. ROBERT ROY PATERSON.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Robert Roy Paterson, senior partner of the well-known firm of Messrs. Paterson and Sons, of Edinburgh, which took place on the 3rd ult., at the age of seventy-three. A brilliantly successful business man, and also possessed of a large measure of musical scholarship, the late Mr. Paterson directed with marked ability the affairs of the firm originally founded in Edinburgh by his father in the year 1820. But he will best be remembered for his labours in the cause of music in Scotland. His business connections brought him into contact with all the great artists of his time; this intercourse with a man of his attractive, interesting personality and hospitable spirit, quickly changed from that of business into one of absolute friendship.

Robert Roy Paterson was born on July 16, 1830, at 12, Fetter Row, Edinburgh. The child of a musical family, his obvious musical taste was soon guided in a definite direction, and at the age of six he commenced the study of the violin, an instrument, however, which was very shortly afterwards abandoned for the flute. His master for the latter instrument, Theophile Bucher, was sometimes called 'the Paganini of the flute,' so great was his mastery of the instrument, and whose memory is perpetuated in the Bucher Music Scholarship of Edinburgh University. At the age of seventeen Mr. Paterson was sent to Leipzig, where he studied the pianoforte under Moscheles, and harmony with Otto Richter. At Leipzig, unfortunately, he was able to remain little more than a year, his never very robust health breaking down under the strain of severe study. The year spent in Leipzig proved to be one crowded with memorable experiences; to say nothing of the value of association with such men as Moscheles and Richter, it was Mendelssohn's last year of life. But what made the deepest impression upon him of all was Mendelssohn's funeral (on November 7, 1847) which, in company with other students, he was privileged to attend. With his fellow-students, also, he had previously looked upon the dead face of the master, and he was able to obtain possession of a lock of the dead composer's hair.

Returning from Germany in 1848, Mr. Paterson, after some time spent in the factories of Messrs. Collard and Messrs. Broadwood, entered his father's business. In 1859, Mr. Robert Paterson, senior, died, and the business fell to his two sons, Mr. John Walker Paterson, who assumed charge of the branch—now a large and flourishing business of itself—which had then only recently been started in Glasgow, while Mr. Robert Roy Paterson retained the direction of the parent establishment in Edinburgh. By degrees the influence of the firm made itself felt throughout Scotland, a branch establishment being opened in Perth in 1864, another in Ayr in 1868, one in Dundee in 1882, in Dumfries in 1886, Paisley in 1887, Kilmarnock in 1892, and later in Arbroath and in Greenock. Besides other minor agencies in Scotland, the firm has now also important interests in London, and in New York.

But the routine business of a pianoforte and music dealer, on no matter how large a scale, exercised only a portion of Mr. Paterson's energies. At the very outset of his business life he set himself the task of providing his native city with all that was best in music. Mr. Paterson's earlier efforts in this direction were undertaken in conjunction with the Edinburgh Musical Association, which, about forty years ago, used to give orchestral concerts with a band of forty, under local conductors, on Saturday afternoons during the winter. Mr. Paterson guaranteed the Association against loss, and the profits (if any!) were to be divided equally between the Association and himself. Charles Hallé and Arabella Goddard made their first appearances in Edinburgh at these concerts, and it speaks eloquently of those simpler days that Hallé's fee was £30—a sum which he was so unfortunate as to have stolen from him within a few hours of its receipt!

In later years there came the Edinburgh Classical Concerts, excellent performances of chamber music which are now of some historical interest, inasmuch as the then first violinist of the quartet is now principal of the Royal Academy (Sir Alexander Mackenzie), while the viola player is Reid Professor of Music in Edinburgh University (Professor Niecks).

Ten years ago the more extensive scheme of the Scottish Orchestra was set on foot, and for the concerts given by that splendid body of instrumentalists in Edinburgh and Dundee, Mr. Paterson at once became responsible. Of the Scottish Orchestra, under Dr. Cowen's skilful direction, it is unnecessary to speak, for is not the fame of its achievements known and read of all men? Mr. Paterson's concerts were the pet interest of his later life, and there was nothing in which he took greater pride than in their success.

A man of a wide outlook upon life, Mr. Paterson had other interests than his business and his concert-giving. He was a keen Volunteer officer in the early days of the movement. Much of his leisure was given to musical composition, in which he was particularly fortunate as a song-writer, many charming lyrics having been published under the pseudonym of 'Alfred Stella.' He was also a liberal and discriminating art patron. Never a robust man, Mr. Paterson led a life, apart from his musical activities, which was one of comparative retirement; but local music-lovers, and many a touring artist coming to Edinburgh, will miss the familiar tall figure with the silvery hair, the heavy brows, and the rather caustically humorous speech which merely veiled the deep-rooted kindness of a true-hearted man.

The death of Mr. JULIAN MARSHALL—which we briefly mentioned in our last issue (he died on November 21)—removed an accomplished amateur of music. He contributed to Grove's 'Dictionary' and to various musical periodicals, and was formerly Honorary Secretary to the Mendelssohn Scholarship Committee. His fine collection of engravings and book-plates he greatly prized—the last time we saw him he, with all the eagerness of a collector, was most anxious to secure the book-plate of Chilcot, of Bath! His splendid musical library—how sumptuously his books were bound!—was largely dispersed in 1884, the British Museum securing many of his greatest treasures. He was a great authority on lawn tennis. Mrs. Julian Marshall is well-known in musical circles as a composer and orchestral conductor of marked ability.

MR. CLIFFORD HARRISON, who died at Ore, on the 17th inst., will be well remembered as a refined reciter who charmed such competent critics as Robert Browning, Mr. Stopford Brooke, and Mr. Gladstone. The musical accompaniments composed by himself invested his recitals with a distinction quite unique. Mr. Harrison was a painter, in which connection Mr. Ruskin acknowledged that he had learnt from Harrison's work how much sunlight could be transferred to paper—truly a man of many parts.

AUGUST REISSMANN, who recently died, was a voluminous writer on music. He is best known in connection with Mendel's Konversations-Lexicon, to which he largely contributed, and of which, after Mendel's death in 1876, he edited the last five volumes of the work and the supplementary volume.

DR. JULIUS OTTO GRIMM, composer and conductor, and Professor of Music in the University of Münster, Westphalia, died there on the 7th ult., aged seventy-six. The intimate friend of Schumann, Brahms, and Dr. Joachim, Dr. Grimm's name is widely known as the composer of an effective Orchestral Suite in Canon form.

Reviews.

Lessons in Harmonics, for Violinists and other Musical Students, with notes on sound and resultants. Elementary explanations and experiments. By C. Egerton Lowe. (No. 62. Novello's Music Primer Series.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Violinists, and especially junior players, generally have misty notions as to the why and wherefore of harmonics. They know of course that by placing a finger lightly on certain parts or nodes of a string a sound of peculiar quality can be made, and that the resulting pitch follows some odd law not to be explained by the ordinary manner of fingering, but they are seldom aware of the underlying reasons for the phenomena of harmonics, and have little idea of the potentialities of a string in this direction, and instruction books rarely afford any intelligible information. Mr. Lowe's practical explanations and lucid directions for experiments (which can be conducted by persons unable to play an instrument) make the whole matter of harmonics not only clear, but exceedingly interesting. Although the lessons are primarily intended for players on stringed instruments of the violin family, they are applicable as demonstrations of curious acoustic laws to that even larger class of string players, the pianoforte students. Many of Mr. Lowe's experiments are for the pianoforte, and indeed some of the facts taught can only be clearly demonstrated on that instrument. Pianoforte teachers in search of a novel way of interesting their pupils in musical matters will find it worth their while to study this useful little book.

Thirty Years of Musical Life in London: 1870-1900. By Hermann Klein.

[William Heinemann.]

The author of this reminiscent volume began his journalistic life in London when he was a stripling of nineteen. He has recently changed the scene of his professional labours to New York, and the London curtain falls, so to speak, with the last page of his book. In thirty years' time Mr. Klein will doubtless write a second volume of entertaining 'recollections' in a retrospect of musical doings 'on the other side.' But to return to London. One has only to dip into these genially-written pages to discover the author's penchant for matters operatic. His friendship for the late Sir Augustus Harris and other celebrities of the lyric stage has enabled him to give much interesting behind-the-scenes information. The very large number of portraits of operatic artists contained in the book further indicates the trend of Mr. Klein's sympathies in music. He it was who advised Sir Augustus Harris to secure the services of the De Reszkes, with results that are well known. The many anecdotes scattered about these pages will doubtless be read with avidity. For instance, we are told how a certain Major Kitchener (since known to fame) helped Harris to rehearse a stage army at Drury Lane! But we must not pick out these Drury Lane and Covent Garden plums. The reader is referred to the book itself as one that will afford him a pleasant fire-side hour in the perusal thereof.

Chopin. By J. Cuthbert Hadden.

The Life of Hector Berlioz, as written by himself. Translated from the French by Katharine F. Boulton.

[J. M. Dent and Co.]

All biographers of Chopin coming after Professor Niecks set themselves an easy task. In this, the latest volume of 'The Master Musicians' series issued by Messrs. Dent, Mr. Hadden has discharged his biographical duty with tact and discretion, and the result is a useful 'life' of a very remarkable yet mysterious master-musician. With characteristic national pride Mr. Hadden has unearthed some fresh information concerning Chopin's visit to Scotland in the autumn of 1848. He gives a view of the house in which the composer resided while North of the Tweed. This, with other illustrations, adds to the attractiveness of a volume which is sure to find many readers.

The Berlioz centenary has doubtless caused the appearance of a new English version of the famous Memoires, which has just been added to 'The Temple Autobiographies' with which Messrs. Dent's name is associated. If the translation is not always above reproach, many will welcome the book in this convenient form and read it with pleasure and amusement.

Breathing for Voice Production. By H. H. Hulbert.

(Novello's Music Primers, No. 63.)

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

This book is a carefully thought-out contribution to the constantly increasing literature devoted to matters connected with voice production. Dr. Hulbert restricts his arguments and explanations to the one fundamental matter of healthy and natural breathing. Voice emission he leaves to others, and he thus avoids discussion of the action of the larynx and of the important subject of resonance. He advocates with much cogency what is termed the 'lateral-costal' method of breathing, and is opposed to the 'abdominal' breathing as taught by the late Lennox Browne and Emil Behnke and their numerous disciples. Dr. Hulbert maintains that the lateral-costal method is the method empirically adopted by the old Italian masters, and he gives a scientific explanation of its action. It will be seen, therefore, that he does not claim to have made a discovery, but to re-assert the principles of a plan that has recently been neglected in some quarters. Numerous exercises are prescribed, and there are photographic illustrations to assist the comprehension of the text. The whole work appeals not only to singers, but to all who study their health and physical development.

WELLINGTON (N.Z.) MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The third New Zealand Musical Festival, held (as were its predecessors) in the Capital of the Colony, was brought to a most successful issue during the last week of October. The primary object of its promoters was to commemorate fittingly the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Robert Parker's local musical work as organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, and as conductor of various musical societies during the greater part of that long period. A well-balanced and efficient chorus of 275 voices was enrolled several months before the date of the Festival, and the Orchestral Society, with some outside assistance, furnished a band of about sixty performers, including an excellent cor anglais, bass clarinet, and harp. The strings were admirably led by Miss Grace Kennedy and Miss Edith Whitelaw, late of the Royal College of Music. In the absence of a pipe organ, efficient help was given on two American organs by Mr. Lawrence Watkins and Dr. Kington Fyffe. Hitherto there has been no suitable building in Wellington for choral performances on a large scale, and the Opera House had to be adapted, as on previous occasions, for the purposes of the Festival. A fine Town Hall is now being erected, and it is hoped that the next choral gathering will at no distant date be held within its walls.

The Festival, in time-honoured fashion, opened with 'Elijah' and closed with the 'Messiah.' The choice of the opening work was appropriate to the great event, for Mr. Parker conducted its first performance in Wellington on the occasion of his first public appearance here in 1878. Mendelssohn's noble music was splendidly performed by principals, band and chorus, and roused the great audience to enthusiasm. The solos were taken by Miss Phoebe Parsons (soprano); Miss M. O'Donovan, late of Belfast; Mr. Henry Weir, of Sydney, N.S.W.; with Mr. Hamilton Hodges—now of Auckland, but formerly of Boston, U.S.A.—in the part of the Prophet. In the last-named artist the Festival Committee was singularly fortunate in securing an ideal representative of the part, for with the single exception of Mr. Santley, no one in New Zealand has come anywhere near the excellence of his rendering. The choruses were splendidly sung throughout, not merely with absolute accuracy, but with fine characterization and excellent enunciation, and the band was very satisfactory. Mr. A. Hamerton, principal violoncello, played the obbligato to 'It is enough' in admirable style, and concerted vocal numbers were well sung, leaving nothing to be desired in a memorable performance. Mr. R. Parker was warmly applauded on his appearance in the conductor's desk, and at the close of the oratorio he and all associated with him received a great demonstration from the enthusiastic audience.

The second programme, given on Saturday, October 24, was of a miscellaneous and very interesting character. It included Stanford's 'Last Post,' Elgar's epilogue from 'The Banner of St. George,' Parry's Suite for Strings in F, Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches in D major, and his two short pieces 'Chanson de Matin,' and 'Chanson de Nuit,' and a number of vocal solos by the principal artists of the Festival. Noteworthy among the latter were the Freebooter Songs by William Wallace, superbly sung by Mr. Hamilton Hodges. Stanford's graphic work, with its stirring bugle-call, was finely given and made a great impression; and Sir Hubert Parry's Suite, daintily played by the strings of the orchestra, was most warmly received. The success of the Elgar pieces was a foregone conclusion.

The concert on Monday, October 26, was eagerly anticipated, and the house was sold out several days before the performance, the attraction being Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' of which Parts I. and II. were given. The principals were Miss Amy Murphy, of Dunedin, Mr. James Searle, and Mr. Hamilton Hodges. An interesting feature of the evening was the splendid singing of Mr. Hodges, who, like the composer of 'Hiawatha,' is a coloured artist, and who sang the 'Farewell Minnehaha' in a manner which will long be remembered in Wellington. The conductor and the executive committee, feeling that, owing to certain shortcomings in the performance, full justice had not been done to Coleridge-Taylor's music, determined to repeat the two scenes on the following evening (Tuesday, October 27), when the wisdom of their determination was triumphantly justified by a splendid performance before an overflowing audience. Dr. Kington Fyffe sang on this occasion the beautiful tenor solo, 'Onaway, awake beloved' with much taste and charm of style, and the whole work was finely given, chorus and orchestra being alike excellent. The 'Hiawatha' music was preceded by J. F. Barnett's cantata 'The Ancient Mariner,' which received a spirited performance, and a hearty recognition by the audience. The solos and the very effective concerted pieces in this cantata were well sung by Miss Murphy, Mrs. Russell (of Christchurch), Mr. E. J. Hill, and Mr. F. V. Waters.

On Wednesday evening, October 28, Stanford's 'Last Post' was repeated by general desire, the principal work of the evening being Sullivan's 'The Golden Legend,' which had been given here at both the previous Festivals, and which on this occasion drew an enormous audience, hundreds being unable to gain admission to the Opera House. The chorus-singing was splendid, both in the devotional and the dramatic parts of the work, and the epilogue was given with great effect. Mr. Henry Weir, as Prince Henry, sang most artistically, and the versatile Mr. Hodges was thoroughly at home in the music of Lucifer. The cor anglais accompaniment to Elsie's solo 'My Redeemer and my Lord' was beautifully played by Mr. Bonnington, of Christchurch, and the bells made their wonted effect.

The Festival was brought to a triumphant close with a memorable performance of the oratorio of oratorios, Handel's immortal 'Messiah,' which drew the largest house of all, and which received a worthy rendering on the part of all concerned. Mrs. H. Revell and Miss O'Donovan were thoroughly competent in their respective parts, but the honours of the soloists were carried off by Mr. H. Weir and Mr. Hamilton Hodges, who both sang splendidly throughout. The chorus sang with unabated vigour down to the final chord of the noble Amen, and the orchestra was thoroughly efficient in Handel's simple strains.

Mr. Robert Parker, the able conductor, amidst a scene of great enthusiasm, was then presented with a handsome sterling silver tea and coffee service on behalf of the chorus and a few outside friends, and the Festival was brought to a close amid general acclamation.

If it has been a great undertaking for a city of 50,000 inhabitants in a remote colony, the Festival, in spite of drawbacks, has been well and worthily carried out by all concerned. Long will it be remembered by those who took part in it, as well as by the enthusiastic audiences who nightly enjoyed the music.

At a meeting of the Parents' Educational Union held on the 8th ult. at Lyndhurst Road Lecture Hall, Hampstead, Mr. Oscar Beringer gave an interesting address on 'Pianoforte teaching up to date.' The lecturer began by relating his experiences in the year 1859, when, as a boy, he first appeared at the Crystal Palace as a solo pianist, giving daily recitals at Sydenham. The musical taste of the period was described, and quaintly illustrated by a performance of 'The maiden's prayer' and 'Warblings at eve.' Mr. Beringer played a number of pianoforte pieces which in their day were exceedingly popular, making valuable observations on each, and concluding with a short composition by Richard Strauss. He then referred to some of the executive faults prevailing at the present time, such as excessive rubato and the cultivation of technique at the expense of musical feeling, resulting in the performance of works like Chopin's Valse in A flat at a ridiculous tempo. He also lamented the fact that we had to import so much of our pianoforte music from abroad, as our English composers appeared to pay little attention to pianoforte literature.

London Concerts, &c.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

It says much for the genuineness and musical value of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' that it stands the severe test of time so triumphantly as to become one of the few works that can attract a large audience to the Royal Albert Hall. Nothing succeeds like success, and the vivacious and expressive music seemed to have inspired the choristers to special effort on the 3rd ult. Certainly it was the best interpretation they have hitherto given of the choral numbers, and it was evident that Sir Frederick Bridge had taken great pains to secure so satisfactory a rendering. The soloists—Madame Sobrino, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies (who gave an exceptionally good reading of the part assigned to Hiawatha)—sang most effectively, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The operatic performances given by the students always possess exceptional interest, for the young people exhibit such earnestness and enthusiasm in their respective tasks that, apart from the talent displayed by them, their endeavours excite sympathy. The ability shown at the interpretation of Humperdinck's 'Hänsel und Gretel' on the 4th ult., at the Lyric Theatre, was remarkable. Miss Nannie Tout as Hänsel acted and sang with a vivacity and an assurance that testified to natural dramatic sense in an exceptional degree, and Miss Kate Anderson gave a clever and pleasing embodiment of Gretel, making the most of her voice in a manner that gave proof of excellent training. Miss Graham Ashton was a vivacious Witch, and the other characters were capably sustained by the Misses Clara Smith, Mildred Evans, and Clara Dow. The elaborate instrumental portion was wonderfully played by an orchestra of fifty-seven players, only eight of whom were not present or past students of the College. Sir Charles V. Stanford conducted, and he is to be congratulated on the success of an ambitious undertaking.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A memorable feature of the orchestral concert given by the students on the 18th ult. at Queen's Hall was a manuscript Pianoforte Concerto in E flat by Mr. York Bowen. Several works of exceptional merit by this gifted young composer have been recorded in these columns, and the promises made by Mr. Bowen in these compositions are being gradually fulfilled by succeeding productions. There are life, verve and excellent ideas in this new concerto. The solo part was well played by the composer, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie, by his skilful conducting, secured an admirable rendering of the orchestral portion. Miss Ivy L. St. Aubyn Angove, a very young violinist, created almost a sensation by the facility of her playing in Paganini's Concerto in D, and Miss Christian Carpenter showed admirable technique in Paderewski's Polish Fantasia for Pianoforte. Miss Ethel B. Power recited with dramatic perception Victor Hugo's 'Trumpeter's Betrothed,' to the incidental music by F. Thomé, and amongst other students who merit encouragement were Miss Dorothy Cooke-Smith, Miss Ida Kahn, and Mr. W. Daniel Richards.

THE LONDON WELSH MUSICAL SOCIETY—FIRST CONCERT.

The London Welsh Musical Society is the second new organization that has sought public favour this season in the musical centre of the Metropolis. We may at once say that at its first concert, which was given at the Queen's Hall on the 3rd ult., it fully demonstrated its right to a hearing and to a welcome. The programme commenced with a rather long sacred cantata, 'Psalms of Praise,' by D. Christmas Williams, which, whatever its contrapuntal and other merits and suitability for performance in other surroundings, was by no means the type of music to give much satisfaction to amateurs not specially interested in Welsh composers. The fact—the brutal fact it may be said—is that sacred music of the formal kind, with a colourless orchestral accompaniment, has now no raison d'être in the metropolitan concert room. Not that there was no trace of modern feeling in Mr. Williams's industrious work. A scena, 'Why art thou cast down?' admirably sung by Miss Gertrude Hughes, showed real capacity for the expression of feeling and a power of creating climax, notwithstanding its length and the monotony of the accompaniment. A fully interesting feature of the programme was the first performance in London of the Symphonic Suite 'The Seasons,' under the baton of the composer, Mr. Edward German. This important orchestral work was produced at Norwich in 1899, when its merits were fully recognized. We have now simply to record the great popular success of the present performance, and to express the opinion that the Suite is one of the best and probably the best orchestral piece Mr. German has so far composed. The last item in the programme was Goring Thomas's beautiful if somewhat loosely knit cantata 'The Swan and the Skylark.' The performance was described as being the first public one given in London; but this is incorrect, inasmuch as the work was given by the Bow and Bromley Institute Choir some years ago, and we believe it has been performed by other London societies. On the present occasion the manifold and transparent beauties of the cantata were warmly recognized by the fairly numerous audience.

A first-rate professional orchestra of over 80 performers, led by Mr. Philip Lewis, played the Suite and the accompaniments. The choir consisted of about 180 singers, the sopranos greatly predominating. They sang with such spirit that one was tempted to forget and forgive occasional wrong notes, and in the tenors an unblending quality of tone. Mr. Merlin Morgan conducted with great energy and decision. Although the Society had been in existence for only a few months he had contrived to secure a highly creditable ensemble. Besides the soloist named there were Miss Maggie Davies, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. Herbert Emlyn and Mr. Ivor Foster.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

The programmes of these Monday and Saturday music-makings at St. James's Hall have for the most part consisted of familiar works, but several novelties have been presented. On November 28 was introduced a Sonata in E minor for Pianoforte and Violin by Signor Busoni, well played by Herr Egon Petri and Herr Kruse. On the 5th and 7th ult. were produced respectively a Quartet and Quintet by Herr Georg Schumann, the latter work possessing more freshness and spontaneity than the former, and on the 12th ult. a Trio in C minor for Pianoforte, Violin, and Clarinet, by Mr. Richard H. Walthew, was played for the first time. This comprises four movements, which are built up with melodious themes treated in a musicianly manner; but it is a work inviting the attention of amateurs. At this concert Dr. Lierhammer introduced an attractive song-cycle entitled 'Eliland,' by Herr Alex. van Fielitz.

The novelty on the 14th ult. was an Air and Variations in B flat for Strings, composed by Mr. Donald Francis Tovey. In common with previous compositions from this clever and earnest young musician, the work is a most scholarly production, but with the exception of two out of the nine variations which possess a certain tranquil repose, the music lacks emotional fervour.

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

The attractiveness of these concerts (given at St. James's Hall) is being fully maintained. The series opened on the 3rd ult. with the first performance in England of a Sonata in D minor (Op. 22) for Pianoforte and Violoncello by Ludwig Thuille. The work is an excellent specimen of this composer's talent and style, and each of the three movements contains significant themes treated in a lucid, terse and artistic manner. The Sonata was most effectively interpreted by Miss Mathilde Verne and Mr. Herbert Withers. For the next concert (on the 17th ult.) the assistance of the choir from the Brompton Oratory was secured and, under the skilful direction of Mr. Arthur Barclay, sang a number of unaccompanied portions of one of Palestrina's Masses with splendid precision. The choristers somewhat forced their voices in the fortes, but the delicate passages were sung with exquisite softness. On this evening was played a Sonata for Pianoforte and Clarinet by Mr. Donald F. Tovey, by whom, with the assistance of Mr. Charles Draper, the work was admirably played.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

The establishment of a choral society in Central London is so desirable an object that it is with peculiar satisfaction we record an advance in the singing of the London Choral Society at the performance of 'Elijah' on the 14th ult. The precision with which the choruses were sung was excellent, but the effort was so obvious that the rendering for the most part sounded mechanical. This shortcoming was too apparent in the Baal choruses, and in 'Thanks be to God,' by the adoption by Mr. Arthur Fagge of too slow a speed. Better results, however, were obtained in the second part, several choruses in which were delivered with commendable dramatic perception. Distinction was imparted to the performance by the impressive embodiment of the Prophet by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, whose reading is essentially spiritual and like unto that of a priest. The other principal soloists were Madame Clementine De Vere, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Herbert Grover and Mr. Peter Dawson.

HANDEL SOCIETY.

It is scarcely probable that Herr Philip Wolfrum's 'Weihnachtsmysterium' (A Christmas mystery) will attain the popularity in England that it has in Germany; in our opinion it is not a satisfactory work. The Handel Society deserves praise for introducing the work to a London audience on the 15th ult., at the Queen's Hall. As the 'Mystery' was first performed in England by the Worcester Philharmonic Society on December 12, 1901, and again two years later at the Hereford Festival, detailed notice of the composition is unnecessary; but it must be said that esteem for the work diminishes with re-hearing. In regard to the performance, the solo parts were reverently sung by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Georgina Dupuis, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes, William Fell, J. E. Talbot, and Francis Harford. The choir, augmented by members of the Richmond New Philharmonic Society, sang intelligently, but the rendering of the orchestral portion left much to be desired. Mr. J. S. Liddle conducted, and Mr. E. G. Croager was at the organ.

MR. WOLSTENHOLME.

This concert, one of the most memorable given last month (on the 7th ult.), consisted entirely of the compositions of Mr. Wolstenholme, a composer well-known for his refined, melodious and effective organ pieces. On this occasion, however, he proved his right to be considered a gifted artist in other branches of composition. A Pianoforte Sonata in E flat minor, a Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte in G, and a Trio for Pianoforte, Violin and Violoncello—the last-named including a charming slow movement—showed that Mr. Wolstenholme possesses ability to write with ease in the most exacting forms. It was however by his pianoforte pieces and by his songs that he most successfully appealed to his audience. Of the former, those named 'The Torrent,' 'Liebeslied,' and 'Spanish Serenade' are most engaging, and of the latter may be mentioned the settings of Rossetti's 'Echo' and Tennyson's 'Ask me no more.' The composer presided at the pianoforte, the vocalists were Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Robert Maitland, and the strings were well played by Messrs. Spencer Dyke, Lionel Tertis and Patterson Parker. We hope to hear more music from Mr. Wolstenholme's pen; he not only has something to say, but he expresses it gracefully.

DR. RICHARD STRAUSS.

The song recital given by Dr. Richard Strauss and his wife, Frau Strauss de Ahna on the 9th ult., at St. James's Hall, attracted a much smaller audience than might have been expected. If as a composer of songs Herr Strauss is comparatively little known, not a few of his settings possess considerable depth of feeling and intellectual charm; but the majority of the lyrics presented on this occasion were more remarkable for the ingenuity and boldness of their harmonic scheme than aught else. One of the most striking, or, as some would say, eccentric, was entitled 'Jung Hexenlied,' in which all the laws of key relationship seemed to be defied and designedly transgressed. More satisfactory and pleasing were 'Ich trage meine Minne,' 'Winterweibe,' and 'Ich schwebte.' In these the composer has written with less apparent effort, and 'Traum durch die Dämmerung' is a beautiful song; while 'In goldener Fülle' is an exuberant and triumphant love song that stirs the pulse.

MORE BERLIOZ.

Although the anniversary of the birth of Berlioz on December 11 was little regarded by his countrymen, three important performances were given in London during the month. The first, on the 8th ult., took place at the Royal College of Music, when the students performed the 'Hamlet' overture and the 'Romeo and Juliet' symphony, the latter composition being given in its entirety. The courageous manner in which the difficulties of the music were met and the skill shown by Sir Charles Stanford in the guidance of his young people deserve hearty praise.

On the actual centenary day an important concert was organized at Queen's Hall, with Dr. Richard Strauss as conductor. The proceeds were announced to be given to the Relief Fund of the National Society of French Teachers in England, but neither the art of Berlioz, the fame of the conductor, or the cause of charity could succeed in attracting an audience that even by courtesy could be called numerous. The programme comprised three orchestral movements from the 'Romeo and Juliet' music, the 'Francs Juges' and 'Carnaval Romain' overtures, three songs from 'Les Nuits d'Ete,' expressively sung by Miss Alice Holländer, and the 'Réverie et Caprice' for violin and orchestra, charmingly played by Mdle. Evályn Améthé.

MEMORIAL CONCERT TO MR. NEWMAN.

Of the numerous orchestral concerts held at Queen's Hall during the past month, one of the most memorable was that given on the 2nd ult. by the Queen's Hall Orchestra and its conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood, to Mr. Robert Newman, in recognition of his services in promoting and fostering a love of orchestral music. The day was appropriate, for it was the tenth anniversary of the opening of Queen's Hall to the public. The programme consisted of Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture, Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, and Wagner excerpts.

There is no need of detailed criticism concerning the Queen's Hall symphony concerts which took place on November 28 and the 12th ult. At the former, the chief feature was the revival of Borodine's Symphony in B minor, No. 2; Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G (No. 3) was splendidly played by the strings; and the soloists were Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Jean Gerardy, both of whom were heard at their best. At the concert on the 12th ult. was presented Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, which was magnificently interpreted, and Madame Carreño played the solo part of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto. Madame Schumann-Heink sang superbly the recitative and rondo 'Non più di Fiori' from Mozart's last opera 'La Clemenza di Tito,' the elaborate obbligato for basset horn being beautifully played by Mr. F. Gomez on a new model specially made for Mr. Wood by M. Selmer, of Paris.

A series of recitals of rarely-heard music by the old composers, recently given by Miss Grace Sutherland and Mr. Frank Thistleton at the Brinsmead Galleries, deservedly calls for mention. At the first concert, on the 10th ult., the composers represented were Purcell, Corelli, Tartini, and Dall' Abaco, and the excerpts from their works were admirably interpreted.

Other concerts and recitals worthy of record are at St. James's Hall: Mr. Plunket Greene's vocal recital on the 4th ult.; Mr. Gerardy's violoncello recital, 10th ult.; Frau Schumann-Heink's vocal recital, 11th ult. At Bechstein Hall: Miss Peppercorn's pianoforte recital, 3rd ult.; Signor Busoni's pianoforte recital, 5th ult.; Miss Mutch's vocal recital, 7th ult.; Mr. Lamond's pianoforte recital, 10th ult.; Miss Barns and Mr. Phillip's chamber concert, 12th ult.; Miss Edie Reynolds's chamber concert, 15th ult.; Madame Carreño's pianoforte recital, 16th ult.

At the Bermondsey Settlement on the 12th ult., Handel's 'Acis and Galatea' was, for once, performed in its entirety, all the usually-omitted ritornelli, second parts of airs, and da capos being restored. The choir of about fifty voices was very efficient, and sang the choruses with spirit. The solo parts were well rendered by Miss Estella Linden, Mr. F. W. Norcup, Mr. Sadleur Browne and Mr. Bertram Mills, well accompanied by a small string orchestra, with pianoforte (Mrs. J. E. Borland), and flute to the two numbers in which Handel introduced that instrument. Mr. J. E. Borland conducted.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society gave a Berlioz centenary concert at Queen's Hall on the 9th ult.

Suburban Concerts.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Arthur Fagge, gave an excellent performance at the Crystal Palace on the 12th ult. of Berlioz's 'Faust,' before a large and enthusiastic audience. The occasion was of more than ordinary importance, for it was the first interpretation of the new English version prepared by Mr. Paul England and recently published by Messrs. Novello. It may in truth be said that the very enjoyable English adaptation of the French libretto will certainly contribute to the longevity of the work—one that presents Berlioz at his best and indubitably shows his right to a prominent niche in the temple of fame. The performance was admirable, the choristers singing with great intelligence and the solos being effectively rendered by Miss Eunetta Truscott and Messrs. Herbert Grover, Haigh Jackson and Peter Dawson. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

The first concert of the fourteenth season of the Richmond Philharmonic Society was successfully given on the 17th ult., before a large and appreciative audience, at the 'Star and Garter,' Richmond. Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' occupied the first part of the programme, in which the soloists were Miss Winifred Parker, Miss Edith Lane, Mr. Frederick Norcup, and Mr. Stewart Gardner. The second part included Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture (No. 3), and the first performance in England of the arrangement for chorus and orchestra of Grieg's 'Herbststurm.' The concert was ably conducted by Dr. C. E. Jolley, who had the efficient co-operation of a capital band and chorus.

The West Ham Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. W. Harding Bonner, gave a concert of gems from Handel's works on the 1st ult., the programme including an important selection from 'Judas Maccabæus'; the other works drawn upon being 'Acis and Galatea,' 'Solomon,' 'L'Allegro,' 'Samson,' and the operas 'Serse' and 'Alcina.' The 'Occasional' Overture was played by the orchestra, which also accompanied the Organ Concerto, No. 4 in F, in which the solo part was undertaken by Mr. Henry Riding. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Motterway, Miss Grace Day-Winter, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

The Streatham Choral Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy, under the direction of Mr. Stewart Macpherson, on the 16th ult. The solo parts were sung by Miss Beatrice Spencer, Mr. Alexander Webster, and Mr. Frederick Ranalow. The choir of the Society sang with great spirit and marked purity of tone, and the picturesque instrumentation was admirably rendered by a professional orchestra (led by Mr. W. A. Easton).

The East Ham Vocal and Orchestral Society gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' at its first concert of the season in the Town Hall on the 3rd ult. The choir sang excellently, and the orchestra was efficient. Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. H. Turnpenney, and Mr. Charles Knowles were responsible for the solo music, and Mr. F. W. Long, to whom the success of the performance was largely due, conducted with much care.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, December 14, 1903.

The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the birthday of Berlioz by a performance of his 'Faust.' It was also, in a sense, a personal remembrance of the French composer, for he himself conducted the work in this city forty years ago. The second concert of the Society was also in memory of a composer, Hugo Wolf, who died ten months ago in Vienna. In addition to his well-known choral works, 'Elfenlied' and 'Der Feuerreiter,' 'Christnacht,' one of the composer's posthumous works, was performed, being a sacred cantata to words by Platen. If not an extended composition, it is an exacting one for orchestra and soloists.

The Philharmonic Society was content to honour the memory of Berlioz by a performance of the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture. A feature of one programme was new entr'acte music by Franz Schmidt. This young composer, himself a member of the Philharmonic orchestra, first attracted public attention last year by an excellent symphony. His new work is fresh and of rare beauty, and in the middle gipsy-like movement he gives the violins special opportunity of distinguishing themselves. The second of these concerts was conducted by Saffonoff, director of the Moscow Conservatoire, a propagandist as it seemed of Russian music. Glazounoff's C minor Symphony and Rimski-Korsakoff's Orchestral Fantasia 'Scherezade' interested the public. If these compositions do not exactly display genius, they are highly meritorious; the form is clear, and the subject-matter is attractive. Saffonoff is an admirable conductor.

The Concertverein repeated Bruckner's Ninth Symphony, and with marked success. Here in Vienna, where the composer spent almost his whole life, there are very many enthusiastic admirers of his works, and especially of all his symphonies; and in Ferdinand Löwe, Bruckner has an incomparable interpreter.

Many new chamber works have been recently produced by the Rosé Quartet—an Octet for Strings by Glière, pleasing, well-constructed, though somewhat superficial, a Quartet by Buonamici and a Trio by Arensky; and by the Prill Quartet, an engaging composition by Heubner. The Trio party of the refined pianist, Moriz Violin, performed a Pianoforte Trio by Robert Fuchs, our excellent native composer, a beautiful work full of poetic charm. Professor Julius Klengel, of Leipzig, played a new Violoncello Suite of his own, achieving success both as creative and executive artist. The Chamber Music Society of the violinist Fitzner introduced a new Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings by D. F. Tovey, which though somewhat spun-out, is full of energy and pleasing effects.

The double-bass player Madensky, a youthful member of the Opera orchestra, is master of his instrument and a marvellous performer. He has published a pamphlet on solo double-bass playing.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Philharmonic Society gave at its second subscription concert, on November 27, a good performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' and 'Death of Minnehaha,' by Coleridge-Taylor, the soloists being Miss Perceval Allen and Messrs. Harold Wilde and Charles Tree.

The Belfast City Choral Society, a young and energetic organization, under the conductorship of Mr. W. H. Derrick Large, gave a concert on the 15th ult., at which Miss Bertha Latter and Messrs. Henry Franckiss and Meurig Jones took the solo parts in Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night.'

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Halford Concert of November 24, Mr. Fritz Kreisler made his second appearance in Birmingham, when his playing in Beethoven's Violin Concerto and Tartini's 'Il Trillo del Diavolo' (with accompaniment of strings and organ) evoked extraordinary enthusiasm. Rutland Boughton's symphonic poem 'A Summer Night' was given for the second time, and again won the emphatic approval of a critical audience. The composer, who was present, was honoured with a call and a hearty greeting. Other numbers were Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Schubert's 'Fierrabras' Overture, the latter new here. At the fourth concert, on the 8th ult., Mr. Dan Godfrey, from Bournemouth, conducted a fine performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and was accorded a hearty reception. Miss Kathleen Arnold was the soloist in Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, her playing being graceful and refined. Elgar's Variations (Op. 36), finely played under Mr. Halford's direction, and Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' Overture, completed the programme.

On November 26, the Festival Choral Society gave a fine performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha' complete, with Madame Blauvelt, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black as principals. Mr. C. W. Perkins was at the organ, and Dr. Sinclair conducted. The Town Hall was crowded.

The City Choral Society began its season on the 3rd ult. The programme comprised Gluck's 'Orfeo,'—a concert recital—Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' and a Motet, 'Pange Lingua,' for eight voices, unaccompanied, by S. Royle Shore, a local amateur. In Gluck's opera the principals were Madame Clara Butt, Miss Lillie Wormald, and Miss Violet Myers. The first two were joined by Messrs. Harold Wilde and Fowler Burton in the Ode. The performances were good, but the finest choral singing was heard in the Motet, a very scholarly production. Mr. Fred. W. Beard conducted.

Miss Marie Hall gave a violin recital in the Town Hall in November. She had not played in Birmingham since she was a child of twelve. Her performances created a great impression. On the 2nd ult., Miss Margaret Holloway gave a concert in the Masonic Hall. She played Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and other pieces, and proved herself a finished artist. Two evenings later Madame Nancy Stevenson gave a concert in the same room, introducing Miss Beatrice Erna, a young contralto of great promise, and Mr. Francis Macmillan, the violinist, an accomplished artist.

The last musical matinée at the Royal Society of Artists, on the 5th ult., was a brilliant wind-up of a successful season under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction. The Saturday evening concerts deserving notice include a performance of 'Elijah' by the Choral Union, under Mr. Thomas Facer; the annual visit of the Glasgow Select Choir, on November 28; and the Midland Musical Society's concert on the 12th ult., when a capital rendering of Cowen's 'Sleeping Beauty' was given under Mr. A. J. Cotton's conductorship. On the 14th ult. the Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert to the members of the Midland Institute. The programme consisted of Rubinstein's 'Ocean' Symphony, given in its completeness, and exceedingly well played under

Mr. Granville Bantock's conductorship. The terminal concert of the Institute School of Music took place on the 19th ult. The students' orchestra, conducted by Mr. Bantock, played Berlioz's overture 'King Lear,' and Haydn's Symphony in D (the 'Clock'); Mr. R. C. Raybould was the soloist in Rheinberger's Organ Concerto (Op. 137); Miss Beatrice MacCready sang one of the numbers from Elgar's 'Sea Pictures'; and Miss Kate Burley recited 'The Story of the Priest Philemon' (Corelli), to the improvised organ accompaniment of Mr. Raybould. The good work of the school was well exemplified.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There were two concerts at Colston Hall on November 28, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley, the chief attraction being a performance by a large male-voice choir. Mendelssohn's chorus 'Ah! were I on yonder plain' and 'Festgesang' were admirably rendered, as well as the chorus in the finale of Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' the soloist being Miss Jessie King, and Gounod's 'Nazareth,' soloist Mr. Robert Radford. Two days later a large audience assembled at an orchestral concert given in Colston Hall, also conducted by Mr. Riseley, with Mr. Henry Lewis as leader of the band, the overtures to the 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' receiving a fine interpretation. Miss Adela Verne, besides playing the solo in Schumann's Concerto in A minor, contributed a pianoforte solo, a Fantasia by Liszt.

The North Bristol Choral Society, on the 5th ult., gave its first concert for the season in the Victoria Rooms, and there was a numerous attendance. The principal vocalists were Miss Winifred Wynne, Miss Emily C. Nash, Mr. C. Eynon Morgan (Gloucester Cathedral), and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge (Wells Cathedral). Band and chorus numbered 300, Mr. F. S. Gardner leading, and Mr. C. W. Stear being at the organ. Mr. J. F. Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' was admirably rendered, and some of the numbers were received with much enthusiasm. Mr. James Bending (organist of St. Paul's Church) conducted with judgment.

On the 9th ult. the St. John's Choral Society gave in the church a performance of Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor, with orchestral accompaniment. There were 120 choralsists and 40 instrumentalists, Mr. Harold Bernand being the leader. The choral singing, under the direction of Mr. A. E. Hill, organist of the church, was most impressive.

The second Clifton Chamber Concert for the season was given at the Victoria Rooms on the 10th ult. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Tchaikovsky's Quartet in F (Op. 22) and Brahms's Quartet in A (Op. 26) were effectively rendered. Mr. Herbert Parsons executed with ability a Theme and Variations (Glazounow), and Mr. Alexander played a Scherzo in A, the composition of Mr. R. O. Beachcroft (organist of St. Paul's Church, Clifton), and two Highland Dances by J. B. McEwen. The vocalist was Mr. Arthur Walenn.

On the 10th ult., the Philharmonic Society of Weston-super-Mare gave a rendering of 'Elijah' in the spacious new Pavilion, which enabled the oratorio to be presented on a larger scale than had before been attempted in the town. The choir numbered 220 voices, and there was a competent band, chiefly of Bristol players, with Mr. F. S. Gardner as leader. The soloists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Mary Hiatt (of Flax Bourton, Somerset), Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Mr. Watkin Mills. A highly creditable performance was given under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol.

There was a performance of 'Elijah' by the Clevedon Philharmonic Society on the 16th ult. at the Public Hall. The oratorio was carefully given under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook, the soloists being Miss Edith Evans, Miss Mary Hiatt, Mr. Lewis Wensley, and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge.

MUSIC IN CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Cambridge University Musical Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' in Trinity Chapel on the 7th of December. The accompaniment unfortunately had to be limited to a string band, organ, and drums, considerations of cost prohibiting the employment of a complete orchestra. It might well be imagined that such a presentation of a modern score like Dvorák's would be very unsatisfactory, but the performance was nevertheless very impressive. The Trinity organ is of exceptionally beautiful quality, and it would be impossible to over-praise the skill with which it was handled by Dr. Naylor. The chorus maintained the improvement it has recently shown, much of which is ascribed to the fact that it has at last secured a room admirably adapted for rehearsals—the want of which has been grievously felt for many years. The soloists were Miss Fillunger, Miss Florence Christie, Mr. Louis Godfrey, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. Dr. Alan Gray conducted.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Orpheus Choral Society gave its first concert for the season on November 24. Dr. Culwick conducted his admirable choir in a choice selection of glees, madrigals, &c., including 'Stay, Corydon' (Wilbye), 'In the merry springtime' (Ravenscroft), and 'Oh, memory' (Culwick). Miss McKisack, from Belfast, and Mr. Percy Whitehead, one of the prize-winners at the last Feis Ceoil, were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Archie Rosenthal played some pianoforte solos. On the 1st ult. Mr. Joseph Seymour's Dublin Glee Singers gave their first concert. Mr. J. C. Doyle, baritone, Herr Bast, violoncello, and Miss Annie Lord, pianist, were the soloists.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its second concert for the season on the 9th ult. Their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess of Dudley being present. Mr. Sigmund Beel played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto magnificently, and also a Prelude and Fugue in G minor (Bach) for violin alone. The principal novelty of the programme was a Suite of five 'Irish' dances by the conductor of the Society, Signor Esposito. These proved to be very effective arrangements of old Irish dance tunes, something after the manner of Brahms's Hungarian dances. Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, Wagner's 'Lohengrin' Prelude, and Smetana's 'Die verkaufte Braut' Overture completed the programme. The support of the public at the first two concerts of the season has been most encouraging, and augurs well for the future of this admirable Society.

On the 16th ult. the Royal Irish Academy of Music was honoured by a visit from Their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess of Dudley. They received an address from the Governors, and a short programme of music was performed by some of the pupils.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Messrs. Paterson and Sons' series of Orchestral Concerts has opened with a brilliancy which seems even to exceed that of former years. The orchestra is better than ever. Little wonder that Dr. Richard Strauss, on his recent visit to us, indulged in panegyric when speaking and writing of the band and Dr. Cowen. At the first concert the symphony was the 'Eroica,' and Signor Busoni gave a superb rendering of Henselt's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor. A delightful little novelty was Dr. Cowen's 'Réverie' for orchestra. The second concert brought Richard Strauss, with his Symphonic Poems 'Aus Italien' and 'Till Eulenspiegel.' Thanks to the elaborate care with which the works had been previously rehearsed, the performance was striking and brilliant in the extreme. So also was that at the third concert, when the chief items were Schumann's

First Symphony and the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture of Berlioz. Herr Fritz Kreisler played in magnificent style the G minor Violin Concerto of Max Bruch and a Fantasia of Paganini.

The first concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society showed that Mr. Collinson has brought his forces to a still greater degree of excellence than before, and that their resources of technique and expression are greatly increased. The programme was an extremely interesting one, and reached its climax in a fine rendering of the Eighth Symphony of Beethoven. The vocalist was Mr. Scott-Macpherson. By-the-way, in mentioning the forthcoming performance by this Society of the Choral Fantasia of Beethoven we, by a very regrettable slip of the pen, gave the name of Mr. Della Torre as the soloist instead of that of Mr. Alfred Hollins.

'A Concert of Wind-Instrument Chamber Music' formed the scheme of the historical concert given at the University Music Class Room on the 16th ult. under the auspices of Professor Niecks. When it is said that the performers were the members of the Queen's Hall (London) Wind Instrument Quintet, the excellence of the interpretations may be assumed.

The lamented death of Mr. Roy Paterson is referred to on p. 31.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Choral and Orchestral Union's season opened on November 24 with a magnificent performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' by the Choral Union and Scottish Orchestra. Seldom has any choral novelty aroused such genuine interest and enthusiasm, and the initial performance of Elgar's noble work in Glasgow attracted one of the largest and most keenly appreciative audiences ever seen in St. Andrew's Hall. Nothing but praise can be bestowed upon the chorus and semi-chorus (an admirably chosen body) for their excellent singing. Mr. Joseph Bradley, the conductor, must be congratulated on securing one of the best performances yet given of this work. The soloists, Miss Muriel Foster and Messrs. John Coates and Walter Harvey, the last-named being a rising local baritone, left nothing to be desired.

The second classical concert, on the 1st ult., was notable chiefly for Signor Busoni's refined and musicianly reading of the solo part in Henselt's Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, and Dr. Cowen's first-rate handling of the 'Eroica' Symphony. Two novelties—Wagner's 'Die Feen' Overture and Cowen's 'Réverie' for orchestra (most sympathetically played)—lent additional interest to the programme. An enormous audience assembled to welcome Dr. Richard Strauss, who occupied the conductor's desk at the third Classical Concert on the 8th ult. Two of the composer-conductor's works were included in the programme—viz., his Symphonic fantasia 'Aus Italien' (first performance here) and the humorous 'Till Eulenspiegel.' In these, and in Beethoven's overture 'Leonora No. 3,' the band played magnificently.

The Glasgow Glee and Catch Club, which has this season been strengthened and improved by the addition of some fresh voices, made a successful appearance on November 30. A well-arranged selection of glees and part-songs was submitted, but the Club's best effort was in Mr. William Wallace's clever setting of Professor Aytoun's humorous ballad 'The Massacre of The Macpherson.' Reversing the usual order, Mr. Wallace's music is a kind of commentary on the words, and for this purpose he makes use of several well-known Scottish melodies in addition to some familiar excerpts from Wagner. The Club sang with great gusto and full appreciation of the humour of the piece, and the ballad was evidently much enjoyed by the audience. Mr. George Taggart conducted, and Mr. A. M. Henderson lent valuable aid with the accompaniments.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society, ably conducted by Mr. W. T. Hoeck, gave a most meritorious performance on the 10th ult. Beethoven's Symphony in D, Berlioz's 'King Lear' Overture, and Vieuxtemps' Violin Concerto No. 4 in D minor were the leading items on the programme. The Symphony was played with much intelligence, and the technical difficulties of the Overture were overcome with ease. Miss Edie Reynolds made an excellent appearance as solo violinist, and Miss Retta McAllister, a young local artist, sang some songs with much acceptance.

On the 11th ult. the Clydebank Choral Union, under Mr. W. J. Clapperton's direction, gave a very creditable rendering of Elgar's stirring ballad 'The Banner of St. George' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' Miss Perceval Allen taking the solo part in both works. Mr. R. Hetherington accompanied efficiently. The Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, whose first performance last season made such a good impression, gave a concert of exceptional interest on the 14th ult. The programme was arranged historically, and included madrigals, glees, and part-songs, beginning with the compositions of Di Lasso and ending with those of Elgar. The singing gave evidence of careful and well-directed practice, and the most successful items on the programme were Purcell's 'In these delightful, pleasant groves' and Webbe's 'When winds breathe soft.' Mr. B. W. Hartley conducted the performance with skill.

The performance of Haydn's 'Creation' by the Dumbarton Choral Union, on the 16th ult., reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. E. C. Owston, through whose exertions local interest in choral music is being carefully fostered. The choir, a well-balanced body with particularly full-toned alto and tenor sections, sang the choruses with great vigour and good attack, and the accompaniments were effectively played by a small orchestra strengthened with pianoforte and harmonium. An excellent trio—Miss Jenny Taggart and Messrs. H. Turnpenny and Robert Burnett—gave the solo music.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Gloucester Choral Society gave its first concert for the season in the Shire Hall on the 1st ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy was given in its entirety. The choral singing was throughout excellent, and the soloists (Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. Dalton Baker) acquitted themselves well. Mr. W. H. Reed led an efficient band, and Mr. A. H. Brewer conducted.

A word of encouragement is due to Mr. F. Dawes, the bandmaster of the Gloucester Civic Band, for the capital concert arranged and given in the Gloucester Shire Hall on December 8. The band played a number of selections very acceptably, and was assisted by Miss May Mukle (violinello soloist), Miss Margaret Hicks Beach (soprano), and Mr. W. J. Ineson (Hereford Cathedral).

Stroud has now a vigorous and flourishing Choral Society under Mr. J. Edis Tidnam's skilful guidance. The concert given on the 10th ult. was the most successful in the Society's history. The works performed were Parry's 'Voces Clamantium' (conducted by the composer), and the first part of the 'Hiawatha' music. Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Harold White, and Mr. F. Lightowler were the soloists. Sir Hubert Parry, speaking in the interval, congratulated Mr. Tidnam and his singers on the success of their efforts.

Dr. Richter appeared to direct the concert of the Orchestral Society which was given In Memoriam Alfred Rodewald on the 5th ult., and under his care the orchestra entered fully into the pathos and significance of the occasion. The scheme included Mozart's 'Masonic Dirge,' Brahms's Rhapsody founded upon Goethe's 'Harzreise im Winter,' the Prelude to 'Parsifal,' the Prelude and 'Angel's Farewell' from 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Strauss's tone-poem 'Death and Transfiguration,' and Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony. In sympathy, members of the Philharmonic Society came forward to render the chorus portion of the Brahms work, whilst Miss Muriel Foster sang the solo in that, and also the 'Angel's Farewell' with rare power and vocal introspectiveness.

The first 'Gentlemen's Concert' of the same Society was given in the Gymnasium on the 12th ult., when Mr. Alfred Ross was at the first desk, and Mr. V. V. Akeroyd conducted. The programme included Schubert's C major Symphony, an Adagio by Bargiel for Violoncello (played by Mr. E. Hutton) and Orchestra, Max Bruch's Violin Concerto, the solo part being very well rendered by Mr. J. S. Bride, and the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture.

Two concerts of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society have occurred since my last letter, that on November 24 being characterized by a singularly fine rendering of the solo part of Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in A by M. Busoni. The Prelude to the first act of Richard Strauss's 'Guntram,' that to Elgar's cantata 'Lux Christi,' and Beethoven's Symphony in D were included in Dr. Cowen's programme, and Madame Blauvelt was the vocalist.

The concert on the 8th ult. brought with it Mr. Fritz Kreisler, who also played Bruch's G minor Concerto. The vocalists were Miss Louise Dale and Mr. Hamilton Earle, and the orchestra revelled in Haydn's Symphony in C, 'L'ours.'

The Post Office Choral Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' at the Philharmonic Hall on the 10th ult., when the vocalists were Miss Gillespie, Mr. Percy Bates and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Percival H. Ingram, owing to illness, was unable to be in his usual place, and the concert was directed by Mr. G. Edwin Collier.

The thirty-fifth season of the Waterloo Choral Society was inaugurated, when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Come, let us sing,' Bach's 'God's time is the best,' and scenes from 'Odysseus' (Max Bruch). The principals were Miss Gregory Jones, Mr. A. James, and Mr. J. Barrell, whilst the chorus was conducted by Mr. J. W. Appleyard.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the seventh Hallé concert, which took place on the 3rd ult., M. Busoni played like a consummate master in the F major Pianoforte Concerto by Saint-Saëns and in Liszt's 'Totentanz,' and the Orchestra gave a monumental reading of Brahms's First Symphony. At the eighth concert, Berlioz's 'Faust'—a safe draw in Manchester—was given, the Choir singing with something less than its usual finish. The soloists were Miss Jaxon, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Andrew Black. The orchestra was grand.

At the third gentlemen's concert on November 30 Miss Dorothy Bridson had fair success as violin soloist, playing Saint-Saëns's third Concerto and the Wilhelmj transcription of the 'Preislied,' the small orchestra under Dr. Richter playing delightfully in selections from Goetz, Weber, Mozart, and Bizet. At the fourth concert of the series Mr. Frederic Lamond played Schumann's 'Carnaval' and pieces by Chopin, Liszt, and Rubinstein, showing every pianistic quality except elegance, and Miss Nora Meredith sang very sweetly in the air from 'Figaro' and light lyrical pieces.

M. Busoni introduced the great Quintet by César Franck at the second Brodsky concert on the 2nd ult., playing with consummate art, and String Quintets by Brahms and Mozart were admirably rendered. At the second Schiller concert on the 10th ult. the Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society gave groups of Italian madrigals and part-songs by Brahms and modern British composers (Percy Pitt, Stanford and Elgar), singing with quite exceptionally good intonation and in other respects with exquisite sensitiveness and finish. Instrumental music was given by Mr. Fuchs (violinello) and Miss Ada Wright (pianoforte). Mr. Max gave the first of his two annual concerts on the 23rd ult., playing Schubert's B flat Trio and Sonatas by Dvorák and Thuille—the latter a work for violoncello and pianoforte of some interest by a little-known Munich composer—and introducing some fairly good original songs.

The Manchester Vocal Society performed Bach's Church cantata 'A stronghold sure,' at its concert on the 9th ult.

Extraordinary interest was manifested prior to, and a profound impression created by, the performance of Dr. Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on the 9th ult. by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union, and the Hallé Orchestra, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. J. M. Preston. The choral singing was exceptionally fine, the difficulties being surmounted with apparent ease, flawless accuracy of pitch being maintained throughout the trying unaccompanied passages. The soloists, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies also deserve great praise. A welcome rumour is afloat regarding a probable repetition next season.

The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society, conducted by Mr. J. E. Jeffries, organist of the Cathedral, has given Dr. Prout's 'Hereward the Wake'; the Philharmonic Society (Mr. Geo. Dodds) has performed Gounod's 'Faust'; and the Postal Telegraph Choral Society (Mr. T. Hutchinson) Gaul's 'Joan of Arc.'

At the concert of the Auckland Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. N. Kilburn, Stanford's 'Revenge' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' were sung, and Mr. Louis Pecskai played Beethoven's Violin Concerto. The 'Creation' has been performed by the Middlesbrough Musical Union, also under the direction of Mr. Kilburn, by the Gateshead Vocal Society (Mr. N. Laycock), and at North Shields, conducted by Mr. H. Y. Dodds. The South Shields Choral Society, under Mr. M. Fairs, gave on the 16th ult. Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Dr. Elgar's 'Coronation Ode,' the latter for the first time in the district.

A highly interesting lecture was delivered by Mr. W. H. Hadow in the theatre of the Literary and Philosophical Society on the 14th ult., the theme of his discourse being Beethoven's Sonata in D (Op. 28).

MUSIC IN NORWICH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The two principal events of last month were the concert given in connection with the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival on the 3rd ult., and that given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society on the 17th ult. At the Festival Concert held in St. Andrew's Hall the programme was exclusively selected from the works of Handel, the greater part of 'Acis and Galatea' being given, with the addition of the overture to 'Saul,' and selections from 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Jephtha,' and 'Samson.' Three songs not often heard in a concert room were included in the programme—'Le profonde' ('Ottone'), 'Lascia amor' ('Orlando'), both sung by Mr. Watkin Mills with great effect, and the recitative and air, 'Convey me to some peaceful shore,' from 'Alexander Balus,' given by Miss Helen Jaxon, while Mr. Harper Kearton sang the familiar recitative and air from 'Jephtha.' Mr. G. H. Betjemann was leader of the orchestra, and the band consisted of local players reinforced by a London contingent.

The programme was enriched with some valuable analytical notes of historical interest, written by Dr. A. H. Mann, the conductor. The additional accompaniments added to some of Handel's works by later composers were not used, the works being performed in the original Handelian form. The choir sang with good attack, great precision and power, and due attention to light and shade, and showed that it had benefitted by the careful training received at the hands of Dr. Mann.

At the concert given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society on the 17th ult., the Norwich Choral Society—under their conductor, Dr. Bates—introduced several madrigals and part-songs, which were sung in a finished style. The instrumental part of the concert was supplied by a trio consisting of Miss Gertrude Peppercorn (pianoforte), Mr. Dettmar-Dressel (violin), and Mr. Bertie Withers (violoncello), who performed two Trios, the 'Op. 21 in D' of Dvorák, and the 'Op. 3 in C minor' of Beethoven. Miss Gertrude Peppercorn contributed two pianoforte solos by Chopin,—Etude in A flat and Fantasia (Op. 49)—while Mr. Plunket Greene, the solo vocalist of the evening, delighted his hearers with two groups of songs of varied character.

The Sacred Harmonic Society opened its season on November 26 with a very fine performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' The solos were well rendered by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates, Mr. William Downing, and Mr. Frederic Austin. Under Mr. Allen Gill's guidance the work was carefully performed, but the chorus work showed to especial advantage and reflected great credit on his training and on the singers themselves.

On the 10th ult. the Orchestral Concerts given under the auspices of the Sacred Harmonic Society began their sixth season, and devoted a large portion of their programme to Berlioz as doubtless they will to Glinka next season. The difficulties of the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture were boldly attacked, but the G minor Symphony of Mozart was more suited to their capacity, and was really well executed. Mr. Lyell Taylor played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto with great taste. The orchestra, of whom a large percentage are amateurs, reflected great credit on Mr. Allen Gill, who conducted throughout. The programme concluded with a careful performance of Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture. The vocalist was Mr. Robert Radford, who received a warm welcome to his native city, his rendering of Handel's 'Revenge, Timotheus cries,' and Wallace's 'Rebel' and 'Son of mine' being excellent specimens of vocal art.

The West Bridgford Choral Society gave a good account of itself on the 11th ult., when Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' was performed. The soloists were Miss L. Gillespie and Mr. Robert Radford, who rendered good service, and band and chorus were ably conducted by Mr. Liddon.

At Derby, Mr. Harold Henry's Orchestral Society opened its twelfth season with a programme containing Mozart's G minor Symphony, Massenet's Suite 'Scènes Alsaciennes' and Weber's 'Euryanthe' Overture. A Valse Caprice by Mr. Henry was enthusiastically received, and as solo violinist he played a 'Meditation' of his own composing. The vocalist, Miss Dora Beck, rendered her items with grace and feeling, and Mr. Sadler conducted with his usual care and skill.

It was a bold stroke on the part of the Leicester New Musical Society to introduce Dr. Crotch's 'Palestine' on the 17th ult., but from all accounts the act was justified by the results. The band and chorus fulfilled the demands made on them in a manner which gave great satisfaction to an interested audience. Great credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Hancock, for the able manner in which he guided his forces through a by no means easy work. The solos were well executed by Madame Norledge, Miss Edith Coltman, Mr. Ben Johnson and Mr. Charles Knowles.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There has been a large amount of music here this term of various kinds. Following our usual custom we briefly chronicle the best and most noteworthy events.

The first concert of importance took place in the Town Hall on November 3, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when Dr. Frederic H. Cowen and the London

Philharmonic Orchestra gave us a delightful concert, the principal items being Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Schumann's Overture 'Genoveva.'

On November 18 our genial Professor of Music, Sir Hubert Parry, gave an admirable lecture in the Sheldonian on 'Realistic Suggestion and Programme,' the illustrations to which were excellently given by two young ladies from the Royal College of Music.

Under the auspices of the Musical Club, Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Wind Quintet gave a capital concert in the Town Hall, on November 26, the first item being Mozart's Quintet for Pianoforte, Oboe, Clarinet, Horn, and Bassoon, in E flat (Köchel, No. 452). The performance under Mr. Wood was thoroughly artistic. Bach's rarely-heard Sonata for Flute and Pianoforte, in E flat major, was also included in the scheme, Mr. Fransella doing full justice to the solo part. The two other concerted pieces were Concertstück for Wind Quintet (Op. 41), by Rietz, and Gavotte and Tarantella by Fuhrmeister, works new to Oxford, but admirable in their way. We must by no means omit to mention that Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang several songs very charmingly.

On the 9th ult., in the Town Hall, the Cowley Vocal Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Wilsdon, gave a capital concert consisting of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' in its entirety. The Society was assisted by the Oxford Gleemen, and their united efforts secured a very efficient chorus, well on their mettle—though the voices were not metallic—from first to last, producing results which were at times superb. The soloists were Miss Venning, Mr. Seth Hughes, and Mr. Garcia.

About a year ago, in these columns, I strenuously advocated the gradual combination of the musical forces of Oxford, which are still suffering too much from isolation to succeed either artistically or financially, and I am indeed glad to see another step taken in the direction of this 'union of hearts.' May the Cowley Society go on its way prospering, and may the Gleemen continue to assist them.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Choral Union, an old-established organization, has been undergoing developments during the autumn and has now come forward rejuvenated and largely augmented, with a new conductor, Mr. J. Duffell, vice Mr. S. Suckley resigned. A concert was given in the Albert Hall on November 26 (too late for notice in my last letter), and in spite of a disappointing financial loss, the musical results were such as to encourage the Society to persevere in its course. Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria' and Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' were performed. The singing of the chorus was excellent in both works, and in the choral ending to Handel's fourth Organ Concerto—the solo part of which was admirably played by Mr. J. W. Phillips—the choir further distinguished itself. A capable local orchestra played Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor (Op. 33) with commendable finish. The soloists were Miss Eva Rich, Miss Edith Woodall, Mr. W. Slack and Mr. A. Revill Slater. Mr. C. M. Hawcroft led the band.

A concert of outstanding interest was that given by the Brincliffe Musical Society (Orchestral) in the Albert Hall on the 14th ult. Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony and Dr. Cowen's Hereford novelty 'An Indian Rhapsody' were the chief works performed by this well-conducted and talented body of amateurs. There is locally so marked a disinclination to take up new festival works that this exception is mentioned with particular pleasure. Mr. J. H. Parkes directed the concert.

A new suburban choral society, the Heeley Musical Union, has been formed, and took the field 120 strong on the 14th ult. with Dr. Coward's 'Story of Bethany.' Some encouraging choral results were obtained by the director, Mr. M. Tomlinson. Another body, hailing from the same suburb, the Heeley Wesleyan Society, gave a very creditable rendering of Gade's 'Psyche' on the 3rd ult., under Mr. R. M. Bullmore, and the same composer was drawn upon by the St. Peter's (Abbeydale) Choral Society which, on the 10th ult., performed 'The Crusaders,' under the direction of Mr. William Gadsby.

The enterprising choral society at Norton Lees gave a successful concert on the 7th ult., performing Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron.' Mr. H. Reynolds conducted. At Hickleton Main, where Mr. G. M. Coates is doing capital work with the choral society recently established there, 'Acis and Galatea' was performed on the 3rd ult.

The Barnsley St. Cecilia Society's performance of 'Acis and Galatea,' under Dr. Coward, on the 17th ult., again produced some excellent chorus-singing.

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society gave a concert in the Albert Hall on the 21st ult. Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' were the choral items. Under Mr. Schöllhammer's direction the amateurs displayed their distinguishing features of refined tone and tasteful musicianship, and indicated a further advance in their art. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Maud Santley, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Joseph Lycett.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Though during the past month there have been a good many concerts at Leeds, there has been little of general interest. Quite the most noteworthy event was the appearance, on the 5th ult., at one of the Municipal Orchestra's concerts, organized by Mr. Fricker, of Mr. Josef Holbrooke, who conducted his exceedingly clever orchestral variations on 'Three Blind Mice.' Their difficulty is considerable, and to this, and their novelty, may be ascribed some want of clearness in the performance. In point of construction, the composer has not quite overcome the difficulty of avoiding monotony that is inevitable in writing a series of variations on a short and not very distinguished theme. Of its suggestiveness, however, he has fully availed himself, and his devices in counterpoint and colouring, and in the introduction of snatches of other tunes, show remarkable skill. In Mozart's G minor Symphony, the 'Casse Noisette' Suite, and other things, the orchestra, under Mr. Fricker, showed its efficiency and really good quality, and all musicians in the town are hoping that this really artistic venture may meet with the success it deserves. The local orchestra, which Mr. Edgar Haddock conducts, has also done much to popularize orchestral music, and on the 19th ult. it gave a concert at nominal prices, when the programme, following a precedent set just a year ago, was devoted to Handel and Wagner, a singular contrast, and indeed so striking a one that comparisons were happily impossible.

There have been two choral concerts of interest. On the 9th ult. the Leeds Choral Union gave Gluck's 'Orpheus' with excellent effect, Miss Giulia Ravogli singing her famous part, as she has done with this Society on two previous occasions, at Leeds and in London. Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite was the other work performed, under the conductorship of Mr. Alfred Benton. The enterprising suburban society which Mr. H. P. Richardson conducts at Headingley, gave a programme of anything but hackneyed character on the 14th ult. Neither Bach's cantata, 'Bide with us,' Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives,' nor Mackenzie's 'Bride,' has been heard much in the West Riding of late, and all deserved revival. With efficient principals—among whom the tenor, Mr. Brearley, deserves special mention for his artistic singing—and a small but well-selected orchestra of local musicians, a series of really adequate and highly interesting performances were given, and one only wishes the example may be followed.

The Leeds Musical Union gave an exceptionally interesting programme of male-voice music on the 7th ult. Palestrina's Mass 'Aeterna Christi munera' headed a list of pieces which meandered gently through the centuries till it ended with Sullivan's 'The long day closes,' a 'Crucifixus' by Caldara being one of the least familiar things included. Mr. Noel Bell's pianoforte solos from Bach, Scarlatti and Grieg were in excellent keeping with the rest of the concert, and were very artistically played, while the songs were also of a better type than usual. Mr. Bernard Johnson, the conductor, may certainly be congratulated on the effect of his influence on the Society's policy.

BRADFORD.

'Elijah' was given at one of the Bradford Subscription Concerts on the 11th ult., with a really brilliant performance under Dr. Cowen, with the help of Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Messrs. William Green, and Ffrangcon-Davies as principals, the chorus of the Bradford Festival Choral Society, and the Hallé Orchestra. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies's dignified and impressive reading of the part of Elijah was, of course, an outstanding feature, but the ensemble was also of high merit. On the 15th ult., the Old Choral Society, under Mr. J. W. Fitton, and on the 18th ult., the Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Cowen, gave their usual Christmas 'Messiah' performances.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra has given two concerts since I last wrote. On November 21, part-songs by most of the male-voice choirs in the neighbourhood gave variety to the programme, and produced a fine ensemble under Mr. Henry Coates's direction. The orchestral part of the programme was conducted on this occasion by the leader, Mr. Whitby Norton, one of a large family of West Riding musicians well-known as orchestral players. His brother, Mr. Haydn Norton, the oboe player, and one of the ablest artists in the North of England, died suddenly and prematurely before the Society's next concert on the 12th ult., when a graceful tribute to his memory was afforded by the 'In Memoriam' Overture being played at the head of the programme. Mr. Allen Gill, who resumed his post as conductor, directed the performances, which included Bach's A minor Violin Concerto, played with musicianly feeling by an amateur, Miss Ethel Leigh, daughter of the Society's president. A remarkably able pianist, Miss Margaretha Klepper, whose training has been entirely local, made her first public appearance on November 23, when she gave a recital that showed a great range of style, highly-finished technique, and an unflinching memory, together with a genuine artistic temperament.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

On November 24, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's visit to Keighley, to conduct his 'Hiawatha' trilogy, made something like a sensation. He so stirred the feelings of the chorus of the Musical Union by his music and his spirited conducting at the rehearsal, that they promptly subscribed towards the cost of a presentation baton, which was given him before the performance. He certainly roused the singers to a greater display of animation and vigour than they have been in the habit of showing, while Madame Sobrino, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Herbert Brown assisted in a very good all-round performance. The Keighley Orchestral Society, of which Mr. Summerscales is the conductor, gave a creditable performance on the 9th ult. of Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, among other less important things, and Mr. W. H. Squire contributed violoncello solos. 'St. Paul' was given at Pudsey on November 30, under Mr. H. Pickard's direction, and 'Jephtha' was the subject of the Batley Society's concert on the 1st ult., Mr. J. Fearnley being the conductor. The Dewsbury Choral Society broke in upon established custom by giving at its concert on the 8th ult. chamber music, the work of the chorus being confined to Franz's Psalm cxvii. and Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' under Mr. Fricker's direction. The former work was admirably sung, but the choir proved too unwieldy for the more delicate effect of the latter, which is much the best when the vocal accompaniment is confined to a solo quartet.

The organist of Ripon Cathedral, Mr. C. H. Moody, is infusing the enthusiasm of youth into his work, and is magnifying his office in the most exemplary fashion by instituting special services at which oratorio music is given. On the 10th ult. Brahms's 'German Requiem' was, as appropriate to the Advent Season, thus given. The organ (Mr. W. L. Luttman), with pianoforte and drums judiciously used to give variety of colour, supplied the place of an orchestra, and a local chorus sang with a steadiness and confidence showing the result of careful preparation. Miss Margaret Grime sang the soprano solo most artistically, and Mr. Bayley undertook the baritone part.

Equally energetic is the York organist, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, whose creation the York Symphony Orchestra may truly be styled. Its prowess was shown on November 25, when Mr. Edward German conducted a number of his compositions, the chief being his symphonic poem 'Hamlet,' which was most creditably played. On the 15th ult. the York Musical Society, of which Mr. Noble is also the conductor, gave C. H. Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' the chorus singing with much spirit. The principals were Miss Dow and Mr. Nitschke.

At a very enjoyable concert given by the Hull Philharmonic Society on the 4th ult., under Mr. Hudson, the orchestra gave a good performance of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, and the artistic singing of a local vocalist, Miss Dorothy Wiley, contributed to the interest of the proceedings. At Scarborough Messrs. Cass and Owen Williams have been continuing their excellent chamber concerts, Arensky's Pianoforte Quintet in D (Op. 51) being the feature of the concert on the 14th ult. Mrs. Burrell's Subscription concerts at Malton also deserve mention. On the 12th ult. she had the assistance of Miss Agnes Nicholls in a most enjoyable programme.

Miscellaneous.

A very enjoyable concert was given at the Drill Hall, Eton College, on November 28, by the Eton College Chapel Choir, under the experienced conductorship of Dr. C. H. Lloyd, with Mr. A. E. Baker as accompanist. Miss Maud F. Riseley tastefully played some violin pieces, various solos were well sung by members of the choir, and a good selection of madrigals and glees received an excellent interpretation, while the singing of a three-part song, 'St. Dunstan's Bells' (Macfarren), did credit to the choristers. A feature of special interest was the presence and co-operation of two composers, Mr. S. H. Nicholson and Mr. John E. West. Mr. Nicholson conducted his madrigal 'Phillida flouts me,' and Mr. West discharged a similar duty towards his 'Woodmen, shepherds, come away,' a well-written madrigal in the old style. Mr. West also accompanied his cheery song, 'Cheerily O!' cheerily sung by Mr. James W. Dempster, who was heartily cheered.

Mr. Manners announces his intention of giving performances of English Opera at Drury Lane Theatre for a period of three months this year—from the middle of May to the middle of August.

'British Folk-song' is the title of a course of three lectures which Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland is announced to deliver at the Royal Institution on Saturdays the 16th, 23rd, and 30th inst. at 3 p.m.

A valuable course of lectures on Choir Training has recently been delivered at Trinity College, London, by Mr. F. A. W. Docker, organist and choirmaster of St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street.

Sir Frederick Bridge has accepted the Presidency of the Cheltenham Festival Society (Conductor, Mr. J. A. Matthews) in succession to the late Sir Herbert Oakeley.

Mr. Tom Wotton read an interesting paper on Hector Berlioz before the members of The Musical Association on the 8th ult. at the Royal College of Organists.

Mr. Fred. Haines has been appointed Bandmaster of the 1st Life Guards.

Foreign Notes.

ALTENBURG.

Johann Adolf Hasse was one of the most prolific and, we may add, popular composers of the 18th century. 'The youngster,' he said of Mozart, when at Milan in 1771, 'will throw us all into the shade,' and he proved no false prophet. Hasse is now almost forgotten. However, at the Court Theatre of this city an interesting concert was given last month, at which was performed some of that composer's instrumental music: marches from 'Artaserse' and 'Cleofide'; the Overture, Ballet music, and a Gavotte from 'Piramo and Tisbe'; and a Peasants' Dance from 'Numa.'

BAYREUTH.

The name of this town is of course specially associated with Wagner, and the performances of his music-dramas at his theatre on the hill. There is, however, a musical society under the direction of Professor Kniese which has just given its two-hundredth, or jubilee concert. Beethoven, Liszt, Wagner, and Siegfried Wagner were the four composers represented: the first by his Seventh Symphony, the second by his Pianoforte Concerto in A, the third by his 'Tannhäuser' Overture, and the fourth by a vocal excerpt from 'Herzog Wildfang,' given under the composer's own direction.

BERLIN.

The fifth Symphony Concert was devoted to the memory of Berlioz, the programme including the Fantastic Symphony, magnificently performed under the direction of Weingartner, the 'Rob Roy' Overture, the dramatic scena 'Cléopâtre,' recently heard in London, and the Marche from 'Les Troyens.' It is curious that the programmes of the three Berlioz concerts given in London did not contain a single excerpt from the last-named work, and all the more so considering that Berlioz arranged it for concert performance.

GENEVA.

Dr. Richter once prophesied a future for Mozart, and at Paris last month his 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail' was revived, and special performances of 'Don Juan' in its original form were given; also a cycle of the master's symphonies formed a prominent feature of the Chevillard concerts. Whether there will ever be a Haydn revival is doubtful. Anyhow, it is interesting to note that the programme of the first subscription concert here was devoted to the genial 'Papa' composer. It included an Overture in D, the military Symphony, the Violoncello Concerto, an air from the opera 'Orphée et Eurydice,' and various songs.

MOSCOW.

Two new operas have recently been produced at the Imperial Theatre of this city. One, entitled 'Aleco,' is by Rachmaninoff—whose Prelude in C sharp minor has made his name so well known abroad; the other, 'Dobrynya Nikitich,' by Gretchaninoff. Both works seem to have been favourably received.

MUNICH.

Hugo Wolf's opera 'Der Corregidor,' originally produced at Mannheim in 1896, was performed for the first time at Munich on November 4. The libretto, founded on a novel by Alarcon, and written by Rosa Mayreder-Obermaier, has been found fault with, and it is known that the composer himself was far from satisfied with it. Of the music Dr. Theodor Kroyer, in the Signale, says: 'In spite of all imperfections there is life, humour, intellect, and heart in it.' The opera was given under the direction of the Court Capellmeister Röhr, who conducted the work at Mannheim.

PARIS.

M. Vincent d'Indy is one of the most esteemed French composers of the present day. In 1897 his opera 'Fervaal' was produced at the Monnaie, Brussels, and its merits fully recognized. A second opera was produced at the same theatre last February; it is entitled 'L'Etranger,' and, as has been the case with more than one French opera, only afterwards was it given in Paris, the first performance in the metropolis taking place on the 4th ult. According to the latest news the performances are, however, interrupted owing to the illness of M. Delmas, who impersonated L'Etranger. The rôle of Vita was taken by Madame Bréval. — The 23rd ult. was the date fixed for the production of 'La Reine Fiammette,' by MM. Xavier Leroux and Catulle Mendès, at the Opéra-Comique. — It has long ago been stated that the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Berlioz on the 11th ult. deserved to be worthily celebrated in this city. At the Conservatoire, Colonne and Chevillard concerts, Berlioz has certainly been largely represented, but the only notice taken of the day itself was the placing of flowered wreaths round the statue of the composer in the Place Vintimille, the Mayor of Côte-Saint-André, M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, and M. Eugène d'Auriac, professor of the Faculty of Letters, and representatives of various societies being present. A few brief words were spoken by the three persons named, M. Ducoudray remarking that 'le silence de nos voix rendra mieux le regret de nos cœurs.'

PRESSBURG.

At the cathedral service for the festival of St. Cecilia (November 22), Beethoven's 'Missa solennis' was performed under the direction of Gabriel Franck, of Raab. The Mass was first given here in the year 1835 under Kumlik (1801-1869), and since 1891 it has formed part of the service on St. Cecilia's day. In the invitations issued this year, attention was called to the fact that only when presented in conjunction with the service can the music of this 'noblest of all sacred works' produce its proper impression.

ROME.

The opera season commences immediately after Christmas. Ten works are announced, among the novelties being: Puccini's 'Madame Butterfly,' 'Ero e Leandro' by Signor Mancinelli (the conductor for the season), and Wagner's 'Tristan.' Among the soloists are Mesdames Bellincioni, Darlée, Pinkert, and the tenor, Marconi.

ST. PETERSBURG.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's first opera, 'La Pskovitaine,' the libretto of which is based on a drama by Méi, was produced at the Théâtre Marie in the year 1873 and performed sixteen times. In 1895 it was revised and performed at the Paniew Theatre. The work, after still a second revision by the composer, was recently given at the first-named theatre for the benefit of the orchestral players; the prices had been raised for the occasion, and according to Le Ménestrel the sum to be divided amounted to no less than 11,347 roubles, equivalent to about £140 in English money. The opera seems to have attained great success.

Country News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABERGAVENNY.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on the 8th ult., when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' was the chief feature of the programme. There was a choir and orchestra numbering 140, and the solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood and Mr. Montague Borwell. The conductor was Mr. W. R. Carr.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—A very admirable performance of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' was given by the Musical Union on November 25. Great care had evidently been taken in the preparation of the choir and orchestra by Dr. Eaglesfield Hull. The former sang with much spirit, and the latter (reinforced by some professional players) accompanied, especially in the recitations, with much delicacy. Miss Ethel Lister, a very excellent soprano, and Mr. W. Maxwell were fully efficient in the solo parts, and Mr. Charles Fry once more appeared in his capacity of reciter of Mr. Bennett's beautiful verses. The occasion was taken to present the conductor with a handsome baton in recognition of his services to the Society and of his success in obtaining his Doctor's Degree. The presentation was made by the Rev. F. W. Galpin, a true friend of music.

BLACKBURN.—The St. Cecilia and Vocal Union opened its twenty-ninth season on the 7th ult. at the Exchange Hall. Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle'—which occupied the first half of the programme—was most impressively rendered. The second part included 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast,' by Coleridge-Taylor, rendered by the 300 performers in a praiseworthy manner. The solo vocalists were Miss Lillie Wormald, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Dr. E. C. Bairstow, the newly-appointed director, skilfully conducted.

CANTERBURY.—The first of the series of oratorios to be given in the Cathedral during the winter season took place on November 26, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was sung with full orchestral accompaniment. The choir and orchestra were removed to the west end of the nave, thus placing them in a much better position. For the first time in the history of the Cathedral the soprano and contralto solos were sung by ladies instead of by the choristers. The choir numbered about 150 and sang excellently. The principal parts were sung by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Rosina Beynon, Mr. W. Halward and Mr. Dewhurst. Great credit is due to Dr. Perrin for his care in training the choir and his able direction of the performance.

DUNDEE.—Mr. John E. West's cantata 'The Story of Bethlehem' was performed by the Gilfillan Memorial Church Choir in that church on the 13th ult., with orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Peddie Petrie presided at the organ, and Mr. George D. Lamont conducted.

ELV.—The Musical Society gave its annual concert in the Public Hall on the 8th ult., when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' comprised the first part of the programme. Both choir and orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Allen, were fully efficient, and the solo, 'Onaway, awake' was well sung by Mr. B. J. Gentry. In the second part, which was miscellaneous, Miss Eva Hart (vocalist), Miss N. Palmer (pianoforte), Mr. Randolph Hall (violin), and Dr. Wilson (violoncello) took part.

EXETER.—The Oratorio Society gave a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Gounod's 'De Profundis' in the Victoria Hall on the 4th ult. The choir and orchestra numbered 230 performers, and did excellent work under the very able direction of Dr. H. J. Edwards. The solo music was safe in the hands of Madame Emily Squire, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. E. Vinnicombe presided at the organ.

GOOLE.—The Musical Society gave its first concert this season in the Sailors' Institute, on the 8th ult., when Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and a miscellaneous selection were performed, under the direction of Mr. E. Johnson. The solo vocalists were Miss Florry Roscoe, Mr. G. W. Riley, and Mr. Dan Billington.

HIGHTOWN (LIVERSEDGE).—Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria' was performed by the Hightown Wesleyan Choir on the 5th ult. The choir sang with expression, and the solo vocalists were Miss Nellie Clough, Miss Elsie Bradley, Mr. W. E. Pearson and Mr. J. W. Calverley. Mr. Frederick Houldershaw accompanied on the organ and Mr. William H. Wright conducted with care.

MANNINGHAM (Bradford).—The Salem Musical Union gave its first concert of the season on the 14th ult. in the Assembly Hall, when Coleridge-Taylor's Cantata 'Meg Blane' was the chief feature of the programme. The principal vocalists were Miss Bertha Pinder (in the Cantata), Miss Mary Tapp, Mr. Charles Blagbro, and Mr. J. H. Hill. Mr. J. Paget Priestley conducted.

PORT SUNLIGHT.—The Philharmonic Society gave its inaugural concert on the 11th ult. The programme, which included Sullivan's 'O Gladsome Light,' Mendelssohn's '114th Psalm,' and several part-songs, gave evidence of careful training by the able honorary conductor, Mr. John Cheshire. The orchestra was responsible for Leutner's 'Festal' and Rossini's 'William Tell' Overtures, both capitally played.

LINCOLN.—The Musical Society, under the conductorship of Dr. G. J. Bennett, gave an extremely good performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on the 2nd ult. The choir numbered 150, and there was an orchestra of 60 performers, led by Mr. Edward O'Brien. The principal vocalists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Edna Thornton, Messrs. Charles Saunders, Charles Tree, and L. W. Endersby. The second part of the programme included Dr. Bennett's eight-part arrangement of Pearsall's 'Sir Patrick Spens,' to which the fine choir did full justice.

READING.—A concert was given in the Town Hall by the Gentlemen of St. George's Chapel Royal Choir and His Majesty's Private Chapel on November 24. The part-singing was, needless to say, admirable, and included Mendelssohn's 'To the sons of art,' Horsley's 'Come, gentle zephyr,' Webbe's 'Wanton gales,' Spofforth's 'Come, bounteous May,' Hatton's 'Summer eve,' Elgar's 'After many a dusty mile' and 'It's oh, to be a wild wind,' and other well-known part-music. Miss Mabel Manson and Miss Henrietta Godwin contributed vocal and violin solos respectively. A special feature of the concert was the splendid performance of Guilmant's 'March aux flambeaux' on the organ by Sir Walter Parratt, who also accompanied several of the pieces and conducted the concerted music. — The Philharmonic Society held its first concert this season on the 9th ult., when an excellent performance of 'The Golden Legend' was given at the Town Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss May Hanker, Mr. Harold Wilde and Mr. Charles Tree. An excellent orchestra, led by Mr. A. Burnett, was engaged, Mr. W. D. Boseley assisted as organist, and Dr. Read conducted. Mr. W. H. Strickland, the late conductor, was presented a few days prior to the concert with an address, and a testimonial in the form of a cheque for one hundred guineas, after having served the Society for the period of forty years.

SIDCUP.—The Musical Society opened its twenty-fifth season in the Public Hall on the 7th ult., when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed. The work of the choir and also that of the orchestra reached a high standard, especially in the more dramatic choruses. The vocalists included Miss Bayley Harris, Miss L. Dinelly, Mr. Braxton Smith, and Mr. Bertram Mills. The leader of the orchestra was Mr. Ernest Bloxham, and the conductor Mr. A. E. Butterworth, who is to be congratulated on the success of his efforts to provide good music in this locality.

SOUTHPORT.—The Choral Society gave its first concert of the season in the Cambridge Hall on the 11th ult., when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Symphonie Pathétique' were performed. The latter was given for the first time in Southport, and the specially selected orchestra gave a fine rendering under Mr. J. C. Clarke's baton. The solo vocalists were Miss Fanny Chetham and Mr. Webster Millar.

STAFFORD.—A crowded audience assembled in the Borough Hall on the 15th ult., when the combined choirs of the Stafford and Uttoxeter Choral Unions performed Elgar's 'King Olaf.' The vocalists were Miss May Eaves, Mr. Tom Child, and Mr. Watkin Mills. The band and chorus responded well to the baton of Mr. Herbert Drury who ably conducted the performance.

WORCESTER.—The Musical Society gave its first concert of the season on the 8th ult., when the first part of the programme comprised selections from Handel's 'Samson.' The miscellaneous second part included the part-songs 'Over the sea,' Mendelssohn; 'Merry boys, away,' Bishop; and 'My sweet sweeting,' by W. H. Bell, the latter being warmly encored. The choir sang these and the choruses in the oratorio with admirable effect under the very able direction of Mr. W. Mann Dyson, and the orchestra was also fully efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss May Eaves, Miss Cissy Darling, Mr. Charles Child and Mr. Ernest Davies.

Answers to Correspondents.

J. F. M.—You might get a copy of 'The Anglican Tune Book' (second hand) from Mr. Reeves, Charing Cross Road. The 'Sarum Hymnal' (if in print) could be procured from Messrs. Brown and Co., Salisbury. We do not know of any hymn-tunes or carols composed by Mr. Henry Gadsby except those you mention—tune No. 392 in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' and a carol in Messrs. Novello's Series.

REX.—(1) It is as easy to secure a rhetorical separation at the commas in singing as it is in spoken declamation. Indeed, we question whether a good elocutionist would take breath at the commas in the example you send us. A moment's silence does not necessarily impel a breath. (2) The song ('Kathleen Mavourneen') is often sung by contraltos. We are so used to such dramatic incongruities as not to notice them.

CESTRIAN.—Braham's song 'The Death of Nelson' was written for, and probably sung by him in his opera 'The Americans,' produced at the Lyceum Theatre, April 17, 1811. As Nelson did not die until the year 1805, the song must have been composed after Méhul's 'Chant du départ' in 1794 (see Grove's Dictionary i, 440b). We cannot say if the first part of Braham's song is a conscious or an unconscious plagiarism of Méhul's air.

A. F. T.—Miss Fanny Davies made her first appearance in England, after she had completed her studies in Germany, at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concert of October 17, 1885, when she gave a fine performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G. We regret that we cannot give any information concerning the lady vocalist you mention.

M. H. V. M.—(1) The Pastorale and Capriccio (Nos. 9 and 20) are contained in Breitkopf and Haertel's 'Sixty Sonatas' of Scarlatti. Quite right. No. 30 of the same set is 'The Cat's Fugue.' (2) The term 'Biroulki' is equivalent to Bagatellen—small pieces. See the pieces by Liadoff in No. 41 of Novello's Pianoforte Albums.

CONSTANT READER.—(a) For Soloists: 'Randegger's Primer' (Novello's Series of Primers, price 4s.) will perhaps suit you. (b) For Choral Societies: 'Choral Society Vocalisation' by Stainer (Novello's Primers, price 2s.) is a full course. 'Hints on Choir Training' by W. G. McNaught (Novello, price 2d.) may also be found useful.

CONTRALTO.—There are not many opportunities of obtaining a remunerative engagement in a church choir in London, or the provinces. Scotland might prove a more fruitful field, as mixed choirs prevail in the Presbyterian churches there, and Mr. Carnegie's generosity in the matter of organs has been the means of developing music in church services north of the Tweed.

ILFORD.—Examiners are sometimes lenient; but we doubt if those who sit in judgment upon candidates for the Associateship of the Royal College of Organists would appreciate Scotson Clark's 'Chorus of Angels.' They might, for instance, prefer something by Bach. The march you mention is hardly suitable.

P. A.—Triple time is usually conducted—down, right, up—though the second beat is sometimes to the left. Some conductors, however, adopt a sort of rotary method—as a Yorkshire fiddler once observed of his conductor (or misconductor), 'It beats me what he be a-beating.'

J. H. P.—Dr. McNaught recommends the following heads and marks for solo-singing adjudications:—Correctness, Time, Tune, 10; Voice Production, Tone, Intonation, 20; Attack, Pronunciation, Enunciation, 10; Expression, Tempo, 15; General Effect, 15—Total 70 marks.

ENQUIRER.—Candidates must be Associates or Shareholders of the Tonic Sol-fa College and, after being proposed as examiners and elected by the Executive Committee, they must pay a Registration fee. Apply to the Secretary, Tonic Sol-fa College, 27, Finsbury Square.

CARMEN.—(1) Asger Hamerik (born 1843) is a famous Danish composer. His works include six Symphonies, five Suites, three Operas, and many choral works. His May Dance, for four voices, is well known. (2) Max Bruch's chorus 'The Holy Family,' may be had from Messrs. Novello.

H. S.—(1) Start with Stainer's 'Harmony Primer,' and then go on to Bridge and Sawyer's 'Harmony Course'; but you will doubtless consult your violin teacher on the subject. The secretary of the Royal Academy of Music will give you full information as to the diploma of L.R.A.M.

TROUBLE.—To a tenor with a good voice who has acquired the habit of singing through his nose, the best advice is 'don't.' Sing scale passages, first on a closed vowel, oo, then gradually open the mouth till you get a more open vowel, ai, then open the mouth wider and sing the open vowel, ah. Take long breaths and sing softly.

HYMN.—There is always a market for a good thing, but whether your 'Fifty odd hymns, &c. (words and music)' come under that qualification it is not for us to say, as we have not seen them. There would be no harm in your submitting them to a publisher. The 'several songs, anthems, &c.' from your pen might be similarly submitted, though it is impossible for us to forecast the result.

DOUBLE DIAPASON.—Thanks for your suggestion that we should announce forthcoming organ recitals. We find it quite a sufficient tax on our space to mention, even with only sample pieces, some of the many that are given month by month.

H. J. R.—(1) The slow movement and scherzo of Sullivan's Symphony in E have been arranged for pianoforte solo; they are in the press, and will shortly be issued. The 'Ouverture di ballo' is only arranged for pianoforte, four hands, not solo. (2) We cannot say.

R. H. W.—The word 'Noi' in an orchestral part occurring after a cue means 'we'—'we have to play again.' It is not used in modern printed music. (2) The two chants Nos. 60 and 243 in the St. Paul's Cathedral Chant Book are both by Goodenough.

E. A.—It is impossible for us to give an idea of the value of a Stainer violin, although 'it is in good tone and condition.' Submit it to experts like Messrs. W. Hill and Sons, New Bond Street.

W. C. T.—If the young lady in whom you are interested wishes to study the pianoforte on the Continent, she could not do better than become a student at the Scharwenka Conservatoire, Berlin.

C.—Dr. Hulbert in his primer 'Breathing for voice production' does not claim originality. He simply shows the scientific basis of a method of breathing that is opposed to others in vogue and advocated.

M. H.—Your best plan will be to advertise. We cannot give an opinion upon 'the saleable value of a good teaching connection.'

F. H.—Schubert wrote all his songs actually to verses all written by German poets: the words were not added subsequent to the composition of the music.

A WINDSOR READER.—You are quite right. The great god Pan may have been descended 'From mighty Pans,' but 'Pans' is probably a slip of the pen for 'pens.'

A. R. C. O.—How to start a Male-Voice Choir,' by W. J. Kidner (Curwen), is no doubt the book you need. It furnishes much useful and practical information on the subject.

D. J.—(1) Mackenzie's Benedictus and Handel's 'Sweet bird' are not arranged for pianoforte solo.

Erratum.—In our last issue (p. 820) we inadvertently did an injustice to 'Phillis' in saying that she 'died her tresses black.' We apologise to her and to Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast, the composer of 'Phillis dyes her tresses black.' May it be long before Mr. Prendergast's charming part-song dies.

ORATORIOS

BY
GEO. SHINN, MUS. BAC., CANTAB.

THE CAPTIVES OF BABYLON

Price 2s.; Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

The sale of this Oratorio has been very large and is still increasing. It has been performed in nearly all the important towns in England, and repeated in many places several times.

It has also been used in America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and other places abroad.

LAZARUS OF BETHANY

VERY SUITABLE FOR EASTER OR GENERAL USE

Price 2s.; Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, 3s. 6d.; Sol-fa, 1s.

This work was published several years after "The Captives of Babylon," and has also had a good sale. In the opinion of the composer (and many who have performed the work) it is in every respect quite equal if not superior to the "Captives of Babylon," and will be found most interesting to both performers and audience.

Conductors and Choirmasters who are unacquainted with either of these Oratorios, would do well to give their attention to them, when requiring a new work that will be attractive and pleasing without being very difficult.

Orchestral Parts published to both works.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the “Calvary” Chorus (“Haste, ye souls”), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS

WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

253 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

PREFACE.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason, the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern, so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

The lack of certain well-known hymns in that book and the need of extra hymns for certain occasions are often felt. This is clear from the fact that many supplemental appendixes and leaflets are now used with it, particularly books for mission services, children's use, and other special occasions.

It may be said by many that we already have too many hymns, and that a large number are most unsuitable. There is no subject upon which persons differ more thoroughly than the suitability of different hymns. No two people will ever agree as to all the hymns in any collection. The only way of dealing satisfactorily with this problem seems to be to give a comprehensive compilation, together with guidance as to the character of each hymn. Hence, in the index of first lines a letter has been prefixed to each hymn giving an indication as to its characteristic—whether a hymn of direct praise, a prayer, or sentimental, historical, etc., etc. Those who object to hymns of any particular class can, therefore, easily avoid their use.

Guided by these two principles, hymns have been included for the following reasons:—

1. Hymns which, being in constant request, are inserted, not necessarily because of their merit, but rather because they have been found to be of real use in many cases.
2. Since the formation of other hymn books, much greater prominence has been given to music in connection with Choral Celebrations, and with this has grown a want of more hymns, especially short ones of one or two verses for different parts of the service.
3. So also has there grown a demand for further hymns on Almsgiving, for Processionals of a greater length than usual, for Harvest, Flower, and Mission Services, besides other special occasions.
4. Finally, it is felt by very many to be a mistake to accustom children to the use of a Children's hymn book which will be discarded when they have grown older. Far better is it to accustom them at once, when young, to love the hymn book which they will use in after life. For this purpose a few more children's hymns than are supplied in other books seem to be wanted.

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised. Mr. Gaul was engaged on this, his latest work, for about three years, and we believe that all who hear it will agree that the time was very profitably spent."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND
EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS
FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY,
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

STOOD THE MOURNFUL MOTHER WEeping

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"We know nothing of the composer, but he must be possessed of some courage to produce an English version of the 'Stabat Mater.' The text is translated by the Rev. J. Monsell, D.D. The work is divided into the usual ten numbers, with slight modifications. The opening chorus, 'Stood the mournful mother weeping,' is in F minor, and has a striking and passionate introduction. With the entry of the voices, the treatment is severe, and in the ecclesiastical style, but the expression is modern. The first part is employed in the last chorus, 'When my mortal body, dying,' but then changing to the major at 'Take my soul to Paradise,' and concluding with a well-worked-out fugue at 'To adore Thee, my God.' No. 6, 'Holy Father, let affliction,' is one of the most elaborate numbers. It is for soprano solo and chorus. In this the influence of Dvořák seems apparent, as that of Rossini appears in No. 4, 'For the sins of each offender,' but there is no direct imitation. The composer has individuality, and is a skilled musician. No. 9, 'Make me with His stripes be stricken,' beginning with a tenor solo followed by a solo for bass, and concluding with a quartet, is a fine piece of writing; and the whole composition reveals not only a high aim, but the ability to achieve it."—Birmingham Daily Post.

Published separately:

No. 5. CHORUS (unaccompanied), 'JESU, FOUNT OF LOVE,'
Price 1½d.

"No. 5, 'Jesu, Fount of Love,' is a chorus, anthem-like in character, the sensuous harmony of which cannot fail to touch the feelings, if it be well sung, without accompaniment, as suggested."—Coventry Herald.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

CLARISSE MALLARD'S SONG-CYCLE FOR THE CHILDREN

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

SONGS, DANCES, and TABLEAUX VIVANTS. SUITABLE FOR SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENTS, ETC.

"A 'Song-Cycle for Children' on 'The Seasons,' words and music by Clarisse Mallard (Breitkopf and Härtel), can be heartily recommended. It consists of four numbers, one devoted to each season, with chorus in unison. The melodies are simple and attractive, and the verses, more especially of 'Winter,' are an unhackneyed treatment of a well-worn subject."—Musical News, August 29, 1903.

"'Song-Cycle for the Children,' by Clarisse Mallard. 1s. 6d. Some charming little songs, and if performed in the way suggested will prove most popular."—Nonconformist Musical Journal, August 1, 1903.

"Clarisse Mallard's 'Song-Cycle for the Children,' entitled 'The Seasons' (Breitkopf and Härtel), will appeal to young and old alike, the music and words being well written and very taking to boot."—Musical Opinion, August 1, 1903.

By the same Composer:

Two New Songs, entitled MEMORIES and PETITE.

"Nothing but the highest praise can be accorded to 'Memories,' by Clarisse Mallard. It is very beautiful. 'Petite,' also by Clarisse Mallard, is, in different fashion, as charming. The words of both songs are by Fred. A. Farwell."—The Lady, September 10, 1903.

THE SPIRIT OF THE STORM

See, how the lightnings flash!
 Hark how the thunder crashes!
 Over the doomed barque the angry billow dashes!
 Vainly for help men pray,
 Cowering in wild dismay:
 All hope is flown; they sadly own, the mighty deep I sway!

Book of words, with Analytical and Descriptive Notes and nearly 100 musical examples, by A. J. JAEGER, 1s.

The right of Public representation and performance of this work is reserved; all applications with reference to performances should be addressed to the Publishers.

THE TIMES, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

Dr. Elgar has treated his subject with a fitting sense of dignity and awe, and everywhere his reverence, sincerity, and conviction are clearly manifested. Much of his writing is in the best manner of genuine Church music, much of it is in the right sense mysterious, as it should be. And precisely because it is the direct outcome of conviction so it carries conviction with it. . . . Dr. Elgar has succeeded in a huge task before which most composers might well have quailed.

DAILY TELEGRAPH, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

It is a good omen that at last a man of our own race and nation has come to the extreme front and drawn to himself the wondering admiration of all who profess and call themselves musicians and lovers of the art. There is something impressive in the position now occupied by Elgar. He is not an intriguer. He does not compass heaven and earth making proselytes to believe in his own powers, neither does he trim his sails to catch the varying breezes of popular opinion. Having something to say in the fashion which appears to him best, he says it straight out, and leaves the issue to the Fates. Yet, though sturdily independent, courting nobody, he now occupies the position of a man with whom most people are determined to be pleased. There must be something in him—much more than common—to bring about this result. . . . This remarkable Oratorio is worth any amount of care in the handling. It is not a work of a mere trafficker in musical goods. Its sincerity is unquestionable, the loftiness of its aim cannot be denied, and its strength must be taken into account, whatever may be thought of its methods.

DAILY TELEGRAPH, OCTOBER 16, 1903.

Leaving consideration of method for the greater satisfaction of touching upon evidence of the lofty powers with which the composer is endowed, and by the strength of which he has taken a foremost place amongst the composers of the world—perhaps even more than in "Gerontius," where the subject was less varied and expansive—those powers assert themselves in the new work. . . . Whether he shows us the ineffable gentleness and dignity of Christ, the penitence of Mary Magdalene, the despair of Judas—whether he picture storm or calm, suggests the tragedy of Golgotha or the glory of the Ascension, we are conscious of power, sincerity, and truth.

STANDARD, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

There can be no question concerning the lofty purpose of the composer and his consummate mastery of the resources of his art. The work is the product of fervid imagination controlled and guided by keen intellectual perception, a masterful expression in music of spiritual convictions, and in its essence a sacred music drama permeated with the spirit of the preacher. . . . The keynote of Dr. Elgar's work is lofty mysticism, suggesting the spiritual in a peculiar and often strangely beautiful manner.

MORNING POST, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

The deep sincerity which pervades the work, the splendid technique, the power, and, in many instances, the great charm that are revealed demand immediate recognition before any criticism be passed. . . . As an expression of lofty purpose, as an example of consummate musicianship, and as revealing both imagination and originality there can be but one opinion. The instrumentation of the work is a study in itself.

GLOBE, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

Dr. Elgar's command of every orchestral resource is proverbial, and in "The Apostles" he handles vast choral masses with no less signal success, and his solo writing, if not exactly melodious in the old-fashioned sense, is always dramatic and expressive. . . . Those who know Dr. Elgar's music best will understand how fully he has availed himself of the many opportunities given him by the most moving story the world has ever known, what treasures of musical science he has expended upon it, and with what dazzling resources of orchestration he has enriched it. . . . The work must be pronounced a worthy successor to "The Dream of Gerontius."

PALL MALL GAZETTE, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

A masterpiece; an invaluable contribution to the art of the world; a score of pure gold throughout—a work so great, so remote from the common things of the earth, that to follow the composer into the distant fastnesses of his mind is, at all events, on a first hearing, something of a heroic virtue. He tries one, not because he wishes to compel endurance, but because he has carved out his way, and it is nothing to him whether you follow or not. There is the secret of his wonderful art: it is nothing to him if you take his score or reject it; and there follows the inevitable result that immense indifference invariably conquers those who are eager. Immense indifference, however, implies a sort of personal work which, granted a powerful brain as the origin from which that work springs, makes for ultimate triumph; and such power was certainly displayed to-day. . . . I write in this somewhat ecstatic strain because the work deserves it. . . . And such music as rises to Elgar's—to this great master's—heart is of the finest possible quality; it is of "meaning most decisive."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE, OCTOBER 17, 1903.

Without any doubt "The Apostles" is worthy of great and admiring attention, a superb instance of English imagination and musical craftsmanship. I yield to none in my satisfaction that we have a composer so able and so masterful that he compels inquiry and commands applause. . . . I find "The Apostles" in some respects in advance of anything Elgar has previously done; as a specimen of mere mastery of material it shows a surer grasp, and though there is the same effort to impress by prodigies of polyphony, which amount to but little in the end, the effort here is more successfully made.

OBSERVER, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

As the days pass since I was one of a closely-packed and deeply attentive audience in the massive town hall the conviction increases in my mind that I was present at the birth of not only a masterpiece, but an epoch-marking work in the history of oratorio. Musically it may be described as a sacred drama on the lines of Wagner's "Parsifal." . . . That the motives are always appropriate may unhesitatingly be said; that the passages in which they are used with special purpose carry conviction is undoubted, and that the composer has gone beyond all forms and reached the bedrock of musical expression is incontrovertible.

SUNDAY TIMES, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

The choral writing in the "Apostles" is among the finest ever written, at any time, by any musician. Its difficulty, as those who know the trend of Dr. Elgar's genius will need no telling, is enormous; but the complexities he so delights in inventing are so obviously the outcome of a desire to express convictions (artistic and spiritual) that none who value sincerity in art would dare suggest that this great representative of British music should curb the fire of his Pegasus, or (to change our metaphor) attempt to trim his sails to the breeze of critical opinion. . . . "The Apostles" is real music—that is to say, music which means something; music which expresses the inner sense of the words to which it is set.

REFEREE, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

I very much doubt, however, if two-thirds of those who were present apprehended the greatness of the music they were listening to. Small blame to them, however, for the work is laid out on the same lines as Wagner's "Parsifal," and the themes have consequently to become familiar before the significance of the music can be wholly understood. That which may be said to have been apparent to all was its spirituality. It is this which gives the music its distinctive individuality. . . . The deep impression made by the work was shown by the momentary silence which ensued after the last note had died away, for although a stupendous tonal climax is worked up, the end is calm and gentle, as the spirit of the faith the music illustrates.

LESSONS IN HARMONICS

FOR VIOLINISTS

AND OTHER MUSICAL STUDENTS

WITH NOTES ON SOUND AND RESULTANTS

BY

C. EGERTON LOWE.

PREFACE.

Although there exist many and varied books dealing with sound in its different aspects, there are none, so far as the author of the present little work is aware, devoted to the subject of Harmonics treated experimentally in a simple and elementary form.

Of all matters connected with music, perhaps one of the most interesting and fascinating is the wonderful power and influence exercised by harmonics in determining what is known as the tone-colour (Klangfarbe) of various instruments and sounds. Students and others who think of harmonics only as peculiar effects produced by players upon stringed instruments, and who have made no attempt to analyse the constituent parts of so-called single sounds (which are compound sounds), can hardly form an idea of the marvellous variety which exists in tone-colour.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his "Suite Venitienne" at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. . . . In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

MUSIC FOR THE HOME

(HAUS MUSIK).

IN TWO ARRANGEMENTS:

A. PIANOFORTE, STRING QUINTET, AND FLUTE.

B. PIANOFORTE, HARMONIUM, STRING QUINTET, AND FLUTE.

Any Wind Instrument and Instruments of Percussion may participate by playing their original parts as published in our well-known Orchestral Library.

Complete Catalogue, with Prices, will be sent (Post-free) on application.

The new group of our Orchestral Library, which we are now publishing as "Haus-Musik," is to supply a long-felt want. It is intended to enable Amateur Orchestras, especially in small towns where a full Orchestra cannot be mustered, to perform classical orchestral compositions in an arrangement as nearly as possible approaching the original. The String Quintet and Flute parts have been retained in their original form as published in our "Orchestral-Bibliothek," able performers on those instruments being easily obtained in most homes. The other wind instruments, however, for which players are not so easily to be found, have been put together in an arrangement for Harmonium, this instrument being the most suitable substitute for wind instruments, and, combined with the Pianoforte, will represent the peculiar qualities of these to a great extent. Any wind instrument may be added ad libitum and played from the original part. Should no harmonium be obtainable, the arrangement A (with Pianoforte Solo) must be used.

THE COLLECTION INCLUDES:—

SYMPHONIES

MISS LILLIE WORMALD

CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL UNION CONCERTS,
GLASGOW.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Glasgow Herald, November 30, 1903.

"It is seldom so fine a singer as Miss Lillie Wormald comes to Glasgow unannounced by preliminary paragraphs. Miss Wormald has a voice of beautiful quality, which she uses with wonderful skill. . . . The audience were delighted. Miss Wormald had to return to the platform many times after all her solos."

Glasgow Daily Record, November 30, 1903.

"The efforts of Miss Lillie Wormald, the vocalist of the evening, well deserved the tribute which they received from the audience. She possesses a charming voice, of considerable flexibility, and was heard to the utmost advantage in the 'Scene et Légende Hindoue,' from Delibes' 'Lakmé.' Her other contributions comprised items by Bizet, Dvorák, and E. Dell'Acqua, which evoked an ovation of applause. Dr. Cowen's 'A Birthday Song' was conceded as an encore."

"CREATION."

Glasgow Herald, December 23, 1903.

"In the absence of Madame Lucille Hill, Miss Lillie Wormald took the soprano solos. . . . In the florid solo parts she was delightful. 'With verdure clad' and 'On mighty pens' were little short of perfect. The duets were also most enjoyable."

Glasgow Daily Mail, December 23, 1903.

"Miss Lillie Wormald possesses a beautiful voice and sings with artistic method. . . . 'With verdure clad' and 'On mighty pens' were almost irreproachable."

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

Manchester Guardian, October 21, 1903.

"Miss Lillie Wormald—the singer of the occasion—gave four very charming examples of the 'Brautlieder' by Cornelius, her rendering being well studied, apt in expression, and in every way artistic."

FREDRICA RICHARDSON

(CONTRALTO).

"With much pleasure do I desire to record my very high opinion of Miss Fredrica Richardson's great gifts and attainments as a vocalist. Her voice, with an extensive compass ranging from contralto into the mezzo-soprano region, is full, rich, and commanding in its tone and power. Her phrasing and methods of expression are definite, artistic, and eloquent. I am sure that a career of distinction and usefulness awaits Miss Richardson in the oratorio and concert-room departments of her art."

(Signed), E. H. TURPIN,

Hon. Sec., R.C.O.;

Warden, Trinity Coll., London;

Examiner, College of Preceptors, &c.

COVENTRY MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"ORPHEUS" (GLUCK).

Coventry Standard says: "A feature of the performance was the artistic rendering of the most exacting character of Orpheus by Miss Fredrica Richardson. Miss Richardson possesses a charming contralto voice of beautiful quality, which she used with much dramatic power. The recitatives were declaimed in such a manner as to show a keen conception of the character, and the aits were sung with an impassioned earnestness which the audience was not slow to appreciate."

Midland Daily Telegraph says: "A notable feature of this part of the concert was the fine singing of the difficult contralto part of Orpheus by Miss Fredrica Richardson, who was especially successful in the aria 'Che Faro.'"

RUGBY PHILHARMONIC.

Rugby News says: "'Slowly, slowly' introduced Ursula (Miss Fredrica Richardson) to the audience, and she received quite an ovation at the close of her solo, which was again accorded her for her subsequent efforts. . . . 'Virgin, who lovest' was exquisitely given."

Northampton Herald says: "The exquisite mellowness and refinement of her beautiful contralto voice more than sufficed to earn for her the encores—including a double recall—which rewarded her efforts. Each of her songs—C. Wilson's 'Let me be thine,' the old English ballad 'Love is a sickness,' and Somervell's 'Shepherd's Cradle Song'—enabled her to demonstrate the many fine qualities of her vocal organ. 'Annie Laurie,' given as an encore, has seldom been more beautifully sung, while her gracefully tender rendering of 'Still wie die Nacht' was quite worthy of the double recall."

BALLADS.

Midland News says: "An excellent programme had been arranged, comprising many of the compositions from the pen of Dr. Cowen. Their exposition was entrusted to Miss Fredrica Richardson, of London, a contralto of rare attainments. Her selections were chosen entirely from Dr. Cowen's works, the composer playing the accompaniments. 'The Promise of Life' was given in a manner rarely heard."

That in recitative singing he has few equals, his treatment of the 'Baal' numbers showed. For 'Is not His word' he was twice recalled. 'It is enough,' an air which displayed the finer qualities of his voice, received a truly artistic interpretation, and again the artist had to bow his acknowledgments. 'For the mountains,' though a less popular number, was not less finely sung."—Guide, December 24, 1903."Is a favourite here, but gained fresh honours by his latest appearance. PAUL."—HOLMFIRTH CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Proved once more what a sterling artist he is by the way in which he gave his solos. 'Consume them all' was given with first-rate style, the fiery indignation and the appeal to 'let them feel Thy power,' being vividly portrayed; the aria, 'O God have mercy,' received a thorough, appropriate, prayerful and pleading rendition, and the full meaning of words and music was clearly brought out; while the air, 'I praise thee, O Lord' was given with joyous freedom and strength."—Huddersfield Examiner, December 4, 1903.

His fine singing was the treat of the evening."—Coventry Chronicle, Jan. 9, 1904."MESSIAH."—"Mr. Coleman was in his very best form, and sang with much 'verve' and finish his many numbers. The varied range gave great scope to his dramatic powers, and the way he raged in 'Why do the nations' was a revelation to many. His delicacy of treatment in other instances was most marked, and he has considerably added to his already high reputation."—Derby Express, Dec. 31, 1903."CREATION."—"Mr. Coleman added to his laurels by his magnificent singing of the Raphael solos. ROUND ABOUT SOHO.

If ye hounte at ye hare, ye shall say, atte uncoupling, hors de couple, avaint! And after, three times, Sohow! Sohow! Sohow!

RELIQUE ANTIQUÆ.

Proteus—Run, boy, run, run, and seek him out.

Launce—So-ho! so-ho!

SHAKESPEARE: Two Gentlemen of Verona.

In the days of Good Queen Bess the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London Town were wont to periodically inspect the conduits at Tyburn and elsewhere. Tyburn (tya-burne) was then practically in the country; its site is now the Marble Arch. On their homeward way the City fathers would cross the fields lying between what is now Oxford Street and Charing Cross. 'Sohow! Sohow! Sohow!' would be their cry as they spurred on their fiery steeds after a hare, which, perchance, was run to earth close to the spot where, some three centuries later, Richard Wagner found his lost dog. In those olden times there may have been preserves in these fields; but to-day the only Soho preserves are those manufactured by Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell.

The origin of the word Soho as a place-name has given rise to much discussion. It is now generally agreed that its derivative is the hare-hunting cry prefixed to this article. A glance at the map of London prepared by Ralph Agas in 1578 (of which we give a section in facsimile below) shows the open sporting ground already referred to. St. Giles-in-the-fields and St. Martin-in-the-fields certainly did not belie their names as they do now. St. Giles was then an isolated village, while the hedge-bound 'Waye to Vxbridge' is now our busy Oxford Street. St. Martin's Lane and Haymarket explain their own designations; but it is difficult to realize the open-air laundry operations pictured in Agas's Elizabethan map. Soho Fields began to be built upon towards the end of the 17th century—e.g., Frith Street (named after Fryth, a builder) about 1680; Dean Street in 1681; and Wardour Street (named after Henry, third Lord Arundel of Wardour), in 1686. These building operations were carried on in spite of a Royal Proclamation of April 7, 1671, which prohibited the further erection of habitations in the fields of 'So-Hoe,' as 'they choak up the air of His Majesty's palaces and parks, and endanger the total loss of the waters which, by expensive conduits, are conveyed from these fields to His Majesty's Palace at Whitehall.' Poor Charles II.!

The neighbourhood at once became aristocratic. Four Ambassadors resided in Soho Square. This green spot was formerly named King's Square, after Gregory King, a famous architect of the time, who had much to do with the laying out and building developments in the district. Where the Rectory, Women's Hospital, and Bateman's Buildings now stand (at the South side of Soho Square) was the mansion of the famous

Duke of Monmouth. The Duke of Portland, the Earl of Carlisle, and other scions of the nobility were Sohoites, as were Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Alderman Beckford, the Bishops of London and Salisbury, and others—in fact, much of the rank and fashion of the 18th century. Evelyn, writing in November, 1690, says:—‘I went to London with my family to winter at Soho, in the great Square’! Addison, in the second number of The Spectator (Friday, March 2, 1711), writes: ‘The first of our society is a Gentleman of Worcestershire, of ancient descent, a Baronet, his name is Sir Roger de Coverley. His great grandfather was inventor of that famous country-dance which is called after him. . . . When he is in town, he lives in Soho-Square.’ This terpsichorean reference naturally leads us to make mention of the celebrated Mrs. Theresa Cornelys and the masquerades and Gerrard Street, a thoroughfare in which Boswell lodged, and wherein Burke and Charles Kemble resided. In this street the Literary Club associated with the names of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson and Sir John Hawkins, met at the Turk’s Head. Other curious tavern signs in Soho are ‘The Hercules Pillars,’ ‘Two Chairmen,’ and ‘York Minster’! In Frith Street we meet with such well-known names as William Hazlitt, Sir Samuel Romilly (born there), and Edmund Kean. Newport Street can claim Sir Joshua Reynolds and Josiah Wedgwood as former inhabitants. Sir James Thornhill, Mrs. Thrale (before her marriage) and Horne Tooke resided in Dean Street.

The musical associations with Soho are full of interest. First and foremost is the name of Mozart. In May, 1765, the genius-boy (he was then eight concerts she gave at Carlisle House, formerly situated on the east side of Soho Square. J. C. Bach (known as the English Bach, the eleventh son of the great Cantor) and C. F. Abel, most famous of viol-da-gamba players, directed her subscription concerts in 1765 and in subsequent years. But the fame of Mrs. Cornelys is associated with her Masquerades, at which the smart set of that day disported themselves, as may be seen from the above illustration of one of those 18th century frivolities.

Soho is literally soaked in associations of ‘famous and infamous men and women’—to adopt a designation of the present rector, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell.* It is only possible within the limits of our space to mention a few of these celebrities. Dryden was an early inhabitant of years old) lodged with his father and sister at the house of a Mr. Williamson, who carried on the business of a Wax and Sperma Cæti-chandler; Mr. Williamson’s habitation, which stood on the site of No. 21, Frith Street (then called Thrift Street), has since been pulled down. The two Mozart children here gave exhibitions of their interpretative skill. In the advertisements of these musical ‘At homes’ the boy and girl were described as ‘Prodigies of Nature,’ and the public were informed that—

Tickets may be had at 5s. each of Mr. Mozart, at Mr. Williamson’s, Thrift-street, Soho; where such Ladies and Gentlemen, who chuse to come themselves, and take either Tickets, or the Sonatas composed by this Boy, and dedicated to her Majesty (Price 10s. 6d.) will find the Family at home every Day in the Week, from Twelve to Two o’Clock; and have an Opportunity of putting his Talents to a more particular Proof by giving him any thing to play at Sight, or any Music without a Bass, which he will write upon the Spot without recurring to his Harpsichord.

* ‘Men and Women of Soho, famous and infamous.’ By the Rev. J. H. Cardwell and others. London: Truslove and Hanson, 153, Oxford Street, 1903. A most interesting and valuable compilation, of which one volume only has as yet been published—‘Actors, authors, clergy, dramatists, entertainers and engravers.’

The 'Sonatas composed by this Boy' were issued at the time with the following title, which we give literatim et verbatim :—

Six Sonates pour le Clavecin qui peuvent se jouer avec L'accompagnement de violon ou flûte traversière. Très humblement dédiées à sa Majesté Charlotte, Reine de la Grande Bretagne, composées par J. G. WOLFGANG MOZART, Agé de huit Ans. Oeuvre III.

London : Printed for the Author and sold at his Lodgings at Mr. Williamson in Thrift Street Soho.

One of Dr. Arne's numerous residences was in West Street, Soho. Mrs. Billington was born in Litchfield Street, while Madame Vestris drew her first breath in Dean Street. Bach and Abel (already mentioned) lived next door to Carlisle House. They both came to England to try their fortunes together, and were first received by Angelo, of fencing fame. 'Well do I remember,' records the younger Angelo, 'the delightful evenings which for years were frequent under my parental roof, when they (Bach and Abel) with Bartolozzi formed a little friendly party, and amused themselves with dancing, music, and conversation until long after midnight.' Lampe resided in King Street when he published his London : Engraved and printed for the Author, and sold at his Lodgings at the Golden Heart, in King Street near St. Ann's Church, Soho.

Handel must have frequently visited Soho. His pupil, amanuensis and secretary, John Christopher Smith, lived at Meard's Court, off Dean Street. As a young man of twenty-two he issued a work, to which Handel subscribed, entitled :—

Suites de Pièces pour le Clavecin. Composées par J. C. SMITH. London : Printed and Sold by the Author in Meard's Court, near St. Ann's Church, Old Soho.

In Meard's Street, Burkhardt Tschudi, the founder of the Broadwood business, manufactured his harpsichords before he migrated (in 1742) to the well-known premises in Great Pulteney Street. And we must not forget that Richard Wagner sojourned eight days in Soho during his first visit to England in 1839. He stayed at the 'King's Arms Tavern,' in Old Compton Street, where he suffered a martyrdom from the organ-grinders.

The business of Messrs. Novello has been located in Soho for nearly three-quarters of a century. The premises at 67, Frith Street, in 1830, were certainly not palatial—'a couple of parlour windows and a glass door, with a few title-pages bearing composers' names of sterling merit, and Vincent Novello as editor.' It was here that Mendelssohn, Malibran, Charles Lamb and many others spent pleasant hours under Vincent Novello's hospitable roof. In 1834 a removal was made to Dean Street, and although in 1867 the headquarters of the business were transferred to Berners Street, the printing works remained in Soho, and still continue there in the extensive buildings close to Wardour Street, where a portion of them occupies the site of a chapel built for the French refugees in the reign of Charles II.

Before passing to the consideration of the Parish Church, reference must be made to the changes the district has undergone since Soho Fields were covered with bricks and mortar. We have spoken of its fashionable environment and the devotees of literature and art whose names have immortalized the district. Much might be said of the various trades, many of them of an artistic and uncommon nature, did space permit. Soho is now so largely inhabited by foreigners that a few words must be said in regard thereto. As far back as the year 1635, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, a large number of Huguenots fled to Soho. In 1677 the Greek Church in Crown Street (now Charing Cross Road) was built for the Greek colony then settled in the neighbourhood. After the Reign of Terror in 1789 the district was flooded with émigrés, while the Commune of 1871 swelled the already large population of non-native residents. Readers of Dickens's 'A Tale of Two Cities' will recall the passage in which, sitting under the plane-tree of the little Soho garden on the memorable Sunday afternoon of the great thunderstorm, Lucie Manette asks her lover: 'Are these the echoes of all the footsteps that are coming by-and-by into our lives?' The London County Council, by-the-way, has recently and very wisely altered the name of the thoroughfare from Rose Street to Manette Street. The goldbeater's sign alluded to by Dickens is still to be seen.

THE ORIGINAL TOWER OF THE CHURCH.

Soho, as a separate parish carved out of St. Martin-in-the-fields, dates back to 1676-8. The church, consecrated on March 21, 1686, was dedicated to St. Anne, a name doubtless chosen in allusion to the Princess Anne, daughter of James II., afterwards Queen Anne, who had just been betrothed to Prince George of Denmark. For technical reasons the sacred edifice was consecrated before it had been completed. We are told, however, that the Bishop 'made noe scruple of consecrating it, yet he would be ascertained that all the workmen were payd or secured their monie and dues first, and to that end made particular inquiries of the workmen.' Through the kindness of the Rev. J. H. Cardwell we are enabled to give a drawing of the original tower, said to have been modelled from one in Copenhagen. The present tower, erected in 1802, was intended by the architect to provide four clock dials, but as he wished to avoid a simple cube, which might have too closely resembled dice, he modified the structure until the result was a very close imitation of a beer-barrel. The interior of the church, of which we give a photograph, has undergone various restorations. In 1862 the present East window—the work of Messrs. Ward and Hughes, Soho artists of high repute—was inserted, and four years later the organ was transferred from the west gallery to the east end of the church, a portion of the gallery being cut away for its reception.

In 1892 the churchyard—thanks to the public spirit and kindness of the present Rector, as freeholder—was laid out as a public garden. One of the most interesting of the monuments is that to Theodore, King of Corsica, which records:—

Near this place is interred THEODORE, KING OF CORSICA, who died in this parish December XIth MDCCLVI immediately after leaving the King's Bench Prison by the benefit of the Act of Insolvency in consequence of which he registered his kingdom of Corsica for the use of his creditors.

The grave, great teacher, to a level brings Heroes and beggars, galley-slaves and kings;
But Theodore the moral learn'd ere dead;
Fate pour'd its lesson on his living head—
Bestow'd a kingdom and denied him bread.

William Hazlitt, the Essayist (died 1830), is buried in the churchyard: the words 'Grateful and contented' appear on his tombstone. The Registers, dating from the foundation of the parish in 1686, have been carefully re-bound and repaired under the auspices of the present Rector. The baptisms include those of seven princes and princesses between June, 1721, and July, 1751, all being the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who lived in Leicester Square. The burial of Mr. Williamson, Mozart's landlord, a churchwarden, is also recorded. St. Anne's has had nine rectors during the 218 years of its existence. Some of these divines came into conflict with the Vestry, a body of men who were determined to manage everything and everybody, even the parson and the organist. Special mention must be made of St. Anne's Parochial Schools, founded on November 17, 1699, in 'two rooms on a floor of the House of Mr. Johnson in Thrift St. at the rate of Seven Pounds p. Añ and halfe a years Warning to be given on each side.' These schools, among the earliest of their kind in London, have been continued to this day.*

It is doubtful if St. Anne's Church had an organ during its earliest years, as in 1699 a loft had to be built, at a cost not exceeding £50, for an instrument presented to the church by King William III. The organ, the handiwork of the celebrated Renatus Harris, contained the following stops :—

This is the instrument—without pedals, of course—upon which Dr. Croft played! Edward Hatton, in his 'New View of London' (1708), says, concerning St. Anne's Church :—

There is a fine organ made by Mr. Harris and Prayers four times a day; i.e., at 7 and 11 in the Morning, and at 4 and 7 in the afternoon.

Strangely enough only four years after its erection the organ needed to be 'repaired and set in right and good order.' Proposals were made to the Vestry in 1703 by Renatus Harris, Christian Smith, and Bernard Smith, with the result that the last-named (i.e. Father Smith) 'agreed with ye gentlemen of the Vestry to reparaire and put the organ in good order and tune for the sum of twenty pounds; and in order thereto would begin to effect the same ye next week.' In 1782 Messrs. Dodo Tollner and Co.—whoever they may have been—were engaged to repair the instrument at a cost of sixty guineas—money more or less thrown away, as three years later William and Robert Gray erected a new organ at a cost of £442. The present instrument is mainly by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons; but at the last restoration, by Mr. F. Rothwell in 1897, several of the pipes of the original organ were found to be still in use.

Let us now consider the organists of St. Anne's. The first recorded occupant of that office was Dr. Croft, or Crofts, according to the Vestry Minutes, which, moreover, give his Christian name as Philip, instead of William.* Croft's 'wages' were £25 per annum. The pages of the Minutes recording his appointment (in 1700) are unfortunately missing; but an interesting and amusing reference to him appears three years later in the following 'Resolution' of the autocratic Vestry:—

* See 'The Story of a Charity School, Two Centuries of popular education in Soho, 1699-1899.' By J. H. Cardwell, M.A., Rector of Saint Anne's, Soho. London and New York: Truslove, Hanson and Comba. 1899.

Order'd Tuesday y^e 28 of Septem., 1703.

That Mr. Phillip Crofts be in the place of Organist as formerly he was in y^e Parish Church of St. Ann, and that he be called in and tould y^e same, who, accordingly was, and being demanded what wages were due to him he informed the Gentlemen of the Vestry that a year and three quarters of a years wages were due to him. A debate arising thereupon,

It was resolved that Mr. Crofts should be paid him half a years wages for playing upon the Organ in Mr. Hugh's time when Churchwarden; But during the time he did not play upon the Organ, which were a year and one quarter of a year (the Organ being in that time out of order) it was resolved that no wages should be paid him for that time.

Whereupon the sd Mr. Crofts answered; that it was to his great detremt and disadvantage, yet would play upon the Organ for one quarter of a year, in hopes that y^e Gentlemen of the Vestry would consider him for the loss of that time.

It was doubtless during his St. Anne's organistship that Dr. Croft composed his famous tune known the world over as 'St. Anne's,' and most probably so named from this identical church in Soho, of which he was then chief-musician. We give a facsimile of the tune as it first appeared, in 'A Supplement to the New Version of Psalms, by Dr. Brady and Mr. Tate' (1708):—

* See the Biographical Sketch of Dr. Croft which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1900, wherein further particulars concerning this discrepancy are given.

To Croft succeeded, in 1711, John Isham. He held the post till 1718, according to a Vestry Minute thus recorded on June 23 of that year:—

Mr. Isham, the organist, have requested to this Board by Dr. Pelling [the Rector] that he might hold the organist place of this church in conjunction with the parish church of St. Andrew, Holburn; whereupon the Vestry did not think fitt to comply with his request.

Hawkins prints a duet composed by Isham, a composition mournfully beginning 'Bury delights, my roving eye'! Without attempting a list of all the organists of St. Anne's, one or two extracts from the Vestry Minutes may be set forth. In 1746 an attempt was made to attack pluralities, in that Mr. James Butler, organist, was enjoined to 'attend personally three Sundays in every month.' In 1782 Mr. Moze was granted an addition to his salary of £5 per annum for playing the organ at the 'Reading of Prayers on Sunday evenings,' and 'the Blower of the Organ Bellows' was allowed an extra 20s.

A curious incident occurred in the election of an organist in January, 1788. The Vestry Minutes tell us:—

A motion was made and seconded that Women be not permitted to vote at the ensuing election for organist.

Resolved that the Election be carried on in the usual way.

The salary of the new organist was fixed at £30. He (or she, as it happened to be) was to be 'elected annually and no deputy allowed except in sickness,' whereby pluralities received their death-blow in regard to the organists of St. Anne's. The reason of the no-women-to-vote motion above referred to, may be explained by the fact that one of the candidates was a lady; but she headed the poll with 398 votes, while Stephen Rimbault, then a boy of fourteen (the father of Dr. E. F. Rimbault), secured 25 votes. We may pass on to the year 1834, when the Vestry seemed to be favourably disposed towards the music of the church, as they resolved:—

That, in addition to the twelve boys and twelve girls who sang in church, there should always be six of each sex in preparation to take the places of those who left. That, instead of being merely taught by ear, they should be made acquainted with musical notation. That some portion of the congregation be induced to assist in singing the Psalms, Chants, and Responses in harmony. That a gentleman had offered to provide copies of the music gratuitously.

These were steps in the right direction. At that time the organ was located in the west gallery and the charity children, in their picturesque dress, sat on each side of the instrument. A great change took place in the music of St. Anne's in 1871, on the appointment of Mr. (afterwards Sir) Joseph Barnby as organist and choirmaster. He introduced those far-famed Bach performances, with orchestral accompaniment, that have made the church so famous, beginning with the 'St. John Passion,' sung on Fridays during Lent, 1873. Barnby's efforts were warmly supported by the then rector, Canon Wade. Two of Canon Wade's sons, Messrs. Arthur and Charles Wade, sang the solos with refinement, and another valuable vocal helper was Mr. Frank Pownall, a first-rate baritone singer, now the Registrar of the Royal College of Music. In recording these 'Passion Services,' THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1873, said:—

The movement now commenced at the Church of St. Anne, Soho, is one the importance of which cannot be over estimated. At a time when the utilization of our churches, great and small, has begun to be regarded with interest by all sections of Christians, such a move could hardly fail of success if properly carried out. A service which should unite so happily the meditative and congregational forms of worship, might fairly have been hitherto regarded as next to an impossibility. Even Mr. Barnby would appear to have thought so if we may judge by the Westminster Passion Services, which as our readers may remember were of the purely meditative type—the congregation taking no part whatever in the performance. Now, however, that it has become an accomplished fact, the apparent difficulties have to a great extent disappeared, and the additional circumstance that these services have been given in a Parish Church of the ordinary type, would seem to do away with the last obstacle to such a service being largely adopted in other churches.

MR. E. H. THORNE.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER OF ST. ANNE'S, SOHO.

During the last three years Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' has been performed at St. Anne's, and Mr. E. H. Thorne's Bach Recitals, of which two series are annually given, form a special feature and attract many listeners.

Since 1888 (when Barnby left to go to Eton) the following well-known musicians have been associated with the music of this famous sanctuary: Dr. W. H. Cummings and Dr. H. Walford Davies; Mr. Oliver King, the late Mr. William Hodge, Mr. J. M. Coward, and Mr. Reginald Steggall. The present organist and choirmaster, Mr. Edward Henry Thorne (appointed in 1891) has worthily maintained and still maintains all the best traditions appertaining to his office. His Bach enthusiasm and his interpretative skill of the great Cantor's organ music are well known; moreover, he has steadily upheld all that is best in English church music, —anthems by Purcell, Greene, Blow, and Boyce may be heard to the best advantage. Finally, St. Anne's has every reason to be proud of its music and its chief musicians.

For the use of two photographs our thanks are due to Mr. Churchwarden C. L. Cribb; and for much kind help in the preparation of this article and permission to use other illustrations, we are indebted to the Rector of St. Anne's, Soho, the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, M.A., who since his induction (in 1891) has discharged the duties of his important office with ceaseless activity and untiring zeal for the welfare of those among whom his lot is cast.

DOTTED CROCHET.

SIR JOHN HAWKINS.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

The literature of music owes not a little to the patient investigations of enthusiastic amateurs. They are not always technically equipped,—they might fail in passing a qualifying examination as 'fifth hunters'—but the work done by them in a field so rich in result deserves full acknowledgment. Without mentioning the names of living writers, we may recall the musical-literary achievements of Chrysander, Otto Jahn, Thayer, William Chappell, Helmholtz (and his English translator, Ellis), A. J. Hipkins, and George Grove—all of honoured memory. To these must be added Sir John Hawkins, an English gentleman of the 18th century and an historian of music, who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

John Hawkins—said to be a descendant of Sir John Hawkins, the famous navigator—was born in London, March 30, 1719. The son of a carpenter who rose to be a surveyor, he was at first articled to an architect, but he soon exchanged the designing vocation for the legal profession. Industry appears to have been a natural acquirement, as we read of him rising at four o'clock in the morning in order to study law and 'read the authors.' He ultimately set up in practice as a solicitor, and 'established himself in a respectable business,' clients being impressed by his probity and skill. Law, however, did not exclusively claim his attention. He devoted his leisure to the cultivation of literature and music. He wrote for the magazines, one of his earliest attempts in that direction being a short essay on 'True honesty distinguished from false,' which appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine of March, 1739. One of his musical friends was John Stanley, the celebrated blind organist of the Temple Church and Master of the King's Musick. Hawkins was so much struck with one of Stanley's compositions that he wrote some verses in praise of the sightless composer, and these found their way into the Daily Advertiser of February 21, 1741. A year later Hawkins wrote the words of 'Six cantatas for a voice and instruments,' which Stanley set to music; they were sung at Vauxhall and Ranelagh, and proved to be so successful that the same collaboration resulted in a similar publication. Dr. Boyce and Dr. Ben Cooke were also included in the friendly circle of the music-loving young solicitor, who was in the habit of giving private concerts at his residence in Austin Friars. How interesting to have met, on those occasions, such an old-world trio of English composers as Boyce, Cooke, and Stanley!

Let us now pass to a Johnsonian episode. In the year 1749 Ivy Lane, under the shadow of St. Paul's Cathedral, could boast of a 'famous beef-steak house,' known as the 'King's Head.' At that hostelry met the Club formed by Dr. Johnson and limited to nine members, Hawkins—for whom Dr. Johnson 'entertained an unusually strong affection'—being one of the elect. The 'nine' met every Tuesday evening at the 'King's Head' aforesaid; the Club, as Mr. Leslie Stephen says, 'gave Johnson an opportunity of displaying and improving his great conversation.'

The biographers of Hawkins state that he was an original member of the Madrigal Society on its foundation in 1741. This is an error. Proof thereof is furnished in the following information, extracted from the records of the Madrigal Society and kindly supplied by its genial secretary, Mr. J. Edward Street, for the purposes of this article. Mr. Street writes:—

Hawkins was not an original member (1741). The only entry relating to him is on September 27, 1752: 'Mr. Hawkins was proposed by Mr. Immyns.'

Presumably he was elected then and there, as there is no mention of his election. But thereafter his name appears regularly in the list of members, paying his monthly or quarterly subscription and an occasional extra contribution for special objects, e.g., new music, &c. On July 10, 1754, occurs this entry: 'Sweet love, when love,' 'This merry month of May,' both presented by Mr. Hawkins.

In 1757, I find an evening's programme (eight numbers, titles not given) 'out of Mr. Hawkins's Italian Madrigals.' On 'May ye 2nd, 1764,' the Minutes record: 'Mr. Hawkins having offered the use of his Motets of Prentestini to the Society for copying of them; a motion was made by Mr. Dan Richards, and was unanimously agreed to, that the same should be done, and the expense thereof be paid out of the Stock of the Society.'

At the March Quarter, 1766, Hawkins's name appears as struck out from the list of members making their quarterly payments of 6s. 6d., nor does his name appear in any subsequent list. Presumably, therefore, he retired from the Society at that date, though there is no note to that effect.

The marriage of Hawkins, early in 1753, to a lady of fortune, Miss Sidney Storer, made possible the preparation of his famous 'History of Music,' of which more anon. The death of his wife's brother in 1759 considerably augmented the financial resources of Hawkins, who thereupon gave up his solicitor's practice and lived the life of an industrious gentleman. The easy circumstances resulting from his marriage provoked a feeling of jealousy among some of his so-called friends. A funny story is told of his mother, who, on being congratulated on her son's good fortune, said: 'Lord, sir! good fortune, indeed! my John is a match for any lady; for, to let you know, he has a dozen of as handsome shirts as any gentleman in the land!'

His love of fishing doubtless influenced Hawkins in the choice of a residence. He bought a house at Twickenham (of which we give an illustration), where he had as distinguished neighbours, Horace Walpole and Garrick. At Twickenham he angled, and prepared an edition of the 'Compleat Angler'—not the least in importance of the hundred (or more) editions of that piscatorial classic—with a life of Izaak Walton and notes by himself. This edition was thrice printed during his lifetime, and again by his son, John Sidney Hawkins. He was made a Justice of the Peace in 1761, and four years later elected Chairman of Quarter Sessions. His activity as a Magistrate earned him his Knighthood, a well-deserved honour conferred upon him by King George III. on October 23, 1772. He published in 1763 a pamphlet entitled 'Observations on the state of the Highways, and on the Laws for amending and keeping them in repair.' This followed a scheme he had prepared for an Act of Parliament which ultimately became the Act under which the highways in the Kingdom were for many years regulated, a statute which forms the nucleus of the statutes now in force. His firmness in quelling riots in 1768 and 1769, and other magisterial achievements, must be placed to his credit as a civil administrator.

More than once he was urged to enter Parliament, but he always refused.

Another good-fellowship Club has to be mentioned. It was founded by Sir Joshua Reynolds—'our Romulus,' as Dr. Johnson called him—in 1764 and met weekly at the 'Turk's Head,' Gerrard Street, Soho. Johnson and Hawkins were both original members, also Edmund Burke and Oliver Goldsmith. Subsequently known as The Literary Club, the membership included Percy, of the Reliques, Garrick, Boswell, Gibbon, Adam Smith, Sheridan and Burney. No wonder that Dr. Johnson was in his glory in the midst of that brilliant circle which met weekly at Soho. If, according to Johnson, Hawkins was 'a very unclubable man,' it is not surprising that he resigned his membership owing, it is said, to the overbearing manner of Burke.

Hawkins had been an attached friend of

On May 14, 1789, Sir John Hawkins was seized with a paralytic attack at Islington Spa. A week later he died, aged seventy, at his house in Broad Sanctuary, Westminster.*

His death is thus recorded, none too kindly, in the Public Advertiser of Saturday, May 23, 1789:—

Thursday morning, died at his house in Westminster, Sir John Hawkins, Knt., one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, and, as he often tells us in his Life of Johnson, sometimes Chairman at the Quarter Sessions. Sir John's literary abilities are known principally by reports, very few people having read his bulky performances. His last was the Life of Dr. Johnson which the trade very oddly employed him to write; it makes the first volume of Johnson's Works, and has been very aptly compared to a mill-stone hung about his neck—Sir John, however, as a man and a magistrate, was irrefragable.

On May 28 his remains were interred in the North Cloister of Westminster Abbey, at a spot

Johnson's for thirty-four years. What more natural than that the great lexicographer should wish him to become one of his executors? This duty he shared with Sir Joshua Reynolds, both of whom attended the great man's funeral in Westminster Abbey in 1784. Hawkins thereafter wrote a 'Life of Johnson' (1787), an honest piece of work, though it was of course eclipsed by that masterpiece of biography associated with the name of Boswell. After paying this biographical tribute to his genius-friend, Hawkins laid down his pen. While engaged upon this his last literary production, the house in (or near) Queen Square, Westminster (now Queen Anne's Gate), in which he lived was burnt down. The loss of his library must have come as a great blow; fortunately, however, the books acquired by him for the purpose of his 'History of Music' (many of which formerly belonged to Dr. Pepusch) he had previously presented to the British Museum, where they are, of course, carefully preserved.

now indicated by a stone which bears, at his special request, the simple inscription:—

In regard to personality Sir John Hawkins appears to have been a somewhat austere man, due, perhaps, to his severe legal training, but William Ayrton remembered him as being gentle and kind to children. He had enemies in the literary circle in which he moved—Boswell, to wit, who was very jealous of Hawkins's friendship with Johnson. Moreover, his social success was militated against by a pompous drawl in his manner of conversation, as a wag epitaphly wrote :—

* A curious error, apparently started by Dr. Busby, has been made, even by present-day biographers of Hawkins, in stating that he died at Spa, the famous Belgian watering-place being implied, instead of Islington Spa, at which he met with his fatal illness, though he drew his last breath at his house in Westminster, as above stated.

Here lies Sir John Hawkins
Without his shoes and stauckings.

Among the friendships which Sir John Hawkins could claim was that of Handel. He records some interesting reminiscences of the great—in two senses of the word—composer. We are told of Handel's 'broad hands,' and that 'he was in person a large made and portly man. His gait, which was ever sauntering, was rather ungraceful, as it had in it something of a rocking motion, which distinguishes those whose legs are bowed. His features were finely marked, and the general cast of his countenance was placid, bespeaking dignity attempered with benevolence, and every quality of the heart that has a tendency to beget confidence and esteem.' No less interesting is the following anecdote, recorded by Miss Hawkins: 'Handel had done him [Hawkins] the honour frequently to try his new productions on his young ear; and my father, calling on him one morning to pay him a visit of respect, he made him sit down, and listen to the air "See, the conquering hero comes," concluding with the question: "How do you like it?" My father answering, "Not so well as some things I have heard of yours," he rejoined, "Nor I neither; but, young man, you will live to see that a greater favourite with the people than my other fine things."'

In addition to the publications already mentioned and the History of Music soon to be referred to, Hawkins wrote 'An Account of the institution and progress of the Academy of Ancient Music, with a comparative view of the music of the past and present times. By a Member.' This was issued (anonymously) in 1770. He also wrote a Memoir of Steffani, privately printed in oblong folio so as to be bound up with the famous duets of that composer, one to whom Handel certainly owed indebtedness. A copy of this Memoir is in the British Museum (Add. MS. 31493). To show the versatility of this solicitor-magistrate-historian of music, he wrote 'A dissertation on the Armorial Ensigns of the County of Middlesex and the Abbey and City of Westminster' (1780). His literary gifts descended to his children. John Sidney Hawkins, his son, wrote 'An enquiry into the nature and principles of thorough bass on a new plan' (1818), in addition to other works. Sir John's daughter, Miss Lætitia Matilda Hawkins, attained some celebrity as a novelist; but she is best known by the 'Anecdotes' and 'Memoirs,' from which some interesting matters may be gleaned.

We have left the consideration of the 'History of Music,' by Sir John Hawkins, till last because of its importance. The collecting of material for the work occupied its author for a period of thirty-two years. He tells us, in the Preface thereto: 'the ensuing volumes are the produce of sixteen years' labour, and are compiled from materials which were not collected in double that time.' The idea of writing a History of Music was suggested to him by Horace Walpole, who seems to have rendered some aid in so laudable an undertaking—to wit, a letter written by Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, British Minister at Florence, dated January 2, 1761, in which he says :—

A friend of mine, Mr. Hawkins, is writing the History of Music: the sooner you could send us the following books the better; if by any English traveller, we should be glad :—

1. Tutte l'Opere, di Gioseffe Zarlino. Venezia. 1589: 2 vols., folio.
2. History of Music in Italian, by Gio. Andr. Angelini Bontempi. 1695, folio.
3. Dialogo della musica e della antica moderna, di Vincenzo Galilei. Folio, 1602, or 1541, in Firenze.
4. Musica vaga et Artificiosa, di Romano Micheli. Folio, 1615, Venezia.
5. Osservazioni per ben regolare il Coro dei Cantori della Capella Pontificia, by Andrea Adami da Bolsena. Quarto, 1711, in Roma.

Any other books of character on the subject will be very acceptable; but when I review the list and see so many thundering folios, I don't expect that any gentleman will bring them in his breeches-pocket, or even in his cloak-bag.

Dr. Busby records that Hawkins was actuated by three different motives in undertaking the work: (1) his wish to investigate the principles of the science, (2) the desire to settle music upon somewhat like a footing of equality with the other sister arts, and (3) the chief impulse was his veneration for music—a veneration founded on his firm belief that 'it was intended by the Almighty for the delight and edification of mankind.' He spared neither time, pains, nor expense in getting together the material. For a time he resided at Oxford, where he took with him an engraver on purpose to secure copies of the portraits in the Music School. Hawkins himself says, referring to an enforced interruption to his historical studies :—

Determining to avail himself of those intervals of leisure which the stated recesses from the exercise of his office (that of a magistrate) afforded, and which seemed too precious to be wasted either in sloth and indolence, or those fashionable recreations and amusements, to which he was ever disposed to prefer the pursuit of literature, he re-assumed his work; and with the blessing of health, scarcely interrupted for a series of years, has been able to present it to the world in the condition in which it now comes forth.

In regard to technical musical matters he gratefully acknowledges the help he received from Dr. Boyce, Dr. Ben Cooke, organist of Westminster Abbey, Mr. Marmaduke Overend, organist of Isleworth, and Mr. John Stafford Smith, of the Chapel Royal. Some 'Memoranda made by a member of the Chapel Royal from 1785-6' (MS.), and now in the possession of Dr. W. H. Cummings, confirms this in the following words :—

Dr. Boyce corrected the plates; Dr. Cooke reduced the ancient music to modern, assisted by Mr. J. Stafford Smith, of the Chapel Royal, and Mr. Overend, of Isleworth.

The Preface to the History is dated 'Hatton Garden, 26th Aug. 1776.' The work appeared on November 23, 1776, with the following title :—

A General History | of the | Science and Practice | of | Music, | By SIR JOHN HAWKINS. | In five volumes, |
London, | Printed for T. Payne and Son, at the Mews-Gate | MDCCCLXXVI.

The price of the five volumes, bound in boards, was six guineas. The work was dedicated to

King George III., who granted an audience to the author in order that he might present a copy to his Majesty in person. Tom Payne, the publisher of the History—who never before published on his own account—is said to have sunk £500 in its production. He kept a second-hand bookshop, at which the literary men of the day were wont to foregather—to talk, to exchange their quips and cranks, and to relieve the overburdened shelves of honest Tom Payne by frequent purchases. Concerning this ‘nookery,’ Miss Hawkins says :—

The shop of Payne, the bookseller, at the Mews Gate, was at that time the resort of the London literati. This place was as little calculated as any could well be for the reception of the number who not only frequented it, but during certain hours of the day, were never out of it. It was, as is well known, though probably the traces of it may soon be gone [long ago gone !] at the gate of the lower Mews, opening into Castle Street, Leicester Fields ; an elbow-shed, rather than shop, and lighted by a skylight. Crossing obliquely the gate of the Mews, Payne had a good dwelling-house, the ground-floor windows of which, as seen from the street, were fairly barricaded with books.

In the same year that Hawkins issued his History of Music (complete), Dr. Burney published the first volume of his History! Unlike that of Hawkins, Burney's work was issued by subscription, and it is interesting to find that among the names of the subscribers is that of 'Sir John Hawkins, Knight'—a pleasant instance of kindly-feeling, non-animosity rivalry. The remaining three volumes of Burney's History appeared at irregular intervals.

the third and fourth in 1789—thirteen years after the first volume had been issued, thus the worthy Doctor had the advantage of estimating, if not using, the valuable material which the no less worthy Knight had so industriously gathered together.

The appearance of two Histories of Music in the same year was productive of much discussion as to the relative merits of the two achievements. Burney, owing to a more attractive style, secured popular favour, as may be evidenced in a Catch (set to music by Dr. Callcott) which reads :—

Have you Sir John Hawkins' History?
Some folks think it quite a mystery.
Musick filled his wondrous brain.
How d'ye like him? is it plain?
Both I've read and must agree
That Burney's history pleases me.

This Catch in performance punningly sounds thus:—

Sir John Hawkins !
Burn his history !
How d'ye like him ?
Burn his history !
Burney's history pleases me.

Posterity has, however, reversed the decision of the wits. 'Burney' has never been reprinted, while 'Hawkins' has attained that distinction. In the British Museum is a copy of the latter work containing many additions in the handwriting of its author. One of these additions, of an amusing nature and not hitherto printed, we give, partly in facsimile. It is evidently connected with the first foot-note of col. 1, p. 540, of the Novello edition :-

In the Practice of Chanting a ^{Method} ~~style~~ consisting of Notes, Breves and Semibreves, amounting to ^{or} in number is applied indiscriminately long or short to the Verses of the Psalms: these forms therefore ~~are each~~ ^{are} in respect of Time for each Verse ~~where~~ ^{where} the Clause is short the Intonation is necessary ^{protracted} ~~long~~ where it is long the Intonation is by the like ^{recept} ~~recept~~ accelerated resembling the Ods of Procrustes which those whom he laid on them ~~were made to fit~~ by stretching or amputating respectively their Limbs, were made to fit.

In ridicule of this Practice a merry Fellow adapted the following Dev Words to the Notes of the Invocation in Tally's Litany

And was not Pharaoh (C)

Finally, as to the reprint. In the year 1852 Mr. J. Alfred Novello decided to re-issue the History of Music which Sir John Hawkins had given to the world seventy-six years before. It was a big undertaking in those days, and as a purely commercial speculation it could not have had much money in it. But Alfred Novello was nothing if not enterprising, and, moreover, he was stimulated by the energy and foresight of his invaluable assistant, Henry Littleton. If we turn to THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1852 (p. 374), we shall find therein set forth the raison d'être of this reprint:—

NOW REPRINTING.
SIR JOHN HAWKINS'
GENERAL HISTORY OF
THE SCIENCE AND PRACTICE OF MUSIC.
The Five original Volumes forming One thick Volume.

J. ALFRED NOVELLO begs to announce that he is at present engaged in reprinting Sir John Hawkins' valuable and scarce History. It is intended to issue the work in Monthly Parts, price 3s. 6d. each, two of which will complete one original volume; so that the whole may be expected to be finished in ten months.

The opposite specimen page will convey the size of the volume, types, &c., in the new edition. THE WHOLE OF THE ORIGINAL TEXT WILL BE PRINTED IN ITS INTEGRITY, WITHOUT ALTERATION; together with the ILLUSTRATIVE WOODCUTS OF INSTRUMENTS, &c. (for which more than 200 WOODCUTS have been engraved); the WHOLE of the MUSICAL EXAMPLES in the various ancient and modern notations; and the FACSIMILE EXAMPLES of OLD MANUSCRIPTS.

J. Alfred Novello respectfully invites his musical friends to aid him in his arduous undertaking, by sending their names as subscribers, stating whether they would receive their copies monthly as they appear, or when the work is completed.

69, Dean-street, Soho, and 24, Poultry.

Part I. was issued in November, 1852, and in THE MUSICAL TIMES of the following August the complete work was announced as 'now ready, price 35s., in two volumes; price 16s. supplementary vol. of portraits.' Those who assisted in the preparation of this reprint were Mrs. Cowden-Clarke (who read the proofs and prepared the indexes), Edward Holmes, Josiah Pittman, W. H. Monk, and Burford G. H. Gibsone, 'with occasional suggestions from other well-wishers.' The notes added by Sir John Hawkins in his private copy, already referred to, deposited in the British Museum, were inserted in the new edition which, of course, greatly increased its value, while the extra volume of portraits was printed from the original engraved copper plates. To quote from 'A Short History of Cheap Music': 'This undertaking was duly recognised by the musical public, and in fact it stands as a monument of the spirit and enterprise of the publisher at a time when musical literature was outside the reach of students.' It is interesting to know that the History was a favourite book of Charles Lamb, who, though no musician, had a keen appreciation of literary merit, and who derived much enjoyment from the anecdotes and incidents therein recorded.

CZECH NATIONAL OPERA.

The tourist visiting 'hundred-towered, golden Prague' is amply repaid by its beauty alone, and if a student of history, he will find much besides to interest him in a city which, being the most westerly outpost of the Slav race, has been the theatre of racial conflicts for more than 1,000 years. If in addition he happens to be a musician not irretrievably committed to the beaten track, a musical Athenian in quest of 'something new,' he will find measureless gratification in the doings of the Czech musicians of the place.

In the course of one of his artistic tournées Berlioz found himself in Prague, and tells of his amazement at finding in a spot so far removed, according to Parisian ideas, from the haunts of civilization, a public capable of appreciating works which represented the dernier mot of modern music. Clearly the Bohemians of that day were a musical race through and through, and had arrived at the appreciative, if not the creative stage of musical culture. The latter was yet to come. It is true that several composers of Bohemian origin had won a measure of fame in other countries. George Benda (1721-1795) wrote fourteen operas and melodramas for the German stage; Anton Reicha (1770-1836), as a pedagogic writer on theory, and composer of concerted music, became well and favourably known in Paris; and J. L. Dussek (1761-1812) is not unknown to fame; but no original or national tendencies were to be perceived in the music of either of these composers. The country was on the high road to complete Germanization, and the Czech spirit, even the Czech language, bade fair to die out altogether. Suddenly a change, an almost mysterious change was apparent in Bohemia. A wave of national sentiment passed over the country, half-forgotten feelings were revived, unexpected vital force revealed, and by a series of Cyclopean efforts the national ear wrested from the mire of oblivion into which it was sinking. In the face of constant repression on the part of an absolutist government the Czech language was reinstated, and the new spirit breathed into politics, literature, science, art, and finally into music.

To place on record the actual date of these happenings is difficult. The Czech Renaissance, sudden as it was, did not come about in a month or a year. According to Count Lützow, a distinguished Bohemian patriot and litterateur resident in London, it was the offspring of the Romantic movement which was felt all over Europe at the end of the 18th century. As far as music is concerned, its first sign of life was the appearance in 1826 of an edition of Bohemian folk-songs, edited by Skroup, composer of the first Bohemian opera ('Dratemik'), but it was not in full swing till thirty-five years later, when Friedrich Smetana (1824-1884) returned to Prague from Gothenburg in Sweden, where he held a lucrative post up to the time when the news arrived that a so-called 'Interim Theatre' had been opened in his native city, in which pieces alternately German and Czech were to be performed. We who live in a free country cannot possibly realize what this news meant to a man of Czech blood. Smetana pieces, the symphonic poems known to British audiences, and some incidental music to certain plays of Schiller and Shakespeare,—much read and admired, by-the-way, in Bohemia—but now, to quote the eloquent words of Emanuel Chvala, the Bohemian artist 'felt that he must henceforth live in Bohemia, draw inspiration from the glorious history and native speech of the Fatherland, live with his people and share with them his joys and sorrows.' Alas, poor Smetana! His was the greatest sorrow of all for a musician, the sorrow of Beethoven. He became deaf, and in consequence so stricken with grief that his reason gave way and he eventually died in a lunatic asylum.

The music of the operas, eight in number, which was on fire with patriotic enthusiasm, and vowed from that moment to devote his powers as a Bohemian artist to the service of his Fatherland. The outcome of this resolution was the composition of the 'Brandenburgers in Bohemia,' the first Bohemian national opera, and its production at the Interim Theatre in 1866. It was recently produced again in the course of a cycle of representative performances of national opera, of which more later. Up to that moment Smetana had worked, following the example of other Bohemian composers, for the outside world. He was a virtuoso pianist, having made his appearance as a wonder-child at the age of six. He had composed some clever pianoforte

Smetana wrote for the Czech people, even their titles with one exception, are practically unknown in England, though some of them are frequently performed in Germany, where jealousy of Bohemian art is less marked than in Austria itself. The overture to the 'Verkaufte Braut,' occasionally heard in our concert-rooms, is one of those preludes which suffers when severed from the parent stem. It is an essentially popular work, conceived in the spirit of comedy throughout, and the Overture is written to put the audience in the right Stimmung and not as a concert piece. A better example of his genius as a writer of instrumental music is his String Quartet in E minor, first played to an English audience at the Popular Concert of December 3, 1894, and since familiarized by the fine interpretations of the 'Bohemian String Quartet.' In this work we have learned to appreciate the composer's intense individuality and nobility of style. The Quartet is interesting too for another reason. It is autobiographical, bearing the title 'aus meinem Leben,' and the E held by the first violin at the end is the note which eternally haunted him during his deafness. Its effect is indescribably weird. But his domain was not that of absolute music, and those who wish to hear the real Smetana must visit Prague, where his operas are performed by artists to the manner born—chorus, orchestra, solo-singers—all are native to a man. Even the very theatre in which the operas are produced, the Royal Bohemian 'Landes und National-Theater' to give it its full title, has been erected by voluntary contributions sent from all parts of the world where the Czech race is to be found: from Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, Northern Hungary, and even from the Czech colony in America. The audience which crowds this magnificent theatre from floor to ceiling, almost nightly, feels in it a sense of proprietorship, as well as intense sympathy with the performances of those national plays and operas of which words and music voice their patriotic aspirations. It is the ruling principle of the Direction to favour the development of indigenous talent. From the inauguration of the theatre in 1883 up to the end of 1894, there were 642 performances of Czech opera, as against 75 Russian, 386 French, 431 Italian and 366 German operas, all provided with a libretto translated into the Czech language.

In August last a cycle of performances of national operas by Smetana, Dvorák, Fibich, Kovarovic, and Nedbal was organized by the able Director of the theatre with the view of attracting tourists, and he has similar projects for the current year. At any time, the writer has reason to believe, a series of the most attractive of these works, with the possible addition of Dvorák's latest opera, 'Armida,' would be put on to synchronize with the visit of a party of English musicians, if such should be arranged, and the Director duly informed. The theatre is not run upon commercial lines, the expenses aggregating more than the receipts, plus the subsidy of the country (not of the Government, be it observed); and the desire of the Council of Direction to make known the treasures of lyric art which Bohemia possesses and wishes to share with the world at large, originates from motives partly patriotic but otherwise purely disinterested. The dispassionate onlooker, free as he may be from political bias, and unwilling to intervene between Montague and Capulet, cannot be blind to the fact that the Austrian Government does not view the enterprise with much favour, nor even with benevolent neutrality. This is proved by the veto placed upon placards announcing performances of Czech operas in Austrian watering-places. It is time that someone spoke out on this subject in the interest of universal art, for though the leaning of Smetana is towards Bohemian folk-song and dance, his art is not merely local—far less so than that of Grieg, Svendsen, and Sinding, whose music forms part of our daily musical pabulum. He had an individual style of his own, and uses moreover most of the resources of the modern Wagnerian orchestra, whilst showing here and there, especially in his recitatives, traces of the influence of Mozart.

The titles of his operas are as follow: 'The Brandenburgers in Bohemia,' and the 'Bartered Bride' (Verkaufte Braut) already mentioned; 'Dalibor,' a work into which the element of tragedy enters; 'The Two Widows,' an essay in 'conversational opera'; 'The Kiss,' and 'The Secret,' both conceived in a romantic vein; and 'Libuse.' The latter, which may be described as 'grand opera,' is less popular in character and upon a higher plane than the rest. All are full of patriotic allusions and absorbingly interesting to audiences of Czech race.

Of the other operas included in the cycle, Dvorák's 'Roussalka,' Fibich's 'The Fall of Arkana,' Kovarovic's 'Têtes de chien,' and Nedbal's 'Le Gros Jean,' much cannot be written within the limits of this article. The name alone of Antonin Dvorák (1841), Smetana's pupil, is enough to stimulate the interest of English readers. Zdenek Fibich (1850-1900) is but little known here, though chamber music experts are well acquainted with his pianoforte quartet and quintet (pianoforte, wind, and strings). He was a fervent partisan, but not a follower of Wagner, and died all too early. Charles Kovarovic (1862), the chef d'orchestre of the National Theatre, is a shining light of the modern Bohemian School. As a dramatic writer he is very strong, and in style more eclectic than his colleagues. Finally, Oscar Nedbal (1874), a young man still, known to us as the viola player in the Bohemian Quartet, and known to his compatriots as a conductor of great ability, is a composer with special aims of his own, bringing pantomime largely to the aid of the spoken word, and with considerable success.

Such are the men—three of them still living—whose works were chosen for the cycle to represent the native art of Bohemia, of which Smetana is the central figure. They are fortunate in their interpreters. As their names indicate, Madame Rose Matura, a prima donna of rare distinction, of whom the Czechs are very proud, Mlles. Slavík and Bobek, MM. Benoni, Mařák, Ptók and Kliment are of Czech nationality, but their vivacity and versatility are such that they might well be histrions from the banks of the Seine; indeed Charpentier is said to have preferred their rendering of his opera 'Louise' to that of his own company of Parisian artists. Nor is Teutonic, or better said, Wagnerian influence entirely absent from their impersonations. But the Slavic temperament, with its undercurrent of deep earnestness peeps through all, and so the visitor receives a series of very complex impressions difficult to analyse during one short visit. They convince him of one thing, however, that he is in the presence of a very remarkable manifestation of the genius of the Slav race, which has resort more than any other, when suffering from griefs political and social, to Music the consolatrix, and a special predilection for a combination of song and story which appeals to the patriotic side of its nature. In Russia patriotism comprehends loyalty to the head of the State—witness the perennial vogue of Glinka's 'La vie pour le Czar.' The Bohemians are mainly concerned with the patriotism of race.

TCHAIKOVSKY'S LAST VISIT TO ENGLAND.

BY MRS. NEWMARCH.

The last year of Tchaikovsky's life was signalized by two events of special interest to the English public: his final visit to this country, when he received the honorary degree of musical doctor at Cambridge, and the creation of the Sixth, or 'Pathetic' Symphony. The last volume of the 'Life and Letters' of the composer, edited by his brother Modeste Tchaikovsky, contains some interesting notes on both subjects.

Tchaikovsky's inner life was marked by regularly alternating phases of light and shade. The acute moral tension which preceded his retirement from the Ministry of Justice was followed by the calm and happy summer of 1862. To the glad and hopeful mood which characterizes his correspondence at the beginning of 1877 succeeded the acute suffering consequent on his unfortunate marriage a few months later. So, too, the year 1893, destined to witness his unexpected death while still in the full vigour of his creative power, opened with no foreboding of sorrow, but rather in a mood of cheerful content, the result of his intense satisfaction in the progress of the Sixth Symphony. The creation of this work seems to have been an act of exorcism, whereby he cast out all the dark spirits which had possessed him in the preceding years. In his letters written at this time there is a tone of comfort and spiritual refreshment, as of a man who has thrown off some oppressive cloud and stands once more in the sunlight.

The first mention of this Symphony occurs in a letter to his brother Anatole, dated February 10, 1893, in which he speaks of being completely absorbed in his new project. The following day, writing to his favourite nephew Vladimir Davidov, he enters into fuller particulars:—"I must tell you how happy I am about my work. As you know, I destroyed a Symphony which I had partly composed and orchestrated in the autumn. I did wisely, for it contained little that was really fine—an empty play of sounds without any inspiration. Just as I was starting on my journey [the visit to Paris in December, 1892] the idea came to me for a new Symphony. This time with a programme; but a programme of the kind which remains an enigma to all—let them guess it who can. The work will be called "A Programme Symphony" (No. 6). This programme, which has no existence, is penetrated by subjective sentiment. During my journey, while composing it in my mind, I frequently shed tears. Now I am home again, I have settled down to sketch out the work, and it goes with such speed and ardour that in less than four days I have completed the first movement, and the rest of the Symphony is clearly outlined in my head. There will be much that is novel as regards form in this work. For instance, the finale will not be a great allegro, but, on the contrary, an adagio of considerable dimensions. You cannot imagine what joy I feel at the conviction that my day is not yet over, and that I may still accomplish much. Of course I may be mistaken, but it does not seem likely."

This letter was dated from Tchaikovsky's country house at Klin, where he usually retired when he had any important work on hand. By March the scherzo and finale were both fully sketched out. The composer, growing more and more enamoured of his work, was impatient to complete the orchestration when the time arrived for his visit to England and he was reluctantly compelled to lay the Symphony aside.

The prospect of a journey abroad invariably filled Tchaikovsky with the most painful nervous apprehensions. He was only able to endure the prospect by keeping his mind fixed on the earliest possible date of his return. On this occasion the interruption of the creative inspiration at white heat made him the more unwilling to start westwards. We must bear these circumstances in mind when we read the intimate records of his visits to London and Cambridge, and discount what, at first sight, may seem ungracious features in his character.

Only those who know the Slavonic temperament à fonds can realize how completely an air of gentle and courteous attention may conceal an inward fever of irritability and profundities of unsuspected boredom. All who came in contact with Tchaikovsky will probably agree that he wore the hair-shirt of social martyrdom with perfect affability. Considering all he suffered from his dislike to publicity, and shyness before strangers, it is difficult to know what motive could have been strong enough to induce him to accept engagements abroad. Apparently it remained a mystery to himself, for he writes to his nephew V. Davidov as follows:—

London, May 17-29, 1893.

Is it not strange that of my own free will I have elected to undergo this torture? What fiend can have suggested it to me? Several times during my journey yesterday I resolved to throw up the whole thing and turn tail. But what a disgrace to turn back for nothing! . . . I suffer not only from torments which cannot be put into words (there is one place in my new Symphony—the Sixth—where they seem to me well expressed), but also from a dislike to strangers, and an indefinable terror—though of what the devil only knows. This state makes itself felt physically by pains in the lower regions and loss of power in my legs. However, it is for the last time in my life. Only for a heap of money will I ever go anywhere again, and never for more than three days at a time. And to think I must be on exhibition here for another fortnight!!! It seems an eternity . . . After Cambridge all my agitations will be over; my way will lie homewards and I shall suffer no more.

Life in London during the season he described as 'a punishment.' 'The devil knows that Paris is simply country as compared with London,' he writes to his brother. The inordinate length of the luncheons and dinners to which he was invited impressed him more than their luxury and style. Once, he says, they sat at table from 7 to 11.30 p.m. What wonder that the 'hermit of Klin' suffered from his nerves and from all the horrors of morning dyspepsia.

On June 12 the recipients of the honorary degrees had all assembled, with the exception of Grieg, who was ill. They were to travel together to Cambridge. Next to Saint-Saëns, Tchaikovsky got on best with Boito. The Russian composer had promised to send his brother a minute description of the ceremony, but probably he had not time. On his return to Russia, however, he took great pleasure in recounting his experiences to his friends. That they were agitating and painful at the moment we may readily guess from the account of the ceremony given in Monsieur Saint-Saëns's delightful volume 'Portraits et Souvenirs':—

The next day, June 13th, came the ceremony of investiture, which took place in a hall of medium size, only accessible by invitation. A circular gallery was occupied by the undergraduates. They began by attiring us in ample robes of silk, with wide sleeves, parti-coloured red and white, and placed on our heads mortar-boards of black velvet with tassels and fringes of gold. Thus decked out we walked in procession through the town under a tropical sun. At the head of the group of doctors was the King of Bohonager, in a turban of cloth of gold, sparkling with fabulous jewels, and a diamond necklace. Dare I confess that being the enemy of the commonplace, and of the neuter-tints of our modern garb, I was enchanted with the adventure.

But it was long since Tchaikovsky had laid aside the civil uniform of the Ministry of Justice, and we may be sure that this pageantry and parade was very little to his taste.

His retrospective view of his visit is far more rosy. 'Cambridge,' he wrote from Paris to his friend and publisher Peter Jurgenson, 'with its peculiar customs which retain much that is mediæval, with its colleges that resemble monasteries, and its buildings recalling a very remote past, made a most agreeable impression upon me.' And writing to a friend a few days later, he says: 'At Cambridge I stayed with Professor Maitland. This would have been dreadfully embarrassing for me if he and his wife had not proved to be some of the most charming people I have ever met; and Russophiles into the bargain, which is the greatest rarity in England. Now all is over, it is pleasant to look back on my visit to England and to remember the extraordinary cordiality shown to me everywhere; although in consequence of my peculiar temperament while there I tormented and worried myself into fiddle-strings.'

Tchaikovsky's home-coming was by no means unclouded. The shadow of death was all around him. He was received with the intelligence that Albrecht—one of his dearest friends in Moscow—had passed away during his absence. A few days later came news of the death of Count Shilovsky, while his old school-friend the poet Apukhtin lay dying in St. Petersburg. But even these gloomy tidings failed to eclipse entirely the sense of joy and ardour that possessed him when he joined his nephew

V. Davidov at Grankino, in the Government of Poltava. The peculiar charm and dead silence of the steppes acted like a soothing draught upon the composer's over-wrought nerves, and in a fortnight he was sufficiently refreshed to return to his home at Klin, and to the orchestration of the 'Pathetic' Symphony.

The work, perhaps because of the enforced interruption of his journey, did not run quite smoothly at first. 'Twenty years ago,' he writes to his brother, 'I should have rushed it through without a second thought, and it would have turned out all right. Now I am turning coward, and have lost my self-confidence. I have been sitting all day over two pages and yet they will not come out as I wish.' To Vladimir Davidov he says: 'The Symphony which I intended to dedicate to you—though I have now changed my mind—is progressing. I am very well pleased with its contents, but not quite so satisfied with the orchestration. It does not realize my dreams. To me, it will seem quite natural, and not at all astonishing, if this Symphony meets with abuse, or scant appreciation, at first. But I certainly regard it as quite the best—and especially the "most sincere"—of all my works. I love it as I never loved any one of my musical offspring before.' The Symphony is actually dedicated to his nephew, and the threat contained in this letter was merely a playful one, because the composer's letters had remained unusually long unanswered.

This high opinion of the 'Pathetic' Symphony is reiterated in many of his subsequent letters. To Jurgenson he says: 'On my word of honour, I have never felt such self-satisfaction, such pride, such happiness, as in the consciousness that I am really the creator of this beautiful work.' To the Grand Duke Constantine he wrote: 'Without exaggeration I have put my whole soul into this Symphony.' Tchaikovsky was easily disenchanted with his work by the adverse opinion of others, as was proved by the destruction of several early works, and by the complete revision of the second Symphony and the Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor. It is all the more remarkable therefore that his estimation of his last Symphony survived the lukewarm attitude of the press, and the coldness of the orchestra at the rehearsals and after the first performance. Nothing was able to shake his conviction that this was his supreme masterpiece, or as he himself puts it in all simplicity: 'the best thing I ever composed or ever shall compose.' The Symphony was first performed in St. Petersburg, under the composer's conductorship, at a concert of the Russian Musical Society, on October 28, 1893. The following day, M. Modeste Tchaikovsky found the composer with the score of the Symphony before him. He had agreed to send it to Jurgenson at Moscow that very day, and could not decide upon a title. He did not wish to designate it merely by a number, and he had abandoned his original intention of describing it as a 'programme Symphony.' 'Why programme,' he said, 'since I do not intend to expound any meaning?' M. Modeste Tchaikovsky suggested 'tragic' as an appropriate label, but this did not quite please the composer.

Just as he was leaving the room the word 'pathetic' occurred to M. Modeste. 'Bravo, splendid!' exclaimed his brother, and immediately added to the score the name which has now become so familiar to us. This anecdote is only of importance because it serves to illustrate in a simple way how far the conjectures of the most enlightened commentators may wander from the truth. Hugo Riemann in his thematic analysis of the Sixth Symphony sees the solution of this title in a striking resemblance between the fundamental idea of this work and the chief theme of Beethoven's 'Sonata Pathétique,' of which Tchaikovsky never dreamed.

No sooner was the Symphony completed than the composer was absorbed in the planning of new works and the revision of old ones. As a young man, Tchaikovsky learnt some English, without the help of a teacher. He succeeded in reading 'Pickwick' and 'David Copperfield' in the original. When he took to conducting he had no leisure for his English studies. His favourite author in later life was George Eliot, who, in his opinion, had no rival but Tolstoi as a writer of fiction. He read and re-read all her novels in a French translation; but the 'Scenes from Clerical Life' touched him most profoundly. For a time he seriously contemplated founding the libretto of his next opera upon 'The Sad Fortunes of the Rev. Amos Barton.' The subject is undoubtedly quite outside the ordinary range of operatic libretti. We remember that Tchaikovsky's advisers thought Poushkin's novel in verse, 'Eugene Onegin,' quite impracticable for this purpose, nevertheless the composer's faculty of profound pathos, and a certain similarity between his own philosophy of life and that of the writer whom he admired, would no doubt have enabled him to set this story of everyday existence to human and affecting music.

If M. Modeste Tchaikovsky emphasises, almost painfully, all the details of his brother's fatal illness, doubtless he has his reasons for doing so. His account of the composer's last days must set at rest for ever all insinuations of the gossip-mongers that there was something mysterious and unexplained about the manner of Tchaikovsky's death. On the evening of November 1, he supped with some friends—of whom Glazounov was one—at the Restaurant Leiner. The following day he was slightly indisposed, but his condition gave no anxiety to himself or his brother until evening, when serious symptoms set in. The brothers Bertenson, the two leading physicians in St. Petersburg, pronounced it to be a case of cholera, and it was notified to the district doctor. From the evening of November 1 until Sunday, November 5, Tchaikovsky struggled against the malady with such surprising vigour of constitution that there seemed some hope of recovery. During the Sunday, however, his strength failed rapidly, and he died at three o'clock the following morning. Two of the composer's brothers, his nephews Litke and Davidov, and one of the doctors were present, besides his faithful old servant Sofronov, who arrived from Klin only just in time to see his genius-master draw his last breath.

And as the mind is pitched, the ear is pleas'd
With melting airs or martial, brisk or grave;
Some chord in unison with what we hear
Is touched within us, and the heart replies.*

COWPER.

Reference has recently been made in German and English papers with regard to Haydn and the airs which he harmonized for George Thomson, of Edinburgh. That enterprising editor had previously secured the services of Kotzeluch and Pleyel, and, after Haydn, of Beethoven, Weber and Hummel. A letter written by the last-named when he forwarded his arrangements to Thomson is quaint and interesting. We think of Hummel generally as a clever, though somewhat dry composer, as a man who had little poetry in his nature. The letter which we subjoin shows, however, that he was not altogether destitute of that quality. The 'aggiunged' flat bears upon the emotional side of the art. The letter is in English, made, however, as will be seen, in Germany:—

'DEAR MR. THOMSON!—A good deal of business and an Indisposition was the reason you did not receive these Songs a long time ago allready. Occasion to send them to You by a private way being very seldom, I thought it the best to send them by the post in the form of a lettre as the quickest and shortest way. I hope you will be content with my Accompaniments and Symphonies, being done quit as You desired it;—In No. 3, in the 6th bar of the Voice Iaggiunged a flat by a, which You may put out again, if it don't please you; but I found it so more adapted to the word "Death."

Weimar the 4th of April 1832,

Your truly friend,

J. N. HUMMEL.'

The music referred to is: No. 3, 'A young lady laments the parting from her lover.' The first line is: 'What ails this heart of mine?' and the passage in question is as follows:—

Thomson put the song out altogether; at any rate it is not in the six-volume edition of 'Scottish Airs'; or 'The Select Melodies of Scotland,' also in six volumes. In the fourth volume of the former there is a setting of the words as a duet. The air was composed by William Clark, an Edinburgh organist.

The new works announced to be performed at Leeds Musical Festival (October 5-8) are three in number, viz.: 'The Witch's Daughter,' a cantata by Sir Alexander Mackenzie; 'Everyman,' a cantata (founded on the words of the old morality play) by Dr. Walford Davies; and a cantata, 'The Burial March of Dundee,' words by the late Professor Aytoun, set to music by Dr. Charles Wood. Sir Charles V. Stanford will again conduct the Festival.

The inclusion of Joachim Raff's 'Lenore' Symphony in the forthcoming feasts of music promised by the Philharmonic Society leads us to refer to its first performance in England, and an interesting incident in the life of its composer. It will cause no surprise to learn that the 'Lenore' Symphony received its first interpretation in England under the baton of Sir August Manns. We have before us the actual programme-book of that event,—Crystal Palace Saturday Concert, November 14, 1874—with an analysis of the work which, though not signed, is doubtless from the pen of 'G.' This analysis contains the translation of a letter written to Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel by Mendelssohn, in which he bears testimony to Raff's gifts as a composer. Here is the letter, dated 'Leipzig, November 20, 1843,' when Raff was only twenty-one years of age:—

'Most respected Sirs,

'I have received the enclosed letter and compositions, and cannot refrain from submitting them to you in the hope that you may be able to indulge both the writer and myself with a favourable answer to our wish. Were the pieces only signed by some well-known name I am persuaded they would have a very large sale, for the contents are such that it would be difficult to believe that many of the pieces were not by Liszt, Döhler, and other eminent players. The composition is elegant and faultless throughout, and in the most modern style; but now comes the fact that no one knows the name of the composer, which entirely alters the case. Perhaps a single piece might be taken out of each set, or possibly you may find that one or two of those for which I personally care least (e.g. the Galops) are more suited for the public taste; in a word, perhaps you may somehow be induced to print something out of the collection.

'If my hearty recommendation will have any weight I most willingly add it to the request of my young friend. In any case I must ask you to try the pieces over, and refer them to those friends who usually advise you in such cases, and then let me know the result, returning the letter at the same time, but I trust with only a little of the music. Such is my hope, which I beg you to pardon and excuse.

Yours faithfully,

F. M. B.'

This letter had its desired effect, and one Raff composition after another—including the four 'Galops'—were published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel owing to Mendelssohn's kindly recommendation of his 'young friend.'

'The Golden Legend' of Sullivan has almost eclipsed the earlier but not to be despised work on the same theme composed by the Rev. Henry Edward Hodson some five and twenty years ago. A recent performance—admirably given by the Ledbury Musical Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. T. Woodward—of Mr. Hodson's 'Golden Legend,' furnishes an opportunity for calling attention to his much-neglected cantata. The libretto,—compiled, we believe, by the Rev. James Baden Powell—founded on Longfellow's familiar poem, has certain points of resemblance to the later composition by Sullivan. But it is with Mr. Hodson's music that we are concerned. Here we find refinement and melodic interest, with dramatic fervour tempered by that artistic restraint that is not always found in modern strivings after effect. The music is tuneful and graceful. Evidence thereof may be found in Elsie's prayer, 'My Redeemer and my Lord,' the duet sung by Elsie and Prince Henry, 'Wilt thou as fond and faithful be?' and the sprightly 'Wedding March and Pageant Music'; while chorus singers will find scope for their energies in the fugue of the Epilogue, and several opportunities for the expressive rendering of music that is grateful to sing and that is free from difficulty. We are glad to hear that three performances of Mr. Hodson's 'Golden Legend' are contemplated; and for the sake of the earnest-minded composer, we trust that these few lines may be the means of promoting further interpretations of a work into which he has put so much heart-music.

Centenary celebrations may in truth be over-sentimentalized; but they serve a useful purpose if they are worthy and are regarded in a sympathetic spirit. This is especially the case in an art-work that, like some great rock, has stood fast for a hundred years or more and defied the ravages of time. Let us then, in pleasant retrospect, see what Beethoven was doing in 1804. His creative output for that year included two pianoforte sonatas and a symphony. But what sonatas! and what a symphony! when we know them to be the 'Waldstein,' the 'Appassionata,' and the 'Eroica.' It is true that he had begun the Symphony earlier than 1804; but it received its finishing touches in that year and, moreover, its original title 'Sinfonia grande Napoleon Bonaparte' was then changed by the angry composer to 'Sinfonia eroica.' Ferdinand Ries, Beethoven's pupil, records an interesting story relating to the composition of the finale of the 'Appassionata Sonata.' At Döbling, near Vienna, he and Beethoven 'went for an immense walk,' in the words of Sir George Grove, 'and did not get home till eight in the evening.' To continue Grove's account, 'During the whole time Beethoven had been humming and growling to himself, but without anything like a tune. On Ries asking him what it was, he replied that it was a theme for the finale of the Sonata. The instant they reached the house Beethoven sat down to the piano without taking off his hat, and for more than an hour pounded away at his new idea. Ries sat in a corner listening.' Fortunate Ries! Well, one hundred years have passed and much music has been composed—and forgotten—during that period; but these wonderful creations of that mighty genius retain all their pristine beauty and inexhaustible charm.

Professor Johann Kruse has announced his second Musical Festival, which is to be held in Queen's Hall during April, and to be conducted by Herr Felix Weingartner. The scheme includes the first appearance in London of Dr. Henry Coward's Sheffield Choir (300 voices), who will sing the choral portions of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony and Mass in D, Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens'—test-pieces par excellence for those renowned chorus-singers from Sheffield. The occasion will be looked forward to with unusual interest.

After all the trouble that has been taken in gathering together the information contained in the White Book from which we give extracts on p. 100, it would be a great pity if it failed to become of practical value in our own country. Something has already been done—Bournemouth, for instance, furnishes a splendid example—in the municipalization of music, but there is a large field for further effort in this direction. England should surely not be behind some of the smaller towns on the Continent in granting financial aid from municipal funds towards the promotion of an art that has an acknowledged influence on the well-being of the community.

Variety rather than novelty characterizes the prospectus of the Philharmonic Society—now ninety-two years old—for the coming season. The only actual 'first performance' will be that of a 'Symphonic Prelude to Byron's "Manfred,"' composed by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse, a clever student of the Royal Academy of Music. First performances in England of the following instrumental works are promised of a Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra, by Franco da Venezia, with Ernesto Consolo as soloist; and a Violoncello Concerto by Joseph Jongen, in which the solo instrument will be in the capable hands of Jean Gerardy. The symphonies promised are: Beethoven, No. 4; Brahms, No. 2; Glazounov, No. 6; Mozart, in E flat; Raff, 'Lenore'; Schubert, in C; Schumann, No. 1. We gladly welcome the announcement of the revival of the 'Lenore' symphony of Raff, a composer who has been sadly and unjustifiably neglected of late. We make further reference to this in another 'Occasional note.' The scheme also includes Sir Charles Stanford's Clarinet Concerto (soloist, Mr. Charles Draper), Dr. Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody,' Mr. Edward German's 'Rhapsody on March Themes,' Brahms's Rhapsody for contralto solo (Miss Muriel Foster) and male chorus, and Mendelssohn's Scherzo from his Octet in E flat (specially scored by the composer for the Philharmonic Society in 1829), in addition to other works of an interesting and attractive nature. The Prospectus bears striking testimony to the vitality of the veteran Society, and a successful season may be assured. An increase in the price of the cheapest seats at these old-established concerts has brought us the following letter, the writer of which (who sends his name and address) wishes to remain anonymous. This protesting communication speaks for itself.

SIR,—Will you come to the rescue of the one shilling concert-goers and help us to protest against the Philharmonic Society having raised the 1s. seats this season to 2s. 6d.? If some united remonstrance could be brought to bear on the Directors something might yet be done. That the London public resents this increased charge has been abundantly shown at the 'Pops,' this season. And now, a still older Society raises the price 150 per cent. Year after year I have seen the same faces in 1s. seats, and tickets for the seven concerts have been taken in February, when, as last year, it was possible. Will it be so now? I trow not. The most regular attendant I know for many years declines to pay the advance, and many will do the same.

I trust that you, Sir, will use your powerful pen to advocate the cause of those who are not wealthy. I hope you will insert this letter, as you can do battle for us far better than

A ONE SHILLING CONCERT-GOER.

Weighty utterances indeed were those that fell from the lips of Professor Niecks at the Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians recently held in Glasgow. 'General Culture' was his watch-word, a cry which has need to be proclaimed from many towers. As the Professor said: 'The musician should be not only a complete professional, but also a complete man. Indeed, as art is part of humanity, the incompleteness of the man unfailingly affects the completeness of the musician.' This is excellently put. And is not the complete man the gentleman? Again, to quote further from Dr. Niecks, 'general culture not only helps the musician in his art, it also improves his worldly prospects and gives him a position in society. The individual that is nothing but a lawyer, chemist, engineer, merchant, or artist—that has no interests outside his department, cannot be regarded as a full member of society and the body politic, being a mere drudge, not a free citizen.' No truer words were ever spoken.

The lively interest widely felt in folk-songs by musicians and amateurs is ministered to opportunely in the series of three lectures on British Folk-Song, given at the Royal Institution by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, on the 16th, 23rd, and 30th ult. It must be confessed that it is by no means an easy matter to deal adequately with such a subject before a miscellaneous audience, of whose power of aural analysis and technical acquirements the lecturer may justly entertain grave doubts. A pedagogic lesson on modes, finals, the pentatonic scale, and other subtle peculiarities of the old music, with diagrams to help the mind and slowly-performed illustrations to aid the ear, would be educational no doubt, but not at all to the taste of a Royal Institution audience seeking general ideas from authoritative sources. So Mr. Maitland, in the two lectures we have so far heard, did not venture to explain too much, and he paid his audience the compliment of assuming that their ears and mind could follow his luminous and erudite account of the evolution of the Folk-Song. The experts present were keenly interested, and the non-experts were satisfied by the implied flattery and by the admirable performance of the aptly-chosen examples sung by Miss A. K. Alston and Mr. J. C. McInnes, and others played by Mr. Maitland.

The first lecture was devoted to the consideration of the Celtic elements in British Folk-Song. The characteristic features were stated to be racial rather than national. One feature was the use of the pentatonic scale and the influence of that scale even on melodies that are not limited to five notes. 'The Groves of Blarney' (better known as 'The Last Rose of Summer') was instanced as an example. A point brought out was that the chief or tonic of the five notes was not always the same member of the series. Thus, adopting the black notes of the key-board as giving the relations of the pentatonic scale—it will be seen that conceivably they can belong more or less definitely to modes of the keys of G flat, C flat, or D flat. The origin of the pentatonic scale was briefly discussed. It is doubtful whether it was evolved because primitive instruments for various reasons used it or because of some psychological necessity. The use of the 'skirl' in Scotch tunes, an ornament most probably derived from the vagaries of preceptors, and the intrusion of what is known as the Scotch 'snap' in real Scotch tunes and in imitations thereof were regarded by Mr. Maitland as condemnable excrescences. James Hook's 'Within a mile of Edinboro' Town,' which was composed for performance in Vauxhall Gardens, was an example of this spurious style. The 'rhyme-structure' (a term for which Mr. Maitland apologised) of many folk-songs was described. It refers to the construction of tunes from two melodic phrases slightly varied on repetition. 'The Groves of Blarney' was again instanced as an example. Among the songs sung as illustrations in the course of the lecture were 'The Berkshire Tragedy,' which was much enjoyed, 'The Farmer's Daughter,' and 'My love's an arbutus.'

At the second lecture modal influences were dealt with. The Greek and ecclesiastical modes were described and their prevalence in British and Breton folk-music was illustrated. Allusion was made to the neglect of modal study by modern musicians—it is only in the sixteenth edition of his work on Harmony that Professor Prout has thought it worth while to go into the matter. German music was said to be more modal in its chorales than in its folk-songs. The researches of M. Bourgault-Ducoudray were highly spoken of, and illustrations of modal usage were performed from his arrangements. 'The Pedlar,' 'Bristol Town,' and many other songs, the names of which we did not catch (no programme was issued), were performed to illustrate the use of all the modes in turn. Much of the Welsh music often claimed as old was declared to be clearly comparatively modern. The complex subject of the harmonization of the modes was briefly touched upon, and fuller consideration was reserved for the last lecture. In this connection we note that all the songs were performed with accompaniment. One could not help feeling that the peculiar character of the modal songs especially would have been more distinctly felt if they had been sung unaccompanied. A pentatonic or a modal melody derives its character from the play of certain limited or specially used tonal relations. An accompaniment almost inevitably introduces other tonal relations, and therefore more or less alters the mental effect of such a melody.

The Prospectus of the Elgar Festival has been issued by the Grand Opera Syndicate and Mr. Alfred Schulz-Curtius. As already stated three concerts will be given in Covent Garden Theatre on consecutive evenings, beginning on Monday, March 14. On the first evening 'The Dream of Gerontius' will be performed, and on Tuesday 'The Apostles' will be given for the first time in London. An orchestral concert is allocated to the third evening, at which a new orchestral work will be performed for the first time, and the programme will include the 'Sea Pictures,' to be sung by Madame Clara Butt. The Hallé Orchestra, the Manchester Chorus (275 voices), and soloists of repute will join their forces in interpreting the various works under the skilful direction of Dr. Hans Richter.

Mr. Charles A. E. Harriss, of Ottawa, has sent us an interesting souvenir of the First Cycle of Musical Festivals of the Dominion of Canada, inaugurated by him and successfully carried out in the spring of last year. The volume consists of all the programme-books of the various concerts so ably conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, together with many portraits of those who showed a practical interest in this important series of music-makings. The letters written by Sir Alexander to THE MUSICAL TIMES, in which he graphically described his Canadian experiences on that auspicious occasion, find a place in the preface to this record of 'something attempted, something done.'

In reply to one or two inquiries concerning the Prize Competitions announced in our last issue, and in order to remove any misapprehension in regard to the conditions therein set forth, we desire to say (1) that competitors may enter for both prizes; (2) that the Prayer Book version of the Psalms may be adopted in selecting words for the anthem; and (3) that there are no restrictions as to the nationality of composers.

Madame Albani expected to sail for the Cape on the 30th ult. for a concert tour in the Colonies of South Africa, where she is sure to meet with that cordial reception which invariably attends her progress.

The performances of Wagner's 'Parsifal' in New York are specially reported in the letter from our American correspondent on p. 116.

A correspondent propounds a conundrum—at least we take it to be such—in asking: 'Can a deceased virtuoso be termed a finished artist?'

SUBSIDIZED MUSIC ABROAD:

GLEANINGS FROM A WHITE PAPER.

It is seldom that so interesting a Parliamentary Paper is issued as that contained in:—

A Return from British Diplomatic or Consular Officers as to financial support, whether in the form of Subsidies, Guarantees, or Buildings or Sites for Buildings, given from State or Municipal resources to Dramatic, Operatic, or Musical performances in the countries to which such Officers are accredited, specifying in each case the amount or value and the conditions (if any) attached thereto.

This document—'Presented to the House of Commons by command of His Majesty, in pursuance of their Address dated March 2, 1903'—contains replies to the circular addressed by the Marquess of Lansdowne, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to His Majesty's Representatives in Europe, North and South America, and Cairo. Lord Lansdowne's circular-letter reads:—

Sir, Foreign Office, March 14, 1903.

IN conformity with an Address of the House of Commons, copy of which is annexed, I request you to furnish me, in a form suitable for presentation to Parliament, with a Return as to the financial support, whether in the form of Subsidies, Guarantees, or Buildings, or Sites for Buildings, given from State or Municipal resources to Dramatic, Operatic, or Musical performances in the country to which you are accredited, specifying in each case the amount or value and the conditions (if any) attached thereto.

I am, &c.

(Signed) LANSDOWNE.

Replies appear to have been received from all the countries to which Lord Lansdowne's communication was addressed except Turkey! The information thus obtained and admirably set forth in this White Paper is of the highest importance in regard to State and Municipal aid towards the art of music. For the most part the replies deal, and that exhaustively, with the question of subsidized opera, from which it appears that, in this respect, Great Britain stands isolated from the Concert of Europe. But we may turn with profit to those portions of the Return which come within the range of practical politics in the land of 'Rule, Britannia'—the granting of public money by Municipalities and other representative bodies to musical societies in various parts of the world.

Taking the countries in the alphabetical order in which they appear in this White Paper, we find that in Hungary (the information is given under Austria-Hungary):—

The State gives no support to concerts; the only undertaking of that kind which enjoys a regular subvention being the Philharmonic Society, and that is derived not from the State, but from the Municipal funds of Budapest.

Belgium, which subsidizes dramatic vocal art from the 'Budget of Agriculture [!] and Fine Arts,' does not neglect to aid concerts and choral societies. This is what Sir C. Phipps tells us:—

The Government grants every year considerable subsidies to certain societies of symphonic concerts, such as those of the popular concerts and the Ysaye concerts at Brussels, and to several similar provincial societies.

It also gives subsidies, but only as an exceptional measure, to choral and harmonic societies, in order to help them to organize great competitions or important musical performances.

Our nearest neighbour, France, comes out well in the information supplied by Sir Edmund Monson, His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador. After setting forth the State aid rendered to 'the four national theatres,' he goes on to say:—

The State does not hold entirely aloof from dramatic and musical performances in Paris and the provinces, but encourages them by means of money grants renewed as often as possible.

Thus in Paris, for example, the Chevillard and Lamoureux Concerts receive individually an annual grant of 15,000 fr. (£600), on condition that they (1) do not exceed a maximum price for the places; (2) perform the piece which has won the 'Prix de Rome' that year; (3) perform a minimum number of pieces by French composers.

So much for the French capital, and who will not echo the word 'capital!' when they read that—

In the provinces the popular concerts at Lille, Angers, Bordeaux, and Marseilles are visited annually by the officials of the Ministry of Fine Arts, and receive grants varying from 2,500 fr. (£100) to 5,000 fr. (£200). Certain concerts of less importance receive grants of 300 to 1,000 fr. (£12 to £40); lastly, a very large number of choral, harmonic, and other musical societies receive grants varying from 50 to 150 fr. (£2 to £6). Musical competitions are encouraged by the presentation of silver gilt or chased silver medals as prizes to one of the competing societies. The expenses thus incurred are met by the vote of a round sum of 85,000 fr. (£3,400).

The State, in short, encourages dramatical, lyrical, or musical enterprise by direct subsidies, and in return only imposes obligations on the national theatres, and on the Chevillard and Lamoureux concerts.

Russia, while well supporting its opera and theatres in St. Petersburg and Moscow, either from the Emperor's treasury or State funds, does not neglect to aid the smaller places in its vast dominions; for instance:—

The Abo Musical Society receives a State grant of £100, the Viborg Musical Society £200, the Tammerfors Orchestra £133, the Vasa Orchestra £200, and each of these institutions receives a Municipal grant of £100.

Saxony seems to be a particularly favoured land. Many a conductor and treasurer of a British Choral Society will read the following with feelings almost akin to envy. And who can estimate the educational value of these well-bestowed aids from public funds?

The number of towns and large villages which give subventions for musical performances is very great.

Usually this subvention takes the form of a grant to a Director, who either supplies a band on specified days, or gives a certain number of concerts yearly with low entrance fees.

Often no conditions are made, the sole object being to promote music in the community. According to the size of the place, and what is expected, the subventions range between £10 and £75 per annum; in some cases there are town orchestras, which receive far higher sums.

Annaberg pays its Municipal Musical Director £150 a year.

Bautzen pays its Municipal Musical Director £75, besides £150 to keep up an orchestra of twenty men. He also has the theatre gratis for two Symphony Concerts yearly.

Glauchau gives its Musical Director £50, besides £180 for the orchestra. Fifteen performances of an hour each have to be given free per annum, and five popular concerts with tickets at a penny a-piece.

Zschopau has appointed a Director, who gets £45 from the Town Treasury and £15 from the Church Treasury. He also gets a residence, and a building for instructing his men, and a garden, all for the moderate charge of £40 10s.

The music of Spain is more or less an unknown quantity, but amid various subventions set forth by Sir M. Durand we find that at Barcelona—

The Provincial Deputation has established classes of music at the 'Casa de Caridad' Asylum, for the inmates, and also grants a subvention of 1,000 pesetas yearly to the 'Liceo Filarmónico Dramático Barcelonés of Queen Isabella II,' of 500 pesetas to the Spanish Naval Asylum, and of 3,500 pesetas to the Municipal School of Arts and Trades.

Under the heading Guipuzcoa—the smallest but most densely populated of the Basque provinces on the Bay of Biscay—we read:—

The Municipality of San Sebastian pays a subvention of 1,190 pesetas to the Municipal Academy, 500 pesetas to the 'Orfeón Donostiarra,' and 400 pesetas to the Society of Fine Arts, which also receives a grant from the Provincial Deputation of 5,000 pesetas.

Furthermore, at Seville:—

The Municipality contributes towards the maintenance of the Choral Society known as 'El Orfeón Sevillano.'

Switzerland is by no means behind larger States in its public-spirited attitude towards music. The following figures speak for themselves:—

NAME OF CANTON.		AMOUNT OF GRANT.
		Fr.	£

	To the Theatre (of which 7,000 fr. are for the orchestra) - - -	11,000	440

Lastly, the United States cut a very poor figure in this White Paper. We learn that 'No financial support is given in any form to dramatic, operatic, and musical performances from Federal funds,' and that 'the only instances of support being given to performances of this nature from Municipal funds occur at Boston and San Francisco.' Concerning these far-separated cities we read that:—

The City of Boston maintains a Music Department, which gives free public out-door band concerts in summer and indoor concerts of vocal and instrumental music during the winter. The cost of this Department for the year ending the 31st January, 1903, was $15,229 4c., or about £3,045.

At San Francisco music is supplied at the Golden Gate Park on Sundays and certain week-days. The cost is partly defrayed from Municipal funds, the musicians being paid at the ordinary rate of $5 (£1) a day.

The foregoing may prove useful to those who are doing splendid educational work in their various performances up and down the country, but who would be greatly relieved and encouraged by even a little financial help from Municipal funds. The Return also furnishes information as to subventions granted to Schools of Music. This feature of a very valuable document we may refer to on a future occasion.

Church and Organ Music.

The praises of the Lord in lively notes;
The whistles, with hollow throates,
The Choristers the joyous Anthems sing,
That at the words may answer, and their

CHURCH HYMNS—A NEW EDITION.

Nearly thirty years have come and gone since the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge issued 'Church Hymns, with tunes. Edited by Arthur Sullivan.' The Preface thereto is dated 'Easter, 1874,' and we have before us a copy of the first edition, purchased in June of that year, a modest octavo book, bound in limp cloth of dark maroon colour, for which the sum of two shillings was paid. Now comes the new edition—very much akin to 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' in appearance and size—issued by the same Society, but with Dr. Charles H. Lloyd as editor of the music. A few comparative notes on the two books may not be without acceptance.

When the 'Tune-book to Church Hymns'—as the book is called in the original Preface—was first issued in 1874, not a little speculation was rife as to what Sullivan had made of it. He had then freed himself from an ecclesiastical office, and, with his 'Box and Cox' and 'Thespis' achievements, he had begun to make himself known as a composer of humorous music. However, his early training as one of the Children of the Chapel Royal, his London organistships,—St. Michael's, Chester Square, and St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens—not to mention his anthem compositions, inspired confidence. In the first edition of 'Church Hymns' twenty-six tunes by Sullivan appeared therein for the first time, in addition to seven arranged or adapted by him. Some of these tunes have since become very popular, notably two settings of children's hymns—'Hushed was the evening hymn,' and 'Brightly gleams our banner.' On the subject of children's hymns Sullivan showed his common sense, as set forth in the following paragraph from his Preface:—

In the majority of cases where the words are set to an unison tune, a harmonised version is given as well; but in some instances this has not been thought necessary, notably in the Children's Hymns, where a bright, taking melody has been the first consideration—a melody that children can learn easily and willingly, and which requires only a simple Organ, or, for school use, Harmonium accompaniment.

It is a pity that composers and editors have not more generally heeded Sullivan's wise words in regard to catering for the bairns, instead of harmonizing simple melodies in a manner which often destroys their naiveté.

Like 'The Hymnary,' issued two years earlier, 'Church Hymns' originally appeared in crotchet notation, but with a curious line-end device which may be explained in the words of the Preface:—

The marking of the divisions of the lines in the music is an important question, upon which no settled rules have ever yet been laid down. In the present work the following plan has been adopted:—The Long Metres are distinguished by a single broad bar at the end of the first and third lines, and a double bar at the end of the second line and at the close; and, the great aim being to guide the eye as far as possible, a similar principle has been acted upon in other metres, wherever it seemed likely to facilitate that object.

We may now turn from the old to the new edition. Here we find that while it contains sixty-six more hymns than its predecessor, 'some 250 hymns in the old edition have been omitted, carrying with them a number of tunes for which there was no further need.' The Preface further states:—

Open notes have generally been substituted for the black notes of the old edition, as being easier to read; and, with a few special exceptions, double bars have been placed to correspond with the end of each line of the words.

While the dates of composers—not to say the birth-years of those still in the flesh—may very well have been relegated to the index, it seems a pity that the names of authors are not given at the end of each hymn. The absence of numbers to the verses may cause confusion, and we venture to doubt the practical advantage that may accrue from the insertion of metronome rates. The speed at which a hymn-tune can be properly sung must depend upon circumstances, of which not the least important is the size of a congregation. Again, the same tune—e.g., 'Melcombe'—not infrequently demands elasticity in regard to speed; its rate of progress must be regulated by the character of the hymn—praise or prayer—with which it is associated.

In the selection of a musical editor the compilers of 'Church Hymns' did well in securing the services of Dr. Charles H. Lloyd, Precentor of Eton. It is true that he has not had the experience of a parish church organist, but his musicianship and artistic insight are indisputable. A new edition of a hymnal is, to some extent at least, fettered by the traditions of its predecessor, but we should have been glad if Dr. Lloyd had not retained the maimed melodic version of 'Croft's 148th' (No. 44). The original dotted note in 'Rockingham' reappears, but not the original rhythmic form of 'Bedford.' It is strange that editors should go on perpetuating the unwarrantable alteration of William Gardiner, the Leicestershire stocking-maker, who changed the original triple rhythm of the composer, William Wheall, a true musician, to the quadruple version. Surely a tune which, in its beautiful triple form, stood the test of a hundred years, should be allowed to appear in the manner in which the composer wrote it.

We gladly welcome so many (thirty-eight) children's hymns. The selection is excellent—both words and music—and the original form of Gauntlett's 'Once in royal David's city' is a step in the right direction. In this juvenile section three new tunes deserve special commendation—they are the settings of 'The morning bright with rosy light' (No. 637), by Dr. Lloyd; 'Father, while the shadows fall' (No. 620), a charming evening-hymn, by Mr. A. M. Goodhart; and 'Sweetly sang the angels' (No. 636), a strain which the children will love to sing, by Mr. T. F. Dunhill.

With the index as an informant, we find that the book contains twenty-seven new tunes, of which Dr. Lloyd has contributed eleven. The other composers who have rendered aid in this respect are Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, Mr. T. F. Dunhill, Mr. A. M. Goodhart, Dr. Basil Harwood, Mr. H. S. Irons, Mr. F. S. Kelly, Professor Horatio Parker, Sir Hubert Parry, Dr. C. W. Pearce, the late Sir John Stainer and Sir Charles Stanford; there are in addition two tunes by anonymous composers. Time alone will determine how many of these twenty-seven contributions to the Church's song will survive. It is not the gift of every composer to write a good hymn-tune, one that shall in truth be as 'wings of song' upon which the combined praises of congregated worshippers may be upward borne, therefore we may be excused for passing detailed criticism on the new matter here set before us; but in addition to the children's tunes already mentioned, we may point to a setting by Dr. Lloyd of Christina Rossetti's hymn beginning 'None other Lamb, none other Name' (No. 479), and the two tunes by anonymous composers (Nos. 14 and 87), as those that are likely to become favourites.

'A special feature has been made of Plain Song tunes, of which about sixty have been included,' and to quote further from the Preface, 'the selection and harmonization of these demanded technical knowledge of an exceptional kind.' This is perfectly true, and in this connection the Editor is to be congratulated in having secured the invaluable assistance of Dr. Basil Harwood. The copious indexes are all that could be desired, and Dr. Lloyd has discharged his editorial duties with conspicuous success. The book is a welcome contribution to the worship-song of the Church.

'CHRISTIANS, AWAKE.'

The memory of the composer of the tune to John Byrom's famous Christmas hymn, 'Christians, awake, salute the happy morn,' has recently been honoured in Stockport Parish Church, of which he was at one time organist. On December 27, as representing the subscribers, Mr. Robert Hollingdrake, J.P., unveiled a memorial tablet bearing the following inscription:—

In memory of John Wainwright who was born in Stockport, sometime Organist of this Church, who left as an heritage to the Church at large a Tune whose sound is gone out into all lands where the praise of our Incarnate Lord is sung. In 1757 he resided in Manchester, and became Organist of the Collegiate Church. He was buried at this Church January 8th 1768 aged 45 years.

Stockport.

"He hath put a new song in my mouth."

Psalm xl. 3.

The dedicatory service—in which the choirs of St. Mary's, St. Peter's, St. Thomas's, St. George's and Christ Church, Stockport, took part—naturally included 'Christians, awake,' sung in procession, in which the congregation heartily joined. The sermon—from the appropriate text, 'Let us now praise famous men such as found out musical tunes, and recited verses in writing'—was preached by the Rev. E. G. Swain, of King's College, Cambridge, son of Mr. Charles Swain, organist of Stockport Parish Church, who has been the mainspring in the movement whereby his distinguished predecessor has thus been commemorated. Immediately after the Benediction the bells of the church chimed out, 'Christians, awake'—a beautiful ending to a memorable service. We gave a history of the hymn (with a facsimile illustration) and its tune in our issue of December, 1902, p. 794.

Mr. Burnham Horner has been the recipient of several presentations upon his retirement from the office of organist of St. Luke's Church, Redcliffe Square, Kensington. These gratifying gifts were from the congregation, the Vicar (the Rev. Evan J. Hopkins)—with whom Mr. Horner has been associated as organist for some thirty years—and the gentlemen of the choir.

A new three-manual organ, built by Mr. J. Jepson Binns, of Leeds, has recently been erected in St. George's Congregational Church, West Hartlepool. The dedication and inauguration of the instrument took place on the 13th ult., when Dr. A. L. Peace gave a recital with much acceptance. A week later Mr. Alfred Hollins skilfully tested the qualities of the organ. On that occasion the anthem which he specially composed for THE MUSICAL TIMES, 'O, worship the Lord,' was sung for the first time, and to his masterly accompaniment. The organ, which is the gift of Mrs. G. H. Baines, has given every satisfaction.

VIOLIN, TRUMPET, AND ORGAN.

An exceedingly interesting music-making was given in the church of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, at the close of Even-song, on Sunday, the 10th ult., which took the novel form of a Violin, Trumpet, and Organ Recital. We give the complete programme, prepared by Mr. John E. Borland, organist of the church, with whom were associated, in the interpretation of the music, Miss Lilian Butler (violin) and Mr. Walter Morrow (trumpet):—

TRUMPET AND ORGAN	'Légende' ...	Orlando Morgan
VIOLIN AND ORGAN	Adagio in E ...	Gustav Merkel
TRUMPET AND ORGAN	Fantasia in F ...	Auguste Chapuis
VIOLIN AND ORGAN	'Réverie' ...	Henri Vieuxtemps
TRUMPET AND ORGAN	Andante and Allegro Energico in B flat ...	G. Alary

A CHOIR MAGAZINE.

'The Songster' is the title of a choristers' magazine issued quarterly in connection with the choir of St. Michael's Church, Highgate, of which the organist, and the editor of the periodical, is Mr. George T. Fleming. No complaint can be made on the score of variety in regard to the contents of this brightly-written magazine. The articles range from 'Notes on the anthems in use at St. Michael's,' to 'Jokettes for the Juniors,' the latter department needing special care in a church publication. However, all tastes have to be considered, as the advertisement pages of 'The Songster' testify. The idea of such a magazine is good, and if we have spoken a warning word, it is only from a desire to help forward all that is best in church music and its associations.

Reviews.

Gavotte and Musette, and Valse M lancolique. From the Orchestral Suite composed by Theophil Wendt (Op. 16, Nos. 1 and 2). Pianoforte arrangement.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The more we see of Mr. Wendt's music the better we like it. These two movements present in old forms so much that is fresh and charming that we can only regret the absence of the remaining numbers of the orchestral suite to which they belong. It is difficult to write gavottes and musettes that avoid stereotyped phraseology and effects, but Mr. Wendt has succeeded remarkably well where so many have failed. The opening theme is crisp, flowing and tuneful, even 'catchy'; harmonically and contrapuntally the piece is interesting, and a profusion of dynamic changes lends variety to a delightful movement. The Musette also is unconventional. Short passages of ponderous gravity alternate with others of airy grace and wilfulness, an occasional descending semiquaver quintuplet run adding to the humour displayed throughout in many a trill and droning bass. We thank Mr. Wendt for a really unhackneyed and masterly specimen of old dance forms.

Even more fascinating is the 'Valse M lancolique,' a captivating orchestral movement of a light character. Once more the subject-matter is chosen with great felicity and with an eye to effective contrast. The opening theme, as befits the title of the piece, bears a cold, forlorn aspect which a light scheme of harmonization tends to emphasize. Matters assume a different aspect when the brighter second section of the subject appears, and especially when an expressive violoncello 'song' theme is added as a counterpoint below the first section. The trio is quite one of the most charming things we have come across for some time. The melody, assigned, we fancy, to violoncelli, is laden with sighs and longing. Intervals of ascending and descending sevenths and ninths play an important part in it, and an unusual number of directions for alterations in speed and dynamics, pauses on and between different beats of the bars, gives the languorous music an air of hesitancy and capriciousness which is captivating to a degree. The composer rouses himself from his reverie and melancholy in a vigorous and impassioned crescendo, leading after twenty bars of an exciting stringendo to a furious outburst ffff on a long-sustained chord of the dominant minor thirteenth on a pedal F sharp. The return to the 'cold' first subject is beautifully managed—fragments of the theme stealing shyly and cautiously, as it were, out of the grey mist of a high violin tremolo. Given good effective orchestration, this beautiful piece should prove a real acquisition to the repertoire of orchestral societies. We speak deliberately when we express the opinion that it is not unworthy of Tchaikovsky in his lighter mood.

About Music, and what it is made of. By Oliveria Prescott.

[Methuen and Co.]

Miss Prescott is favourably known as the authoress of a book entitled 'Form, or design in vocal and instrumental music.' In the volume now before us she pleasantly and concisely sets forth much interesting matter on such interesting themes as 'Home music in England,' 'From Madrigal to modern style,' 'The rise of opera,' 'The course of oratorio,' and 'The making of symphonies,' and treats of them in a manner that fully justifies the title of her book. As a pupil of the late Sir George Macfarren, Miss Prescott would scorn the superficial sophisms of some makers of books on music; yet while she is thorough, she is by no means pedantic or dogmatic. The educational value of her pages admits of no question; and this attractive volume would not only make a good school prize for music, but might be read with advantage by children of older growth. A slight correction is needed in the music-type example (b) on p. 69; and we confess to a liking for the natural sign to the first F in the second line of the example on p. 32, as, while the modulation to G is so clearly indicated by the sharpened F, the return to the main key (C) has no such guide-post, so-to-speak. But these things do not detract from the general excellence of an acceptable and readable volume.

The lyrics are: "came and roll - ed back the stone from the door, and". The piano part is a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. It begins with a forte (sf) dynamic marking. The piano accompaniment is characterized by a dense, rhythmic texture, primarily using eighth and sixteenth notes, creating a driving, pulsating effect. The score is divided into two systems, each ending with a double bar line and a repeat sign.

The Witch of Atlas (after Shelley). Tone-poem (No. 5) for Orchestra. By Granville Bantock. Full Score.
[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Bantock is one of the most industrious of composers. His facility seems remarkable even in these days of technique run riot. The work under notice is programme music of the most pronounced type, the full score which lies before us containing long quotations from Shelley's poem. The music must consequently be judged as programme music pure and simple, and no other standard should be applied. It is essentially one of those modern works in which beautiful orchestration per se must be regarded as a valuable asset. It is here carried to such a pitch of perfection, the orchestral colour is so beautiful in itself and so successful in its suggestion of poetical ideas, that it can be enjoyed on its own account and defended as an end in itself, instead of merely a means to an end.

Shelley's poem presents a composer with a 'programme' after Mr. Bantock's own heart. Such lines as—

'Tis said she first was changed into a vapour,
And then into a cloud, such clouds as flit,
Like splendour-winged moths about a taper,
Round the red West when the sun dies in it.

call for, and at the hands of our composer receive, very delicate and fanciful treatment. Sustained pp chords for trumpets, trombones, and tuba (all muted), soft harp arpeggios, persistent, fluttering little string figures pp above gently-sustained melodic phrases for oboe, horn, solo violin, and solo viola, produce a piece of exquisite colour and poetic suggestiveness. In great contrast to this delicate conception stands the Marziale, con anima illustrating the words:—

And then she called out of the hollow turrets
Of those high clouds, white, golden and vermilion,
The armies of her ministering spirits—
In mighty legions, million after million.

Here the composer produces sonorous effects, such as Liszt and Tschaiikovsky loved. We have the same reiteration and sequential treatment of one-bar phrases, the same rushing chromatic scale passages in tutti strings, or tutti wood-wind, the same rhythmical energy which may mean a great deal or nothing at all, according to the listener's views on programme music.

Fortunately Mr. Bantock is not without a keenly-developed sense of beauty, and though in this symphonic poem his colour-sense is more markedly in evidence than that of thematic beauty, we do not mean to imply that the work is all colour, et præterea nihil. A long-drawn melody of considerable beauty is developed at some length in the section describing how Old Silenus is 'teased' by Driope and Faunus to 'sing them something new,' and how they ... found the lady lone,

Sitting upon a seat of emerald stone.

Then again, at the words (we must use the terms generally applicable to a choral work) 'For she was beautiful: her beauty made the bright world dim,' &c., we meet with much that charms and interests, both melodically and harmonically, apart from all considerations of orchestral colour. Taken as a whole the work is a notable effort in a direction towards which modern music seems to trend, and conductors who appreciate a poetic and convincing musical interpretation of a beautiful poem, and a masterpiece of orchestral scoring, may be recommended to give Mr. Bantock's work a hearing.

FLUTE MUSIC.

The Flute Players' Journal—Venezia, Barcarolle, and Allegro, by Percy Stranders.

La Flûte de Pan, by Paul Wachs.

Four Melodious Studies, by G. Kummer (with pianoforte accompaniment by A. P. Vivian).

Die Puppe und Der Hampelmann, by F. Sabathil.

[Rudall, Carte, and Company.]

The above are all original compositions for the flute, and not, as is often the case with flute literature, arrangements of popular airs. The pieces by Mr. Stranders are full of graceful and musicianly ideas, and very well written for the instrument. The accompaniments are of such importance that the two movements may be fairly described as duets. 'La Flûte de Pan' depends mainly for its effect upon scale and arpeggio passages rather than upon flowing themes. It is, however, a very effective solo. Herr Kummer's Studies are rather more conventional in style, but they are skilfully written for the display of good technique. The accompaniment by Mr. A. P. Vivian, who, as everyone knows, is one of our best flautists, furnishes an unobtrusive support to the solo instrument. The remaining two pieces, by F. Sabathil, are very pretty studies, and would make acceptable and contrasting contributions to a concert programme. Die Puppe (Slumber Song) is pretty and smooth, and Der Hampelmann (Jumping Jack) is very lively and brilliant.

Mozart. By Ebenezer Prout. Beethoven. By J. S. Shedlock. Gounod. By Henry Tolhurst. Sullivan. By H. Saxe Wyndham. Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians. Edited G. C. Williamson.

[George Bell and Sons.]

This series of biographies forms a companion to Messrs. Bell's 'Miniature Series of Painters.' The books, in size about 6 in. by 4 in., and published at one shilling each, are very daintily got up and are companionable. No better selection could have been made in the choice of Professor Prout and Mr. Shedlock to write the monographs on Mozart and Beethoven respectively, and Mr. Ernest Ford contributes a chapter to the Sullivan biography on 'Sullivan as composer.' These handy little books, in addition to being illustrated, contain an amazing deal of information presented in a sort of Brand's Essence or Bovrilized form. They are sure to find their way into many a pocket.

Te Deum, Benedictus and Jubilate in G. By Bertram Luard-Selby.

Benedicite in D. By H. Elliot Button.

O God of Wisdom. Hymn. By Willem Coenen.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

The Morning Service in G by the organist of Rochester Cathedral is admirably designed to meet the requirements of the majority of church choirs; moreover, it may be specially recommended to clergymen who object to over much repetition. The Te Deum is strong diatonic music, easy to read, grateful to sing, and simple to follow. The Benedictus and Jubilate are planned on the same lines, and the service is worthy of wide acceptance. Mr. Button has written for the Benedicite two melodious quadruple chants, with alternative accompaniment for certain verses directed to be sung in unison by the adult and junior members of the choir. The Gloria is set separately to music developed from the first chant. The arrangement is well designed to avoid the monotony of the 'Song of the three children.' The words of Mr. Coenen's hymn, by Ernest S. Rogers, are intended for the marriage ceremony. The music, while possessing emotional warmth of expression, is devotional.

ANTHEMS.

Blessed is the Man. By Herbert W. Wareing.

Blessed be the Lord my strength. By E. Markham Lee.

Except the Lord build the house. By Eaton Faning.

O God of my righteousness. By Maurice Greene.

If the Lord Himself. By Thomas Attwood Walmisley.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There is a freshness in Dr. Wareing's anthem 'Blessed is the Man' which should appeal to a wide circle of church musicians. The setting of the initial phrase admirably accentuates the declaration of the words, and conviction rings in the music of the subsequent section. Tonal contrast is obtained by a passage for tenor and basses in four-part harmony, and the working of the opening chorus for the finale gives a sense of completeness. The anthem 'Blessed be the Lord my strength' by Dr. Markham Lee makes less demands on its exponents than the foregoing work; but the music is interesting, and the various entrances of the voices, while by no means difficult of execution, are calculated to keep a choir alert.

Dr. Eaton Fanning always writes with keen perception of what is effective, and this fact will doubtless encourage choirs to acquire the absolute precision demanded in the contrapuntal portions of his anthem 'Except the Lord build the house.' The design includes passages for semi-chorus and for basses in unison, while towards the close the soprano voices are divided into two parts whereby effective vocal contrast is obtained.

The two anthems by Greene and Walmisley, it need scarcely be said, are not new; that by Dr. Greene has been edited and furnished with an organ accompaniment at the experienced hands of Mr. John E. West, and that by Thomas Attwood Walmisley is a revised octavo edition of one of the finest of this esteemed composer's anthems. Dr. Greene's 'O God of my righteousness' opens with a duet for soprano and tenor, the parts for which are written in imitation and possess much musical interest. This is followed by solos for tenor and soprano, the latter requiring careful singing. The conclusion is a spirited chorus in free counterpoint. These anthems—by two eminent masters of English church music—imperatively demand a well-trained and intelligent choir to do them justice; but the care and attention necessary to their study will be well repaid by those whose privilege it is to sing them. For the benefit of any who are not acquainted with Walmisley's fine compositions, it may be said that this Thanksgiving anthem, 'If the Lord himself,' contains a fine bass solo, and concludes with an imposing Hallelujah chorus in fugal form.

PART-SONGS.

I love a Lass. Words by George Wither; and Love and Beauty. Words by Robert Greene. Composed by W. H. Bell.

Woodman, Shepherds, come away. Words by James Shirley; and Lacking my Love. Words by Edmund Spenser. Composed by John E. West.

Charm me asleep. Words by Herrick; and Let me the canakin clink. Words from Shakespeare's 'Othello.' Composed by John B. McEwen.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. W. H. Bell has written a distinctive setting for S.A.T.B. of George Wither's quaint little poem on a faithless fair one. The part-writing is interesting, having the modern tendency to let the harmonic scheme grow out of the independent course of each voice, while change of sentiment or thought is suggested by juxtaposition of distantly-related keys. Those so contrasted in this piece are the major keys of A, C, and E, with a Coda in the initial key consisting of four bars, a repetition of the close of the first verse, which has a humorous effect. The composition is decidedly clever. The same method is pursued in 'Love and Beauty,' a notably effective harmonic transition from G minor to A major being made at the words 'until he die,' followed by a quick return to the initial key of F. The subsequent passage will require a nice balance of tone, the alto and tenor parts being embroideries of melodic themes which should be given out more prominently by the sopranos and basses.

Mr. John E. West has adopted the old style of writing in setting music to James Shirley's and Edmund Spenser's poems, and not without good reason, for they date respectively from the 16th and 17th centuries. 'Woodman, Shepherds, come away' is a vivacious part-song abounding in ingenious contrapuntal devices and effective entrances for the voices, but it will need careful practice and great crispness of attack to do it justice. 'Lacking my Love' makes less demands on its executants, but it is not less interesting on that account, and it has the merit of being flowing and expressive.

Mr. John B. McEwen's part-songs are excellent specimens of their kind. 'Charm me asleep' is a beautiful setting of Herrick's lines, the music is pleasing and graceful, and richly harmonized. It might fulfil the poet's request and make one weep, but certainly not sleep. 'Let me the canakin clink' is a direct contrast to the foregoing. Bright, breezy and bold, the music is as full of reckless jollity as are the lines, and the roudades which finish each verse put the finishing touch to an exhilarating and attractive composition.

Obituary.

MADAME ANTOINETTE STERLING.

With regret we record the death of Madame Antoinette Sterling, which took place at 70, Belsize Park Gardens, Hampstead, on the 10th ult. She was born at Sterlingville, in the State of New York, and she could trace her descent from the family of John Bradford, the martyr burnt at Smithfield in 1555, through William Bradford, one of the first company of the Pilgrim Fathers who crossed the Atlantic in 'The Mayflower' and who became the second Governor of Plymouth Colony, New England.

As a child Antoinette Sterling possessed a remarkable voice, which subsequently settled into a contralto of great richness and volume. She studied under Signor Abella at New York in the year 1867. In the following year she crossed the Atlantic, and some special research we have made in regard to this her first visit to Europe may clear up some mis-statements. She arrived in England in 1868, and took some lessons, given gratuitously, from Mr. (now Dr.) W. H. Cummings. He foresaw that she would make a greater singer of ballads than exponent of oratorio, and told her so; at the same time he urged her, as she had some knowledge of the language, to take up the singing of German Lieder. Furthermore, he invited some of the critics to his house in order that they might hear her sing, but she received no London engagements. Whether this was before or after she studied (in that same year, 1868) in Germany—under Madame Marchesi, at Cologne, and Pauline Viardot, at Baden-Baden—we are unable to say; but we have traced some public appearances of the American contralto in the provinces. During her sojourn in London she stayed with Miss Elizabeth Philp, the song composer, whom she accompanied on a concert tour in the West of England in the autumn of 1868. At Falmouth, Miss Philp's birthplace, two concerts were given on August 12 and 24. In a notice of the former of these the Falmouth Packet stated:—'The Irish King's ride,' a ballad also by Miss Philp (which we have heard is a great favourite in London) was magnificently sung by Miss Sterling, who fairly electrified the audience with the rich, full, contralto tones that floated from her lips. This gifted young artist was applauded in everything she sang, and twice encored.' The advertisement of the second concert announced her as 'Miss Sterling, the eminent contralto from New York, and who has created such a furor throughout Germany.' Therefore, it seems that she had previously appeared in public in the Fatherland and with success. She sang at a concert at Truro, at Bury St. Edmund's (on September 17), and probably elsewhere.

In 1873 Dr. Cummings, who heard her sing in Ward Beecher's Tabernacle, at New York, urged her to visit England again, and promised to do all he could on her behalf. She soon came to London, and made it her home. The first formal appearance of Madame Sterling took place at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden Theatre, under Rivière's auspices, on Guy Fawke's Day, 1873. Although a 'Classical night' (conducted by Benedict), the American singer showed some pluck in singing Bach's 'Cradle Song' (from the 'Christmas Oratorio') at a Promenade Concert in those unregenerate days; but she immediately scored a tremendous success, not a little due to her weird interpretation of Hullah's 'The Three Fishers.' Curiously enough, however, the newspapers of the day are silent as to her appearance! Engagements rapidly poured in upon her—the Crystal Palace, Sacred Harmonic, Philharmonic, the 'Pops,' and other leading concert institutions being eager to secure her services. She also sang at the concerts given nightly by Messrs. Novello in the Royal Albert Hall during the autumn of 1874, and at the Gloucester Festival of the same year. She wisely relinquished oratorio singing, and devoted her energies to ballads, in the rendering of which she made a great reputation. She introduced such favourite songs—most of which were specially composed for her—as Sullivan's 'Lost Chord' (first sung at the Ballad Concert of Messrs. Boosey, St. James's Hall, January 31, 1877), Cowen's 'The Better Land,' Molloy's 'Darby and Joan,' and Barnby's 'When the tide comes in,' &c.

Her majestic voice, remarkable appearance and striking personality combined to produce a spell-bound impressiveness in other songs, e.g., 'The Three Fishers' (a great favourite of hers), 'The Three Ravens' (how thrillingly she sang that), 'The Sands of Dee,' 'Caller Herrin' and others of a similar nature. Faults might be found with her interpretations from a super-technical point of view, and her eccentricities were not unknown; but for all that the intense feeling she threw into every strain she sang, and the clear enunciation of every word that fell from her lips, captivated her hearers. In 1875 Madame Sterling married Mr. John Mackinlay. His death occurred, while accompanying his wife on her Australasian tour, at Adelaide, in 1893. One of their sons, Mr. M. Sterling Mackinlay, has made successful appearances as a vocalist, and their daughter has adopted the stage as a profession. During the latter years of her life Madame Sterling devoted her energies to various philanthropic interests. She was ever ready to help forward any charitable or religious work by her gift of song—a gift in which her devout spirit had its full outlet, and her kindness of heart its warmest expression.

The funeral took place, on the 13th ult., at Golder's Green Crematorium, Hampstead. Among those present, in addition to Madame Sterling's two sons, were the veteran Manuel Garcia, Dr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Arthur Boosey, Mr. Alfred Littleton, and Mr. J. M. Coward, who played a selection of music on the Mustel organ.

MISS SABILLA NOVELLO.

An interesting link with the musical past has been severed by the death of MARY SABILLA NOVELLO, which, we regret to record, took place at the Villa Novello, Genoa, on the 8th ult., at an advanced age. The youngest surviving daughter of Vincent Novello, she well maintained the traditions of that mentally endowed family. Following the example of her elder sister Clara (the Countess Gigliucci), Miss Novello adopted the profession of a vocalist. She made her debut at Drury Lane Theatre, under Macready's management, on January 7, 1843, in a curious rifacimento from Rossini and Donizetti called 'The Maid and the Magpie.' Concerning the performance the Musical World, doubtless from the pen of Mr. J. W. Davison, stated:—

Miss Sabilla Novello is extremely young, interesting, and of no inconsiderable personal grace and attraction; she has a lovely natural soprano voice, carefully cultivated in the very best school—we say, a natural voice, to distinguish it from the many soprani who, by artifice, raise their pitch above its legitimate register, thereby injuring its quality and risking uncertain intonation. Miss Novello has the pure metal, and has moulded it with industry and taste; and she is in truth already an accomplished artist—there is nothing strained nor astonishing in her singing, which we take to be one of the surest auguries of future high excellence; and her youth and freshness of organ are additional promises of a most surprising vocal career.

Notwithstanding all the promises held out in the foregoing eulogy—a splendid 'send off' for a young artist—they were not to be fulfilled, as a delicacy of throat compelled her to relinquish the career of a professional singer. Miss Novello thereupon occupied herself during the remainder of her residence in England with teaching, in which connection she compiled a 'Vocal School' and wrote 'Voice and Vocal Art'; a treatise written for the use of teachers and students of singing, with anatomical illustrations of the vocal instrument. An excellent linguist, she translated Mozart's 'Succinct Thorough-bass School,' Albrechtsberger's Theoretical works, &c. Her literary gifts found an outlet in the following books, illustrated by herself: 'Hoho and Haha: their adventures'; 'Bluebeard's Wives: a veracious account of their several deaths'; and 'Bluebeard's Widow, and her sister Anne.'

Half-a-century ago Charles Cowden-Clarke wrote of his sister-in-law: 'There is no bigger and sounder head in the whole brood than Sabilla's, and no sounder heart either; she is a fine creature. She is a sound musician, an extraordinary artist, and as familiar with the French, Italian, Spanish, and German languages as her native English.' Although Miss Novello had lived for so many years in Italy, she kept herself in touch with matters musical and literary in England.

She took much interest in the biography of her father, Vincent Novello, which recently appeared in these columns, as several letters addressed to the writer of that sketch and of this notice bear testimony.

Other recent deaths that have to be recorded with regret are those of:—

ANDREW DEAKIN, at Birmingham, on December 21, aged 81, formerly musical critic of the Birmingham Daily Gazette, a sturdy defender of Handel, and a great collector of Handelianana.

MADAME JENNY VIARD-LOUIS, on December 27, at Auteuil, near Paris, aged 72. She will be remembered as an excellent pianist who gave orchestral concerts, under Weist Hill's conductorship, at St. James's Hall in 1878-9, at which she introduced several works for the first time to London audiences—e.g., Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' Suite and Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques.'

EDUARD LASSEN, the distinguished song composer, at Weimar, on the 15th ult. Born at Copenhagen, April 13, 1830, he was brought up in Brussels and received his musical education at the Conservatoire there. He gained the Government prize in 1851, which hall-marked him as a coming man, but with the exception of 'Faust' his operas failed to make any success. It is as a song composer that Lassen has deservedly acquired fame and wide popularity.

PETER JURGENSON, at Moscow, on the 6th ult., the well-known Russian music-publisher. M. Jurgenson, who was born at Reval, in the year 1836, founded his extensive business in 1861.

THOMAS ADLINGTON WALLWORTH, aged 70, on the 7th ult., at 44, Loughborough Park, Brixton, formerly a student and professor (of singing) at the Royal Academy. He was a pupil of Crivelli, and for some time a member of the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company. His many pupils will hear of Mr. Wallworth's death with regret.

JOSEF CANTOR, aged 51, on the 11th ult., at Liverpool. Mr. Cantor was well known in connection with Mr. William Lea's business in Church Street, also as a concert-giver, and in musical circles in the city on the Mersey.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Conference opened on December 28 with an informal reception by the local section of the Society in the St. Enoch Hotel. This meeting is generally one of the most enjoyable events of the week. One meets old friends and forms new friendships; and then there is that delightful anticipation of having 'a real good time,' which this year, happily, proved a reality. It would not be quite accurate to say that the lectures, with the consequent interchange of ideas, are the chief raison d'être of these Conferences. The social element bulks very largely, and rightly so; and the more these opportunities are taken advantage of in promoting brotherly good-feeling and unanimity of thought and aim among the members, the stronger and more influential will the Society become. Three factors made for the success of the Glasgow Conference, namely, an excellent syllabus of lectures, a well-arranged programme of social functions, and perfectly seasonable weather—the last by no means the least important.

The opening meeting proper took place on Tuesday morning December 29, in the Banqueting Hall of the Municipal Buildings, when, in a few well-chosen sentences, The Hon. the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Sir John Ure Primrose, Bart., gave a cordial welcome to the Members. After some formal business Dr. Cowen, the chairman for the day, delivered a lecture on 'The mannerisms of composers' (with illustrations on the pianoforte). Handel, Mozart, Weber, Mendelssohn, Wagner and Gounod were drawn upon for illustration, and the lecturer's remarks, all in the happiest vein, interested and at times amused the audience greatly.

In the afternoon Dr. McKendrick gave a most interesting lecture in his class-room at the University, his subject being 'Vocal Tones,' illustrated by many excellent experiments showing the lecturer's own researches into the nature of vowels and of speech sounds. In the evening the West of Scotland section of the Society held a reception at which much—some members thought too much—good music was discoursed. Among the items especially well-received was Mr. David Stephen's Trio for oboe, horn, and pianoforte.

Wednesday morning was assigned to Professor Niecks's address on 'The Importance to the Musician of General Culture as well as a comprehensive Professional Training, with special reference to the teacher of music.' Perhaps no more fitting subject could find place in the Society's discussions, and certainly no one was better able to expound it than the cultured occupant of the Reid Chair of Music at Edinburgh University. Dr. Niecks dealt at length with the tendency of musical students to devote all efforts to attaining the requisite technical equipment for their professional life, and to neglect those other studies—poetry, languages, philosophy, history, &c.—which tend to the culture of the mind. If ever a Scottish National School of Music be established, Dr. Niecks will doubtless put into practice the ideals so ably set forth in his paper. The discussion following the lecture was not always quite relevant, and one was occasionally reminded of the story of the theological student who was assured that at his examination he would be asked to give a list of the Kings of Judah and Israel. That question, however, was not asked, but a list of the major and minor prophets was required. The disappointed student answered by saying that it was not for him to differentiate between these holy men, but he would give a list of the Kings of Judah and Israel under whom they lived!

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to a visit to Glasgow Cathedral, where the Rev. Dr. P. McAdam Muir kindly received the Members, and after a short address of welcome pointed out the many interesting features of our old Minster. This was followed by a short recital on the recently enlarged organ by Mr. Herbert Walton, the accomplished organist of the Cathedral. In the evening a largely-attended reception was given in the Municipal Buildings by the Lord Provost and Magistrates of the city. Several instrumental bands discoursed music in various parts of the building, and in the Banqueting Hall the Members of the Glasgow Glee and Catch Club, under Mr. George Taggart, a magistrate of the city and a cultured amateur musician, sang several glees and part-songs, and repeated their recent performance (this time with orchestral accompaniment) of Mr. William Wallace's 'The Massacre of the MacPherson.' In another hall the Verbruggen Quartet charmed a large section of the Members with a well-chosen programme of chamber music.

On Thursday morning, December 31, Dr. D. F. Wilson read an exhaustive and carefully-prepared paper on 'The Folk-music of Scotland,' and vocal illustrations (without pianoforte accompaniment) were pleasingly given by Miss Murray Thomas. Much amusement was caused by Dr. Wilson proving that our so-called national instrument—the bagpipe—was introduced into Scotland from England! Needless to say the audience included many specialists in Scottish music, and many speakers contributed to the discussion on the paper. In the afternoon Mr. Algernon S. Rose read a racy paper on 'African Musical Instruments,' and exhibited many specimens of the instruments used by our black brethren in their music-makings in South Africa, Madagascar, Abyssinia, and Egypt.

Thursday evening's concert, by the Scottish Orchestra, was to many the most enjoyable feature of the Conference. The programme was fittingly chosen, the first half consisting of the works of native composers, represented by Sterndale-Bennett, Cowen, Elgar, Sullivan and Prout; and the second of well-known numbers by Tchaikovsky, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Beethoven, &c. Dr. Cowen and his forces had evidently resolved to give of their best, and in this they were eminently successful. The conductor's charming pieces 'Childhood' and 'Girlhood' were very well received, and Professor Prout's Minuet and Trio evoked so much applause as to cause the venerable and learned professor to acknowledge the plaudits from his place in the audience. Miss Jenny Taggart's vocal solos, selected with so much artistic insight, and sung so charmingly, proved a most acceptable variety in the orchestral programme.

The annual general meeting of the Society took place on New Year's Day, when Dr. E. W. Taylor occupied the chair. The election of chairmen for next year's Conference, to be held at Manchester, gave rise to a prolonged and persistent discussion. For the four sessions three chairmen were asked, the chairman for the fourth session being that nominee who has secured the next number of votes to the three elected. Why the meeting should not be asked to vote for the four required instead of three seemed most unbusinesslike to many of those present, and eventually the matter was put on a proper basis.

In the evening the customary banquet brought the Conference to a formal close. But the post-prandial adjournment to the drawing-room, and the singing of 'Auld lang syne' in hybrid Scotch was really the end of what all present admitted to have been one of the most successful Conferences the Society had ever had. Towards this success the labours of one Member must be thankfully acknowledged, namely, Mr. W. H. Murray, the Honorary Secretary of the West of Scotland Section of the Society.

'PARSIFAL' IN NEW YORK.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, January 10, 1904.

Long before this letter appears in the columns of THE MUSICAL TIMES the fact will be known in all the corners of the Occidental earth that Wagner's 'Parsifal,' for twenty-one years the exclusive property of the Bayreuth Festivals, is become a stock opera in the repertory of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York! Perhaps the phrase 'stock opera' is not altogether correct, since not only the first performance but all the repetitions have been attended by circumstances of an extraordinary character, and the Thursday nights at the Opera House set apart for them have had little or nothing in common with the nights of the regular season. The audiences have been as unusual in character as they have in size, and the work has been seen and heard more as a combined artistic and religious function than as a theatrical entertainment. It is well to say this at the outset, since there was a large apprehension in America among the devotees of Wagner's art that 'Parsifal' would suffer from being made the object of mere popular curiosity, and that the American public would neither bring with them that serious and reverential mood which is certainly essential to its proper appreciation, nor permit its creation in the playhouse.

As I write, three representations of the work have been given and seven more are scheduled before the end of the regular season. Thus far, as I can testify from experience in Bayreuth as well as in New York, the audiences in the American metropolis have conducted themselves with as much decorum and have displayed as much appreciation of Wagner's religious drama as those which have made the pilgrimage to the Wagnerian Mecca. As for the size of the audiences as a measure of interest there can of course be no comparison between Bayreuth and New York. The Metropolitan Opera House at each representation has contained about three times as many persons as can be accommodated at the Festspielhaus in Bayreuth. There are no indications that there will be a falling off in interest before the end of the season, and should Manager Conried's expectations be realized, he will be able next Spring to inform the world that 'Parsifal' has become an experience to 40,000 Americans, to whom heretofore it has been only a dream, and that about $180,000 has found its way into the exchequer of the amusement company of which he is the head. How much of this vast sum will by that time have been expended upon the representations it is not possible for me to say. The management has permitted the impression to go abroad that the 'production,' as theatrical people say, represents an investment of $100,000; but in this there seems to have been included the cost of a reconstruction of the stage of the Opera House. This reconstruction was essential to the adequate presentation of the drama, but inasmuch as it would have been undertaken whether or no 'Parsifal' was given, it does not seem fair to charge it up against Wagner's work.

English readers will scarcely need to be told that other questions than merely artistic ones were concerned in this production. I need not discuss them, though I may state them. It has been said that to give a stage performance of a work which by every conceivable legal means had been reserved by its creator and his heirs for exclusive performance at Bayreuth was a legalized theft. It was not that, because thievery cannot be made lawful. It was simply a theft for which the law, owing to the lack of a convention concerning copyrights and performing rights between Germany and the United States at the time the work was written, has provided neither a hindrance nor a punishment. Under conditions not at all favourable to success, had success been attainable, Madame Wagner tried by legal process to prevent the rape of the work; but the Courts were powerless to interfere. Having passed triumphant through that trial, Mr. Conried found himself in the midst of another. Numbers of the clergy, some eminent, others mere seekers after notoriety, attacked the work as sacrilegious. But this, as the Germans say, was but water on Mr. Conried's mill. He encouraged the controversy with all the art of an astute showman, and secured for the work such an advertisement as never a work had in this world before.

I must now give a brief account of the performances. The first took place on the afternoon and evening of December 24. The first act began at five o'clock and ended at seven. There was an interval of an hour and three-quarters to enable the audience to dine and get into evening garments before the second act. The interval between the second and third acts was only fifteen minutes long, and the drama came to an end at 11.20 p.m. The persons chiefly concerned in the representations were veterans in the service of the Bayreuth Festivals—Madame Ternina, who impersonated Kundry, Mr. Burgstaller (Parsifal), Mr. Van Rooy (Amfortas), Anton Frichs, the stage manager, Lautinschlager, the stage mechanic of Munich, handled the machinery. Mr. Blass took the part of Gurnemanz, and Alfred Hertz conducted. It is an open secret that the first half of the opera season had been sacrificed to the preparation of the work. As such things are done in Germany the preparations were inadequate, but the results achieved were such as to set old visitors to Bayreuth in amaze. The scenery, especially the three sets of the second act, was much more beautiful than that of Bayreuth, as were also the costumes and action of the Flower Maidens. The transformations of the first and third acts were equally well handled, and the pictures, practically copies, equally effective. Mr. Hertz's tempi showed independence of the Bayreuth model in being appreciably quicker, and this may have been a concession to the difference in surroundings. I am not prepared to say that the effect was materially injured by the acceleration in the movement of the drama, which, as we all know, has little enough of dramatic action in it. The choruses of the Knights fell short of the original standard, and the mystic effect of the instrumental music at the Festspielhaus, with its hooded orchestra and its marvellous acoustic properties, were also missed; but on the whole the performance was dignified and beautiful and, moreover, far and away the most perfect production of its kind ever seen in America.

'Parsifal,' as might have been expected, has overshadowed everything else musical in New York, and I have only time and space to add that Mr. Henry J. Wood achieved an unequivocal triumph last night and Friday afternoon, when he conducted concerts of the Philharmonic Society.

EVENTS IN PARIS.

BERLIOZ, AND TWO NEW OPERAS.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Paris, January 21, 1904.

Hans Richter, Felix Weingartner, and finally Richard Strauss gave Berlioz concerts at Queen's Hall during the months of November and December last; the attendance at the last two was exceedingly small. One naturally came to the conclusion that Berlioz was played out, that Wagner, Tchaikovsky, and Strauss had spoilt our taste for the French master's music. His services to art are recognized, but his compositions seemed no longer attractions for the public. Here in Paris, however, festival concerts given by M. Edouard Colonne and M. Chevillard in honour of Berlioz have been taking place for some time. The halls have been sold out, and great enthusiasm has prevailed. So far then as the French capital is concerned the impression created is totally different. One swallow does not make a summer, and two simultaneous and successful cycles of Berlioz concerts in commemoration of a special event would offer no positive proof that the master's music will continue to create interest. But the taste for his music is not of recent date; it has been growing here ever since the concerts given in memory of Berlioz after his death in 1869. Paris, during the thirty-four years which have elapsed since then, has been earnestly making up for her indifference to him during his lifetime. Wagner met with worse than indifference in his own country; he was openly attacked,—one may even say insulted—but opposition strengthened his resolution to work on his own lines, and before his death he had fought and conquered. Berlioz was not made of such stern stuff; one disappointment after another reduced his courage and his creative power. He was impulsive by nature, easily excited, easily depressed. Success in Germany, Russia, and to some extent in England, seemed to offer consolation, yet after all it perhaps only made him feel the more bitterly the treatment he received from his own countrymen.

Last Sunday afternoon a performance was given, at the Colonne concert, of the 'Requiem,' a work in which the genius of Berlioz is fully displayed. The Dies ire, with its tremendous brass effects and imposing array of drums, has acquired special notoriety, and the music is certainly impressive; but there are other movements in which, though the means used are comparatively simple, the effect is striking. Berlioz is said not to have been religious, yet who would deny that there is religious feeling in such numbers as the Offertoire 'Domine Jesu Christe,' or the 'Sanctus'? A fine rendering—for such it was at the Chatelet—of this characteristic 'Requiem' set one thinking of the man and his music, and wondering indeed whether prosperity would really have proved more favourable to his art-work. M. Edouard Colonne understands the music, interpreting it with French elan and with truly sympathetic feeling. The rendering was altogether admirable and most impressive. The chorus sang with fervour, and the orchestra (placed behind it) was fully equal to its difficult task. M. Emile Cazenueve sang the tenor solo in the 'Sanctus' with sympathy and becoming dignity. The enthusiasm of the audience was great; each movement was applauded. We must not however throw stones, for here in England performances of sacred music are interrupted in the same way. The Parisian public is eager to show that it resents the coldness shown towards Berlioz's music in the past, and therefore must not be judged too severely.

Two new operas are now being played at Paris. The one at the Opéra Comique is 'La Reine Fiammette,' libretto after the Conte Dramatique of Catulle Mendès, the music by M. Xavier Leroux, who won the Prix de Rome, and a few years ago produced his opera 'Astarté.' An interesting libretto is of great importance; an unsatisfactory one, as history teaches us, may spoil good music; at the present day a good 'book' may even atone to a large extent for weakness on the part of the composer. The story of 'La Reine Fiammette'—at any rate as compressed for operatic purposes—is stagey. The queen of the imaginary kingdom of Bohemia is fickle—hence her name. Her husband, Giorgio, a cold-blooded villain, and Danielo, an empty-headed creature, are both puppets in the hands of Cardinal Sforza, who himself is the instrument of the Roman pontiff. Giorgio, ambitious to reign, consents to a plot to assassinate the queen, his wife, and Danielo, selected by the cardinal to do the dire deed, at first refuses, but on being falsely told that his brother had been put to death by her order, he at once expresses his strong desire to avenge the crime. He, however, meets the queen, not knowing who she is, and falls desperately in love with her and she with him, so that when in the palace gardens he advances to stab her, the sight of her takes away all his courage; the plot fails. The cardinal however finds other means of getting rid of the queen: a charge of heresy is brought against her, and she and her lover both pay the penalty of their respective crimes. There are then scenes at court with light, delicate music; love scenes for which the composer furnishes suitable strains; while for the cardinal and those who take part in the conspiracy, the tones suit their words. As regards form, the influence of Wagner is of course felt, but the composer inclines to the school of Gounod and Massenet. There is no real depth in his music, yet it is clever, exceedingly well-scored, and for the most part attractive. In addition, the opera owes its success to the sensational character of the story, to the fine manner in which the piece is staged, and to an admirable rendering of the music, in which Mlle. Mary Garden (Queen Orlanda), M. Maréchal (Danielo), and M. A. Allard (the Cardinal) carried off chief honours.

The other opera at the Grand Opéra is M. Vincent d'Indy's 'L'Etranger,' of which he has written both the poem and the music. This 'Action musicale' is in two acts, and if both story and music show the influence of Wagner, M. d'Indy has not followed him as regards length. The story runs its course with remarkable brevity; so much so indeed that there is not sufficient development of character to create real interest and sympathy with either of the two and only two personages of importance. The mysterious stranger comes to a fishing village and so attracts a young maiden, Vita, betrothed to the custom-house officer André, that when the former is about to enter the life-boat to go to the rescue of a ship, she follows him; both, however, are swallowed up by the angry waves. In many ways the story recalls Wagner, and so also does the music. 'L'Etranger' cannot be called a work of marked originality, but there is much that is highly interesting in it, and it offers strong proof of the great skill and earnestness of M. d'Indy, who indeed is recognized as one of the most prominent of modern French composers. The influence of Wagner, let us add, is more in the story than in the music; in the latter it is rather in the form and orchestral colour than in the actual substance. The second act is finer than the first, and there are moments of real strength, beauty, and impressiveness in it. Mlle. Bréval as Vita, and M. Delmas as the Stranger, are admirable, and the piece is excellently staged.

Competitions.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS AT CARDIFF.

What was described as an 'International Male [Choir and Solo] Competition' was held at Cardiff on December 26. The promoters of the scheme deserve much credit for their boldness and enterprise in thus appealing to the world, and although in the end only Welsh and English choirs competed, the event must be described as one of the most important of its kind that has ever taken place in Wales. A choir from Brussels and another from Paris had entertained the idea of competing, but unforeseen difficulties arose. The foreign element was however represented in the person of M. Laurent de Rille, a notable French musician, who came from Paris for the purpose of adjudicating, a task in which he was assisted by Mr. George Riseley. Another foreign import was the test-pieces, which were 'Song of the Crusaders,' an effective dramatic chorus written for the occasion by M. de Rille, whose compositions for male-voice choirs are widely popular in France and Wales, and 'The King of Worlds,' by M. Dard Janin (Principal of the St. Etienne Conservatoire of Music). Again, to still further emphasise the Franco-Welsh alliance, the thrilling chorus 'The Martyrs of the Arena,' by M. de Rille, was also performed—very finely—by the massed choirs, under the baton of the composer. Apart from the foreign choirs mentioned, seventeen British choirs entered and duly appeared. Three were English, namely, Manchester (Mr. Nesbitt), North Staffordshire (Mr. J. Whewall), Middlesbrough (Mr. John Morgan). The contest lasted practically the whole day, and the result was that Mr. Nesbitt's Manchester choir indisputably won the first place and the prize of one hundred guineas, plus a cup value ten guineas. As is too usual in Welsh competitions there was no second prize for the next best, however closely they may approach the first choir. This is a custom more honoured in the breach than in the observance. It was stated that after Manchester the next best choirs (in the order named) were Cardiff, under Mr. Roderick Williams ('very, very near,' said Mr. Riseley); Mountain Ash, under Mr. T. Glyndwr Richards, Rhymney, under Mr. Dan Owen (notwithstanding a breakdown necessitating a fresh start); Cambrian (Pentre), under Mr. David Jones; and Moelwyn (Festiniog), under Mr. Cadwaladr Roberts. It was remarkable that some choirs used the pianoforte to support the pitch while others, including the prize-winners, sang unaccompanied, as undoubtedly all the choirs should have done. Surely it was a regrettable weakness that 'accompaniment,' adopted confessedly to assist the singers and not otherwise called for, was tolerated in a first-class competition?

So once again Welsh choirs have been beaten, but certainly not in any way disgraced by an English choir. It is notable that the victory was gained by the performance of a class of music not much practised by English choirs, but which is regarded as peculiarly adapted to Welsh fervour and style. The lesson received was not wholly pleasant to Welsh feeling, but it is part of the inexorable evolutionary process which we hope and believe will result in Welsh conductors and chorallists attaining the success to which their splendid natural ability entitles them to look forward.

CUMBERLAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT WORKINGTON.

The twenty-ninth annual 'Ivander' music competition and series of concerts was held at Workington on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd ult. This year's event was the most important of the whole series, not because of any increased interest in the competitive sections, but because the programmes of the concerts were of a much higher character than usual.

The concert scheme was spread over three nights, and the programmes included 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' Madame Lehmann's 'Daisy Chain,' Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, Berlioz's Hungarian March, and the 'Messiah,' besides many miscellaneous items. Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and German's 'Henry VIII.' Dances were also to have been given, but the band-parts were not forthcoming. The soloists were Miss Euneta Truscott, Madame Dewhurst, Mr. Fred Fallas, Mr. John Browning, Mr. Herbert Johnson (pianoforte) Mr. Stanton Rees (violin), and Mr. S. F. Midgley (bassoon). With commendable enterprise the committee imported orchestral performers from Leeds to co-operate with Mr. Goddard's local resources, with the result that the accompaniments and orchestral numbers were admirably performed. Mr. W. Haigh led. The choral works were given with marked success. The local choirmaster was Mr. Jos. Scott, to whom a presentation was made in recognition of his services. Dr. McNaught conducted the concerts and adjudicated. In the competitions there were numerous classes—instrumental and vocal. The standard of the singing was highly satisfactory. The Workington Orpheus Choir, under Mr. T. Morgan, gained the first prize for Male-Voice Choirs. In another choral section the Workington Presbyterians, under Mr. J. C. Harkness, were first, and the Seaton Wesleyans, under Mr. T. Dixon, second. The 'Messiah' was performed on Sunday evening after service hours.

Mr. Ivander Griffiths and those who work with him have earned the gratitude of the large circle to which the Festival appeals. It is to be feared that, owing to the closing of a large local manufactory, and the consequent 'tightness' of money, the undertaking will have to face a loss. But it may be hoped that the well-to-do residents in the district will not permit a far-reaching and beneficent social influence, such as this Festival has undoubtedly become, to be discouraged on this ground.

The Chester Eisteddfod on Boxing Day was well attended. The Goosens Choir, from Liverpool, won the first prize in the Male-Voice Choir section. Mr. D. Emlyn Evans adjudicated.

An Eisteddfod was held at Liverpool also on Boxing Day. The Southport Vocal Union, under Mr. J. C. Clarke, added another laurel to its numerous collection. They gained the Male-Voice Choir prize, Wigan coming second.

The Middlesbrough Eisteddfod was held on New Year's Day. The Harrogate Vocal Union, under Mr. Ball, won honours. Mr. Harry Evans adjudicated.

Preston is to have a competition for mixed-voice choirs, male quartets and soprano and bass soloists on March 26. The secretary is Mr. John Toulmin, Junr., 35, West Cliff.

The Yorkshire Choral Challenge Shields Competition—the fifth of its kind—will take place at The Kursaal, Harrogate, on March 26. Mr. C. L. Naylor will adjudicate, and the Hon. Secretary is Mr. John Rinder, Farnley, Leeds.

A musical competition is announced to be held at Bristol on May 2, 3, and 4. There are thirty-two classes for vocal and instrumental music. The judges are to be Dr. McNaught, Mr. and Mrs. Matthay, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Mr. H. W. Hunt, and Mr. E. Cuthbert Nunn. Mr. W. E. Fowler, of Elmdale Road, Tyndall's Park, Bristol, is the secretary.

THE BLACKPOOL CHOIR AT MANCHESTER.

THE SCHILLER-ANSTALT-CONCERT.

The appearance of an English choir, the famous Blackpool Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. Herbert Whittaker, for a second time within twelve months at such an essentially German institution as the Schiller-Anstalt-Concerts is an event calling for at least a brief record. These concerts are managed by Mr. Carl Fuchs of the Hallé Orchestra and the Brodsky Quartet, and are attended by cultured and critical audiences. But the Blackpool Choir can face any audience with equanimity, a reputation borne out by their marked success on the present occasion. At the first concert unaccompanied music by Brahms was the speciality of their selection. At the second, given on December 19, the English and Italian schools were drawn upon, but Brahms was again well in evidence. The following is the choral programme:—

Cynthia, thy Song	...	...	...	...	Croce.
Lady, see on every side	...	...	...	...	Luca Mazzenzi.
When flow'ry Meadows	...	...	...	...	Palestrina.
Lay a Garland	...	...	...	...	R. L. de Pearsall.
But Thou, O Hope (Ode to the Passions)	...	...	...	...	Cowen.
A March night, from Op. 44	...	...	...	...	Brahms.
A Love Song (Minnelied), from Op. 44	...	...	...	...
Vineta, Op. 42, No. 2	...	...	...	...
Dirge of Dardhula, Op. 42, No. 3	...	...	...	...
O lovely May, Op. 93, No. 2	...	...	...	...
Dim-lit Woods, Op. 62	...	...	...	...	Percy Pitt.
A Love Symphony, Op. 30, No. 3	...	...	...	...
My Love dwelt in a Northern Land	...	...	...	...	Elgar.
Phœbe (Elizabethan Pastoral, from Op. 49, No. 6)	...	...	...	...	Stanford.
Sweet Love for me (from Op. 49, No. 4)	...	...	...	...	Stanford.
Weary Wind of the West	...	...	...	...	Elgar.
Farewell, Op. 93, No. 4	...	...	...	...	Brahms.

Of the performance it is impossible to speak too highly. The well-known and not very easily satisfied critic of the Manchester Guardian says: 'We have held a careful examination of conscience with a view to finding fault with something in the singing of the choir or the selection of the pieces, but without success. The marvellous intonation was demonstrated by the keeping of the pitch, which was tested at the end of the more difficult pieces. "Vineta" was a very striking case. Here we have a piece of 124 bars, counting the repeat of the opening section. In the fourth verse modulations to the remotest keys occur (e.g., from B major to C and F). These and the return to the tonic were so managed that the ending was absolutely in the right key. There are not many choirs in the world that can perform such feats of unaccompanied singing, and the Blackpool singers are as strong in blend, balance, enunciation, phrasing, and style as they are in intonation.' The correspondent of the important German musical review Die Musik, in the course of some comments, writes: 'The very numerous and, for the most part German-speaking audience, were delighted at hearing the music of their native land interpreted in such a faultless manner by English singers.'

It is interesting to note that the Blackpool Choir has attained its exceptionally high standard of performance under the educative stimulus of competitions held in the course of the last few years. The fact that a choir educated in this rigorous school is thus enabled to hold aloft the banner of the highest art in other than competitive arenas, is one of the ample justifications for the existence of competitive musical festivals—institutions which are sometimes adversely criticised, mainly by writers who have only partly inquired into their influence or whose experiences may have been unfortunate.

BRITISH MUSIC AT BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

British music was strongly represented at the first of this year's concerts at St. James's Hall on the 7th ult. by a string Quartet in A minor, from the pen of Mr. John B. McEwen, and a set of six 'Pastorals' for four voices, pianoforte, and string quartet, by Dr. H. Walford Davies. Both works proved masterly efforts as regards workmanship, and of more than common interest on the score of invention and effectiveness. Mr. McEwen, a native of Glasgow and a Professor at the Royal Academy of Music, is but little known as a composer. Those acquainted with his music, however, think highly of his gifts, an opinion which the Quartet under notice is calculated to strengthen. The work is of generous dimensions, especially as regards the first and last movements, and the idiom throughout is unmistakably Scottish. The themes are fresh, strong of mien and bold of outline; they all have a sound backbone of rhythm. Their treatment, at once elaborate and interesting, is full of healthy, vigorous life, and at times even of a ruggedness which suggests 'Caledonia stern and wild' as the 'meet nurse' of the composer's inspiration. Effective contrast to the composer's strenuous mood is presented by the beautiful, romantic, slow movement (an uninterrupted stream of spontaneous melody), by the Trio (a capital tune assigned to the viola) of the bustling Scherzo, and by the long-drawn sentiment of the second subject in the Finale. The Quartet is a serious and valuable contribution to modern chamber music, and as such deserves a warm welcome. We believe this is Mr. McEwen's twenty-fourth String quartet, and though doubtless he would desire the publication of the preceding twenty-three no more than Mendelssohn thought of publishing his eleven juvenile String symphonies, yet the work recently performed shows unmistakably how greatly the composer has benefited by such earnest and thorough preliminary studies. Having heard various performances of the Quartet, we can bear testimony to the fact that not only does it well bear repetition, but in quite a remarkable degree 'grows upon' the listener. The interpreters were the Cathie Quartet—Messrs. Philip Cathie, Tom Morrison, George Cathie and A. Trew.

Dr. Walford Davies has selected the texts of his 'Pastorals' from some beautiful poems by Fletcher; Greene, Dekker and Andrew Marvell. He is frankly modern in his setting of these old-world lyrics, and the poetic refinement and deep thought there is in him he has poured into his music with the happiest result. If Dr. Davies's themes lack the robust strength of Mr. McEwen's, there is about them a quiet beauty and appropriateness; and throughout the cycle his music shows many masterly touches with results that are delightful. Four of the poems are set for four voices, and these are likely to prove the favourites, for they are charming in the best sense of the word. Two Dialogues, one for contralto and baritone, the other for soprano and tenor, show greater originality and strike a deeper note than the Quartets, but a first hearing left us in some doubt as to their spontaneity. Dr. Davies obtained some beautiful effects from his novel combination of voices and instruments, and the performance, with himself at the pianoforte and Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Dr. Aikin as the vocalists, was fairly good.

Mr. Elwes sang some charming old French Bergerettes with great refinement, and the Cathie Quartet opened an exceptionally interesting concert with a commendable performance of a Haydn Quartet.

THE ÆOLIAN HALL.

Many are the vicissitudes of large buildings in London. The Grosvenor Gallery, built in 1876 by Sir Coutts Lindsay at a cost of upwards of £100,000 for a home of the fine arts, in less than ten years became a fashionable club-house and circulating library, and as such was immortalized by W. S. Gilbert in 'Patience' in the lines:—

A greeny gallery
Grosvenor Gallery,
Foot-in-the-grave young man.

Last year the property was bought by the American Orchestrelle Company, and after being remodelled by Mr. Walter Cave was re-opened on the 19th ult. as a concert-hall and show-rooms for the instruments of the Æolian Company. The concert hall is the old large West picture gallery, but it presents a very different appearance from that in which was first exhibited Professor Herkomer's now famous portrait in profile of Wagner in 1878. The walls are panelled to the height of eight feet six inches in fumed mahogany. Seats, upholstered in soft green, provide accommodation for an audience of four hundred persons, and from the back of the stage rises a large organ, whose gilded pipes run up to the arched roof.

The artists engaged at the inaugural concert were Miss E. Parkina, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and M. Johannes Wolff, whose singing and playing satisfactorily established the good acoustical qualities of the Hall. The first movement of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in D (Op. 28), and several pieces by Chopin, were cleverly rendered through the medium of the 'Pianola' by Mr. Max Schulz, who also played all the accompaniments.

London Concerts and Recitals.

POPULAR CONCERTS.

Professor Johann Kruse resumed his series of Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall on Saturday the 9th ult., and on the following Monday the first performance was given of a Quintet in F minor (Op. 85) for strings, composed in the spring of last year by Sir Charles Villiers Stanford. If the work is not of an ambitious character, it is an engaging and genial composition. It consists of three scholarly-written movements, of which the second, an Andante, after the style of an Irish 'Lament,' is very expressive. Irish idiom is also prominent in the Finale, which terminates in a vigorous and breezy manner with what practically is a 'reel.' An excellent interpretation was secured by the Kruse Quartet, assisted by Mr. E. Tomlinson, second viola. The first performance in England at this concert of three Romandes folk-songs, charmingly arranged as vocal duets by Jaques Dalcroze, also merit record. They were beautifully sung by Herr and Frau von Dulong.

Two novelties were introduced on the 18th ult.—a Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violoncello, by M. Rachmaninoff, and a Theme and Variations in F sharp minor (Op. 72) by M. Glazounow, the pianist in both compositions being Mlle. Sandra Drucker, and the violoncellist in the former work being Mr. Percy Such. The Sonata possesses four movements, of which the best are the second and third, respectively a light and graceful Allegro Scherzando possessing at times a certain grim humour, and a pretty and graceful Andante of tender character. Refinement and restrained expression is the chief feature of the opening movement, but the Finale is not satisfactory, the themes being poor and developed at too great length. M. Glazounow's production is decidedly clever, modern in feeling and polished. The theme is subjected to fifteen variations, which may be described as expressively presenting the theme from different points of view.

MISS MARIE HALL AND CONCERTOS THREE.

Miss Marie Hall gave an orchestral concert at St. James's Hall on the 22nd ult., before a crowded and appreciative audience. The fair young violinist essayed and achieved the herculean task of playing in succession the violin concertos of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Tchaikovsky. In so doing she triumphed all along the line—or may we not say all along the lines and spaces?—with faultless technique and artistic insight of a very high order. We would, however, strongly urge the gifted young artist not to run the mental and physical risk which such a tour de force involves. The strain on the mind and body is too great and the consequences too risky for her not to heed a warning that is tendered in all friendliness and with a keen interest in her welfare. Miss Hall was splendidly accompanied by the Queen's Hall Orchestra—a brilliant gem of a player in a perfect setting—under the sympathetic and alert direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, who was very cordially received upon his first public appearance since his successful engagement in New York. The concert opened with a good performance of Mozart's 'Figaro' Overture.

A WESTMINSTER MUSIC-MAKING.

St. Margaret's Musical Society is a Westminster institution that deserves every encouragement. Its objects are identical with the musical work of Oxford House in the East End—the brightening of lives and to provide enjoyment by means of the divine art. Up to the present only choral work has been attempted, but an orchestra has recently been formed. We are glad to learn that 'great developments are therefore in store during the next year or two, they [the Committee] confidently hope for St. Margaret's Musical Society.' The prospectus states that 'additional members, no matter what instrument they play, will be most warmly welcomed.' Miss E. C. Nichol, 144, Ashley Gardens, Westminster, is the Secretary. The Society gave a Mendelssohn concert at Caxton Hall on the 19th ult., before a crowded and enthusiastic audience, at prices ranging from 3d. to 1s. The programme included 'Athalia'—with the Rev. H. G. Daniell-Bainbridge, Precentor of Westminster Abbey, as reader—'Hear my prayer,' 'Festgesang,' &c., in which the chorus (about 120 voices) sang with verve and evident enjoyment of the music. The soloists were Miss Viola Salvin, Madame Werner Laurie, Miss Lucie Johnstone, and Mr. Alfred Pinnington. Miss Mabel Standfast and Mr. Gerald Bullivant were at the harmonium and pianoforte respectively, while the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins, a minor canon of Westminster Abbey, conducted with vigour and alertness. A commendable feature of the concert was the brightly written biographical and historical notes in the programme book, a series of chit-chats that just hit the mark, and were, moreover, valuable from an educational point of view. We wish all success to the St. Margaret's Musical Society.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Pianists are ever with us, and they promise to increase in numbers during the coming season. Mr. William A. Becker, who made his debut at Bechstein Hall on the 19th ult., comes from America, and may be described as a dexterous player who has views of his own which possess the merits of refinement and engaging expression. He is not a great interpreter, but his interpretations are decidedly pleasing.

Miss Paula Szalit, who challenged criticism the following afternoon in the same hall, although a young lady of only nineteen summers, has gained considerable favour on the Continent. Her readings of works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Chopin were lacking in depth of sentiment, but they displayed an intelligence and musical feeling which, combined with a sympathetic touch and great executive facility, testify to exceptional ability.

Miss Katharine Goodson, at her recital on the 21st ult., at St. James's Hall, was particularly successful in her rendering of Grieg's 'Ballade' (Op. 24). The romantic spirit of the piece was charmingly expressed, and the performance most engaging. There should be a bright artistic future for this gifted young musician.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

January 15, 1904.

Two celebrated German conductors have appeared at the Philharmonic Society, and with marked success. Already their names gave to the concerts a certain éclat, and if they did not quite satisfy the highest expectations raised, they attracted interest, and were cordially received. Under Nikisch were performed Brahms's Third Symphony, Wagner's 'Faust' Overture, and Beethoven's Eighth Symphony; under Muck, of Berlin, Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, Brahms's 'Variations on a Haydn Theme,' and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; the former was best in Wagner, the latter in Beethoven.

At the Concertverein Löwe distinguished himself by his rendering of Bach's fourth 'Brandenburg' Concerto, and this was all the more satisfactory seeing that the structure of the music is not to the taste of our modern public. He was less convincing in the seldom-heard B flat Symphony of Volkmann's, but produced striking effect with Schubert's 'Tragic' Symphony, the best indeed of all his earlier compositions of the kind. Löwe also conducted Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony, which, indeed, in spite of many interesting details, falls somewhat flat; the poetical close for male chorus atones however for the immoderate spinning-out of the work. Eugen d'Albert played Liszt's E flat Pianoforte Concerto, and conducted the fresh, pleasing Overture to his opera 'Der Improvisor.' Henri Martucci performed the new Violin Concerto of Jacques Dalcroze, an interesting work, in which the same themes are introduced and developed in all the movements, both in the solo part and in the brilliantly-scored accompaniments. Almost at the same time as d'Albert's visit, Dohnányi appeared at Fitzer's, and by his youthful freshness carried away his audience. He gave a wonderful performance of the pianoforte part of Brahms's Quartet in A. Fitzer and his associates Czerny and Walther performed a new Serenade for violin, viola, and violoncello, by Dohnányi, the music of which is romantic, original, and effective; the audience would willingly have heard it a second time.

We have here three prodigy boys: Ernst von Vecsey and Florizel von Reuter, two small and gifted violinists, and the little pianist, Miccio Horzowski. These wonderful children, owing to their age, attract the public, and it is sincerely to be hoped that when they grow up, the latter will still remain faithful to them.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concert season reopened on the 18th ult., when Mr. and Mrs. Kennerley Rumford, with their party, entertained a large audience in the Town Hall. The début of Madame Butt's sisters, the Misses Pauline and Ethel Hook, was a marked success. The young pianist, Mr. Frank Merrick, also made a successful first appearance here. — At the fifth Halford Concert, on the 19th ult., the band gave excellent renderings of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony and Wagner's 'Meistersinger' Overture. Sir Charles V. Stanford conducted an admirable performance of his 'Variations on an English theme,' with Mr. G. H. Manton as pianist; and Mr. Max Mossel was first-rate in the solo part of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. The vocalist, Miss Meta Biring, revived the air 'Ah! rendimi quel core,' from the old opera 'Mitrane,' by the Padre Rossi; she also gave songs by Franz, Grieg, and Brahms, and made a very favourable impression. Mr. Halford was the recipient of an enthusiastic ovation.

The same evening Mr. William Ludwig held a 'Feis Ceoil' of minstrelsy, song, and story in the Temperance Hall. He was assisted by his daughters, the Misses Florence and Gertrude Ludwig, Miss Mary Foley, Mr. Tom Philbin, and Miss Kehily. The Irish pipes and dances created great enthusiasm.

The Amateur Opera Society gave five performances of 'Princess Ida' during the week of the Midland Institute annual conversazione, held from the 11th ult. The Saturday evening concerts commenced on the 2nd ult., when Mr. G. W. Halliday gave a popular entertainment.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society, on the 14th ult., at the Victoria Rooms, attracted a large audience. A varied programme was presented under the direction of Mr. D. W. Rootham, this being his thirty-ninth season as conductor. A novelty consisted of 'There is a jewel,' by the Rev. C. R. Ward, a member of the Society, who received his early musical tuition under the late Sir F. Gore Ouseley, at Tenbury. Clever and scholarly, and being excellently interpreted, the piece produced a favourable impression. This is the first composition presented by a member of the Society since the death of Mr. Pearsall. Another novelty was 'Happy streams,' by Mr. C. B. Rootham (son of the conductor), of Cambridge. It is in five parts, occasionally broadening to seven parts, and was received with favour, the choir evidently doing its utmost to present the production effectively. Pilkington's 'Lady fair! when golden sleep' has been in the books of the Society for many years, but never until now had it been given by the members in public. The charming lullaby was delicately rendered. As usual, Pearsall, who was one of the early members, had his works drawn upon, the pieces now chosen being 'Who shall win my lady fair,' and 'Sir Patrick Spens,' both of which were re-demanded.

Mr. C. W. Stear, organist of the Church of the Holy Nativity, has resumed his popular Saturday night concerts at the Victoria Rooms, and they are well attended. There is an orchestra, of which Mr. F. S. Gardner is leader, and different organists of the city give performances upon the electric organ.

In the notice which appeared in our last issue (p. 45) of the orchestral concert given in the Colston Hall, the name of Madame Albani as the chief vocalist thereat was inadvertently omitted, which we regret. As a matter of fact the concert was given by Madame Albani.

MUSIC IN CUMBERLAND.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The cause of music throughout Cumberland, and in Carlisle, has received an impetus by the appointment of Mr. Edward G. Mercer to the post of acting Cathedral organist, vice Dr. H. E. Ford, who retains the titular dignity of the office after actively fulfilling its duties for sixty-one years. On the conductorship of the Carlisle Choral Society falling vacant last autumn, it was entrusted to Mr. Mercer. This organization, founded in 1854, and with a short break at the end of the sixties, has continued in existence ever since. It was the pioneer of music in the county, and has had a most praiseworthy career, during which it has produced the principal works of the great masters, besides giving occasional performances of more modern music, including Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' Gade's 'Erl King's Daughter,' and 'The Crusaders,' and kindred works. To accomplish this the local orchestra has had to be strengthened in all divisions by professional help from Manchester, and it is this necessity which has been the main obstacle to more frequent performances of new works.

Soon after Mr. Mercer's arrival in Carlisle, he saw the possibility of founding a County Orchestra, and the potentialities of such an organization in advancing music throughout the county. The Cumberland Orchestral Society was accordingly formed in May last, and already embraces about fifty performing members, chiefly string players, but comprising also a little wood-wind. This Society has its centre in Carlisle, with sub-centres throughout the county, the complete body being under the conductorship of Mr. Mercer. It is intended to engage the services of a violin teacher, who shall visit the various sub-centres and give instruction to the players.

The Carlisle Choral Society gave its usual Christmas concert on Boxing-night, the first part of the programme consisting of Sir Hubert Parry's Symphonic Ode, 'War and Peace.' On that occasion the Society's orchestra was strengthened by fourteen strings from the local branch of the Cumberland Orchestra, and help from Manchester, while the chorus numbered 170 voices, with the result that a very fine performance of Sir Hubert Parry's work was given. The principal vocalists were Miss Millicent Holbrook, Miss Carrie James, Mr. Isidore Warren, and Mr. F. Aubrey Millward, all students of the Royal College of Music, and as they had studied the concerted music together there under the composer's supervision a perfect ensemble was obtained. The second part of the programme included Wagner's 'Meistersinger' Overture, Elgar's 'Imperial' March, and part-songs by the chorus, &c. It is felt that the co-operation of the two Societies named opens a new era in the study of music throughout Cumberland, as it is hoped that similar co-operation may take place in other parts of the county.

Mr. Mercer is to be congratulated on the success of his efforts so far, which augur even better results in the near future.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Royal Dublin Society's recitals were resumed after the Christmas vacation on the 11th ult. The programme consisted of Dvorák's String Quartet in F, Bach's 'Chaconne' for violin alone, beautifully played by Mr. Sigmund Beel, and Beethoven's great B flat Pianoforte Trio. Mr. Sigmund Beel (first violin), Mr. P. Delany (second violin), M. Grisard (viola), Herr Bast (violoncello), and Signor Eposito (pianoforte) were the executants.

At Madame Florac's concert on the 14th ult., the Glee and Madrigal Union (Messrs. J. R. Morgan, Melfort D'Alton, T. Marchant, and T. Harris-Watson) made its first public appearance this season. Mr. Arthur Darley was the solo violinist, and songs were sung by Miss José Florac and Mr. J. C. Doyle.

On Tuesday, the 12th ult., a short song recital was given in the rooms of the Royal Hibernian Academy by Miss Katharine Malone, who gave songs by Haydn, Mozart, Bemberg and Randegger. The possessor of a fine soprano voice, Miss Malone won a prize at the Feis Ceoil two years ago, and is at present studying under Mr. Randegger at the Royal Academy of Music in London.

The Committee of the Feis Ceoil has appointed Mr. Robert O'Dwyer conductor of this year's Festival, to be held in May next. Signor Benedetto Palmieri has been awarded the Composition Prize for his Cantata 'The Exodus,' and Mr. Hamilton Harty has gained the prize for a Symphony. Mr. Randegger adjudicated upon the compositions.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Choral Union performed, on December 21, for the first time in Edinburgh, Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah.' On this important occasion the Choral Union was at its best, rendering the choruses with fire, dramatic force, and wealth of tone, while the Scottish Orchestra gave an excellent reading of the picturesque instrumentation. Mr. Collinson conducted with his usual tact and artistic insight, and the soloists—Miss Muriel Foster, Messrs. Ben Davies, Robert Burnett, and Robert Radford—sang with distinction.

A feature of the orchestral concert on December 28 was the first performance here of the Overture 'Hérondean,' by Mr. Learmont Drysdale, a native of Edinburgh. It received an admirable interpretation at Dr. Cowen's hands, and was very enthusiastically applauded. At the sixth concert the novelty was Dr. Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody,' most cordially received, as it well deserved to be. Mr. Paul Della Torre, one of our local pianists, gave an artistic performance of Grieg's A minor Pianoforte Concerto.

The first visit of M. Edouard Colonne aroused considerable enthusiasm, and his reception by an Edinburgh audience must have been very gratifying to him. The chief item in his programme was Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, of which he obtained a wonderfully fine and lucid interpretation. In the March from Berlioz's 'Faust' the band created quite a sensation by the fire of their performance.

A very enjoyable chamber concert was given on the 14th ult. by Mr. Felix Gade, violinist, a recent addition to the ranks of the local profession. He was admirably assisted by Mr. O. Fohström, a violoncellist of the first force, and by Mr. A. W. Dace, one of our best teachers of the pianoforte, who appears far too seldom on the concert platform. Their readings of Trios by Arensky and Raff were excellent. A professional orchestra recently formed by Mr. Gerald Crawford made its first public appearance on the 10th ult., when the programme included the 'Fidelio' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures. The concert was creditable to all concerned.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The ninth classical concert on the 5th ult. was notable by reason of the appearance of Mr. F. Lamond as solo pianist, and the first performance here of Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody' and Glazounow's Symphony No. 6 in C minor. In Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto No. 1, Mr. Lamond had music peculiarly suited to his style and a brilliant performance was the result. Dr. Cowen's latest orchestral work (dedicated to the Scottish Orchestra), with its quaint themes and dainty scoring, was beautifully played by the band and was most cordially received by the audience. Of the four movements in Glazounow's Symphony, the second, an air with clever variations, was perhaps best played. At the tenth concert on the 12th ult., M. Edouard Colonne occupied the conductor's desk and secured one of the finest orchestral performances ever given here. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony was the chief item on the programme, but most interest centred in some French pieces, which included the introduction to Saint-Saëns's 'The Deluge,' the symphonic interlude from César Franck's 'Redemption,' and a selection from Berlioz's 'Faust,' in the music of the last-named composer M. Colonne being an acknowledged specialist. At the close of the performance the distinguished conductor received a great ovation.

The organ in the City Hall, built in 1853 by Messrs. Gray and Davison, is about to be replaced by a more modern instrument from the factory of Messrs. Lewis and Co. at an estimated cost of £3,500.

The annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians is noticed on page 115.

M. Zacharewitsch, a young Russian violinist, made a highly successful first appearance here at the eleventh classical concert on the 19th ult. In Wieniawski's Violin Concerto in F minor (a work new to Glasgow) he displayed not only technique of the highest order, but musicianly qualities which will place him in the front rank of living violinists. The programme also included a novelty in the shape of Dvorák's Overture 'Otello,' the Entr'acte in B minor from Schubert's 'Rosamunde,' and Brahms's Symphony No. 1 in C minor. With the music of Brahms Dr. Coward is in perfect sympathy, and a splendid performance of the work was secured.

Associated for the first time with the Scottish Orchestra, the Pollokshield's Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. John Cullen, performed Gluck's 'Orpheus' and Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' on the 22nd ult. As this is possibly the first time Gluck's work has been given on the concert platform here, the performance excited much interest, and the praiseworthy enterprise of the Society in bringing the opera before concert-goers was rewarded by the attendance of a very large audience. Withdrawn from its stage setting, the work loses considerably, but apart from that a capital performance was given. The choruses, which are very simple and tuneful, were sung with excellent effect, and the solo music was entrusted to such experienced artists as Signorina Ravogli and Misses Lydia Nevil and Ethel Wood. 'The Banner of St. George' made greater demands on the chorists, but their singing was marked by great intelligence and refinement, and by commendable attention to detail. The orchestral accompaniments were generally quite satisfactory.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 6th ult. Dr. Richter directed the first of three of his concerts, when the programme included 'The Flying Dutchman,' Overture, Strauss's symphonic-poem 'Don Juan,' a suite for strings by Tchaikovsky, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony.

The seventh concert of the Philharmonic Society drew one of the largest audiences of recent years. Dr. Cowen obtained fine performances of Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and Beethoven's 'Leonora No. 3' Overtures, Wagner's Funeral March from 'Der Götterdämmerung,' Tchaikovsky's Suite for Orchestra No. 3 in G (Op. 55), Weingartner's arrangement of Weber's 'Invitation to the Waltz,' and 'The Ride of the Valkyries.' Madame Clara Butt was the vocalist.

At Mr. Schiever's classical chamber concert on the 23rd ult. the programme included two string quartets, Mozart's in E flat and Dvorák's in E major, in addition to the Pianoforte Quartet in G minor of Brahms, with Mr. J. Osborne Edmundson as solo pianist.

The one hundred and thirty-first concert of the Societa Armonica took place on the 16th ult. in the Small Concert Room, St. George's Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. Vasco V. Akeroyd. Schubert's Overture to 'Rosamunde' was gracefully played, and Brahms's Variations on Haydn's 'Chorale St. Antoni' were delicately rendered. Mr. Webster Millar was the vocalist, and Mr. Walter Hatton the violoncellist.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The first concert of the New Year was one of the Municipal Orchestra's series, to which I have already had occasion to refer as an interesting experiment, made under the aegis of the Corporation, and by their official musician, Mr. Fricker. This concert was signalized by the inclusion in a generally interesting programme of an entire symphony—Beethoven's C minor, undoubtedly the wisest choice that could be made for the purpose. It was well played, the strings being especially good, and Mr. Fricker's reading only wanted more deliberation to be satisfying. There was a novelty in the shape of a pleasing, well-scored Concert-Overture in F by Cecil M. Gann, and a special feature of the concert was Bach's Concerto in C for two pianofortes, most sympathetically played by Messrs. Noel Bell and Percy Richardson, two young and able Leeds organists, who also displayed their executive powers in the very effective Variations on an air of Beethoven's by Saint-Saëns. Mr. John Browning was the vocalist. On the 12th ult. a recently-formed Society—the New Leeds Choral Society—gave its second concert. At present it is content to go cautiously, but the performance of Gade's 'Crusaders' indicated that Mr. H. M. Turton, the conductor, is getting into good form the material at his hand.

On the 13th ult. the Leeds Choral Union, under Mr. Alfred Benton, gave a stirring reading of 'Judas Maccabæus,' the powerful chorus doing ample justice to its martial episodes. Madame Sobrino, Miss M. L. Dews, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Watkin Mills formed a highly satisfactory quartet of principals. On the following evening Mr. Benton directed a concert of a more domestic and intimate nature, by the choir of the Leeds Parish Church, to which especial interest was given by devoting the whole of the first part to antique music. Palestrina, Orlando di Lasso, Eccard, Lully, Bach, and Handel were represented, and their music was, on the whole, most ably sung. One of the very enjoyable 'Bohemian' Chamber Concerts took place on the 20th ult., string quartets by Beethoven, Raff, and César Franck giving the event an exceptional interest.

OTHER TOWNS.

A fine programme of orchestral music was afforded at the Bradford subscription concert on the 15th ult., when Dr. Richter and the Manchester Orchestra played the 'Pastoral' Symphony and several modern compositions which, as examples of 'programme music,' may be regarded as the descendants of that famous work. These were the 'Mazeppa' of Liszt, the 'Sarka' of Smetana, and the 'Hamlet' fantasia-overture of Tchaïkovsky, all of which were played with superb verve and power. Madame Sobrino was the vocalist.

Miscellaneous.

'OVER-THE-WATER' MUSIC.

Mr. Algernon Rose writes:—

'In L. A. Smith's interesting book "Music of the Waters," published by Messrs. Kegan Paul some years ago, many canties connected with the sea are given; but there is what one might call "amphibious," or mixed land-and-water music, which is referred to neither in that book nor in any other so far as I am able to find. Surely the melody of the quaint song to be heard to-day in Venice during the driving of the piles to form the foundation of the new Campanile is worthy of record.

'This ancient chantie consists of some 250 lines. Its references to the old Venetian wars and hatred of the Turk have been cited in the newspapers. But the song is now rare, and when the master-workman who leads it has finished his present job, there may not be another opportunity of hearing that precious refrain. If one of your many musical readers in Italy would take the trouble to record in your columns the notation, he or she would be contributing information of interest to many musicians outside of Italy.

'In Amsterdam, Stockholm, Geneva, and other cities built wholly or partly on piles, the steam-monkey has replaced the old method, so that it is probably too late to record the pile-driving songs formerly heard in those places. All the more reason then that the Venetian chantie should be noted down while there is yet time. Musical travellers might supplement it by the songs indulged in when buildings are constructed over the water in villages such as those on the shores of the Bosphorus, on parts of the Amazon, at Borneo, the Gold Coast of Africa and elsewhere.'

The 'Souvenir of the 500th Symphony Concert given at the Winter Gardens, Bournemouth,' is a very interesting and satisfactory booklet of some fifty pages. It includes a list of works performed at the 500 concerts—Municipally financed, be it noted—under the direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, who, by way of preface, contributes some interesting historical notes on the origin and remarkable progress of these excellent concerts. The Mayor and Corporation of Bournemouth and their Musical Director are again to be heartily congratulated on the success of their well-directed efforts in the cause of music. We may add that the booklet, which is illustrated, will be valuable for reference.

The Right-Hon. Herbert J. Gladstone, M.P., has been elected President of the Western Madrigal Society, in succession to Mr. Andrew K. Hichens.

The first two are restricted to male candidates, but the third on the list is open to composers of either sex. Full particulars relating thereto may be obtained from the Secretary, Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden Street, W.

Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies has been appointed a Professor of Singing.

Two hardy annuals have again made their welcome appearance—(1) 'The Musical Directory for 1904' (the fifty-second annual issue), which Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co. have sent us, and (2) 'The Roll of the Union of Graduates in Music (Incorporated) and Kalendar, 1904,' edited, as heretofore, by the Honorary Secretary of the Union, Mr. T. L. Southgate. Both these useful books of reference are indispensable; and who can estimate the value of the information contained therein?

Sir Frederick Bridge, in his adjudication upon the Dover Musical Festival Competitions, has awarded the prizes as follows:—For a choral ballad (prize £10, presented by the Right Hon. George Wyndham, M.P.) to Mr. Percy Godfrey, of Canterbury; an overture for organ with orchestral accompaniment (prize £10, presented by Dr. Astley) to Mr. J. Weston Nicholl, of Halifax; and a part-song (prize £5, presented by Sir William Crundell) to Mr. Mansell Ramsey, of Folkestone.

At the annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, held at Aldersgate Street on the 16th ult., a satisfactory financial condition was disclosed, and the work generally was declared to be prospering. Mr. B. M. Ramsey read a paper on 'Points in Teaching,' and Mr. Rootham (of Bristol) gave an address on 'The voice, and its use in solo and concerted performances.' Mr. J. S. Curwen was re-elected President.

Mr. Coleridge-Taylor has inaugurated a series of orchestral concerts at Croydon (in place of the Croydon Orchestral Society). The orchestra consists of amateur strings and professional wind, numbering in all about 60 performers. The initial concert which took place in December was most successful, and the second concert of the series is announced to take place in the Public Hall on the 27th inst.

Mr. Charles A. Lucas has, we are glad to learn, been appointed Secretary of the Royal Society of Musicians in succession to his father, Mr. Stanley Lucas, who held the post for forty-two years. Mr. Walter Morrow succeeds the late Mr. J. W. Standen in the office of collector to the Society.

At Trinity College, London, the Maybrick Prize for Ballad Singing, annually given by Mr. Michael Maybrick, has been awarded to Miss Edith Withecombe; and the Pianoforte Accompaniment Prize, given by Mr. Henry R. Bird, to Edgar Beck Slinn.

Mr. J. W. Warman read a paper before the Musical Association on the 19th ult., his subject being 'The Hydraulicon of the Ancients,' on which occasion he exhibited his own reproduction of the said Hydraulicon.

The personnel of the Wessely Quartet will in future consist of Messrs. Hans Wessely, Spencer Dyke, E. Tomlinson and B. Patterson Parker.

Foreign Notes.

BRUSSELS.

The first conservatoire concert of the season, under the direction of M. Gevaert, was one of considerable interest. The programme included excerpts from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio,' some symphonic movements by old masters, and finally Marcello's 15th Psalm, the contralto solo of which was sung by Mlle. Flament, to the accompaniment of viola da gamba, organ, harpsichord, and basses. M. Gevaert, the maestro al cembalo, played on a fine instrument of the Hass of Hamburg.

CARLSRUHE.

Of the twenty-seven candidates for the post of capellmeister vacant through the appointment of Felix Mottl to Munich, the successful one is Balling, capellmeister at Breslau.

FRANKFORT.

Carl Goldmark has revised his three-act Opera 'Merlin,' which in its new form will be performed at the opera house here during this month.

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN.

The Allgemeiner Deutsche Verein will hold its fortieth yearly gathering here June 5-9 next, at which a new symphony by Richard Strauss will be produced. There are to be two performances at the opera house, for which the following works have been selected: 'Bunteschuh' by W. von Baussem, and 'Die Rose vom Liebesgarten' by H. Pfizner.

GENEVA.

Reference was recently made to a concert programme devoted to Haydn. Since then similar honour has been paid to Mozart. The programme of the third subscription orchestral concert included the G minor Symphony, two Pianoforte Concertos in C minor and E flat, with M. De Greef at the pianoforte, the magnificent Maurerische Trauermusik, various songs with pianoforte accompaniment, sung by Mlle. Bachofen, and by way of conclusion, the Overture to 'Don Juan.'

THE HAGUE.

Wagner's 'The Last Supper of the Apostles' was given here in December, under the direction of Herr Mengelberg, who is said to have touched-up the orchestration and thereby to have incurred the wrath of the Wagnerian party. As was the case when Wagner suggested an improvement in Beethoven's Choral Symphony, so now: the aim and effect of the alterations are not discussed; the sin is in venturing to touch a single note by an honoured master. After all, this conservative tendency, though it show more of letter than of spirit, has its good side: the touchers-up of old masters if granted an inch would probably speedily take an ell.

MUNICH.

Court capellmeister Erdmannsdörfer and his wife Pauline have offered to the Bavarian Government 130,000 marks as a capital sum the interest of which will be divided among the members of the Court orchestra, or, according to another account, among those who have retired with a pension.

PARIS.

De Lara's 'Messaline' was performed for the first time in this city at the Gaité (Théâtre Lyrique) on December 24, with an admirable cast: Mlle. Emma Calvé (Messaline), M. Renaud (Hares), and M. Duc (Héliou). The work was originally produced at Monte Carlo, March 21, 1899. — Samuel Rousseau has been elected President of the Société des Compositeurs de Musique, in the place of Victorin Joncière, recently deceased. — MM. Vincent d'Indy, Fauré, Messager, and Paul Vidal have been elected as the jury for the musical competition of the city of Paris. MM. Xavier Leroux, G. Marty, Samuel Rousseau, and Debussy have been named as supplementary jury.

ROME.

The Academy of St. Cecilia commences its series of winter concerts on the first Monday of the current month. Two will be under the direction of M. Edouard Colonne. Then there will be one with Louis Diémer, who will play Massenet's concerto, a second with the violinist Hubermann, and a third with Moritz Rosenthal, an orchestral concert under the direction of Mascagni, and another with choir and orchestra under that of Luigi Mancinelli. — The Neue Freie Presse announces that at Easter a ten-days' festival is to be held in memory of Gregory-the-Great, the creator of Gregorian song. There is to be a congress to which will be invited all men of learning conversant with the period of history during which that pope flourished; also all church composers and choirmasters.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BLOEMFONTEIN (South Africa). — The Bloemfontein Choral Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on December 8, before a very large and representative audience, which included His Excellency the Acting Lieutenant-Governor. The first part of the programme was devoted to Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' under the conductorship of Mr. G. H. Deale. The solos were undertaken by Miss Florence Fraser, and Mr. C. H. Cawse, both vocalists giving an excellent rendering of their parts. The choir and orchestra were admirably balanced, and gave an excellent interpretation of their share of the work. Mr. Deale, the conductor of the Society, who came from Dublin to South Africa towards the close of the war, is to be congratulated on the success which has attended his efforts in the cause of good music in this locality.

BROMSGROVE. — The Bromsgrove Musical Club held its third concert this season in the Institute on the 7th ult. The programme included a fine performance of Schubert's Symphony in B flat (No. 5), and Allan Allen's 'Tempo di Gavotte' played by the orchestra. The chorus sang Edward German's part-song 'O Lovely May,' Elgar's 'As Torrents in Summer,' and Barnby's madrigal 'Sing a Joyous Roundelay.' Mr. Chastey Hector conducted and, with Mr. E. E. Bissell, played the last two movements of Paderewski's Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin (Op. 13). Miss Eleanor Thomas contributed songs by Schubert and Grieg.

BURNLEY. — The Choral Union gave its second concert this season, at the Mechanics' Institute, on the 19th ult., when the chief feature of attraction was Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride.' The choir sang with real intelligence and power, and the orchestral accompaniments were splendidly played by the Hallé Orchestra. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Andrew Black gave admirable effect, it need hardly be said, to the solo parts, and the performance was directed with much skill by Mr. Widdop. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night.'

HOLT. — A concert was given in the concert hall by the Choral Society on the 21st ult. The first part of the programme was devoted to unaccompanied madrigals and part-songs, 16th century and modern. The main feature of interest was Purcell's opera 'Dido and Æneas,' which was given with orchestral accompaniment. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Green, Miss Mildred Rix, and Mr. S. Hemmings, who all did well. The choir sang with great spirit and good attack, their work throughout reflecting great credit on the conductor, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD. — The Leighton Buzzard and Linlade Musical Society gave the first concert of its second season on the 7th ult., when Dr. F. H. Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' and a miscellaneous selection, which included Gibbons's madrigal 'The silver swan,' Mendelssohn's 'The nightingale' and F. E. Gladstone's chorus 'A wet sheet and a flowing sea,' were performed under the direction of Mr. G. A. Hardesty. The vocal soloists were Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Annie McBride, Mr. Henry Boulderson, and Mr. George Stubbs.

LODDON. — The Choral Society gave its first concert this season in the Town Hall on the 13th ult., when Stainer's 'Daughter of Jairus,' Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer,' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The choir sang with spirit, and the solo vocalists were Mrs. George Green, Mr. H. J. Sawford Dye, and Mr. George Meen. Miss Kate Norman and Mr. F. W. Browne assisted at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively, and Mr. Fred Browne conducted.

LOUGHTON.—Mr. Henry Riding lectured on 'The Music of Christmastide' to the Loughton Literary Society on the 15th ult., and on 'English Music' to the Buckhurst Hill Athenæum three days later. A small choir illustrated the former, and some 40 members of the Loughton Choral Society sang madrigals, glees, part-songs, &c., at the latter discourse.

PLYMOUTH.—An interesting programme of chamber music was presented by the Misses Florence, Lily and Emma Smith at the Athenæum on the 14th ult., the most interesting feature being the performance (for the first time in this locality) of Tschaiikovsky's Trio.

RYDE.—The Northwood Choral and Orchestral Society gave its first concert this season at the Victoria Hall on the 12th ult., when Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride,' followed by a miscellaneous selection, were performed. Both choir and orchestra alike gave an excellent rendering of the difficult music, and reflected much credit on the training of their conductor, Mr. Frederick Rutland. Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Arthur Walenn gave a successful interpretation of the solo music.

WISBECH.—An organ recital, followed by the singing of Sir Frederick Bridge's cantata 'The Cradle of Christ,' took place in the Parish Church on the 19th ult. The singing of the choir of over fifty voices was very commendable, and there was a large congregation. The organist and choir-master of the church, Mr. F. Sutcliffe-Smith, presided at the organ.

Answers to Correspondents.

MIDDLE C.—(1) 'Short octaves,' as applied to old English GG organs, meant that in the lowest octave of the keyboard, two natural keys (EE and F) were omitted, therefore the order of the natural keys stood thus: CC, FF, G, A, B, C; but the FF sharp and the G sharp keys when pressed down did not sound their own notes, but their thirds below, DD and EE. Therefore, when pressing down the keys in (apparently) chromatic order, the sounds would be: CC, FF, DD, G, EE, A, B flat, C. It seems a strange arrangement to us, but the old organists were quite used to it. (2) We do not know 'full stop' as a technical term in organ nomenclature, but it might very appropriately be applied when a brilliant piece is brought to an untimely end by a collapse of the bellows.

ANXIOUS.—Merit has a knack of making itself known even in the Lay Clerk department of the profession. Get all the experience you can and compete for good posts at every opportunity. It will do you no harm to make a few friends who might be able to speak a word for you when opportunity offers. That you are 'twenty-one and have a compass from lower D to F of bass-baritone quality,' that you can 'sing rather difficult oratorio music,' and that you are prepared to 'work very hard and suffer disappointment' are excellent symptoms. Some of the men at the top of the tree have had the same experiences, and this should encourage you to go on with Excelsior as your motto.

H. B. G.—Ford's 'Since first I saw your face' first appeared in the year 1607 in a publication entitled: 'Musicke of Svndrie Kindes. The first whereof are, Aires for 4 voices to the Lute, Orphorion, or Basse-Viol, with a Dialogue for two Voices, and two Basse Viols in parts, tunde the Lute way. The second are Pauens, Galliards, Almaines, Toies, Iigges, Thumpes and such like, for two Basse-Viols, the Lieraway, so made as the greatest number may serue to play alone, very easie to be performde. Composed by THOMAS FORD, London, 1607.' The well-known four-part version of the strain is later than 1607.

M. G. K.—Wessely's Violin Scale and Arpeggio Manual (Augener and Co.) is the most complete we know on the subject, but it does not give the inversions of the chords.

MUNSTER.—Ruth, as an oratorio subject, has been set to music by the following composers: Avison and Giardini (a joint production), Otto Goldschmidt, George Tolhurst, J. L. Roeckel, F. H. Cowen, A. R. Gaul, César Franck, Henry Litolf and Arensky, and probably by other composers. The first-named in the above list was produced at the Lock Hospital Chapel (which formerly stood near Hyde Park Corner) on February 13, 1765.

R. G. T.—Your list of chant composers is so long that we cannot afford space to give biographical particulars of the twenty-seven you name. But you will find information concerning most of them in 'The Choir Chant Book' (Bemrose and Sons) and in Brown and Stratton's 'British Musical Biography.' Some of the names are in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.'

R. A. F.—(1) An illustrated article on Lichfield Cathedral appeared in our issue of June, 1902. Worcester has not yet been done. We shall be very glad to write about Birmingham Cathedral as soon as it is built. (2) See 'Music in the history of the Western Church' by Edward Dickinson (Smith, Elder and Co.), published in 1902; also 'Studies in Worship Music' by J. Spencer Curwen (Curwen and Sons).

INQUISITIVE.—(1) For a practical book on 'Transposition,' see the Primer by J. Warriner bearing that title. The Examples in Counterpoint Primers (of which there are two) by Gordon Saunders would doubtless prove useful to you in acquiring facility in score-reading from various clefs. (2) You ask us: 'What is the best instruction book for the pianoforte?' Is this a riddle?

F. P.—The exhibition of portraits, manuscripts, rare books, &c., to which you refer is doubtless that now being organized by the Musicians' Company to be held in June next. Particulars may be obtained from Mr. Arthur F. Hill, one of the Hon. Secretaries, at 140, New Bond Street, London, W.

A. B.—For modern orchestral pieces of no great difficulty see 'Suite Venetienne' by W. H. Reed (recently published, and which has already achieved much success); Three pieces (Op. 10), and Two pieces (Op. 15), for small orchestra, by Elgar; and 'Four English Dances in the olden style' by Cowen.

VIOLA.—The following compositions (according to the instruments named in your inquiry) would worthily represent British composers at concerts of Chamber Music:—Pianoforte Quartet in E flat, Mackenzie; in A flat, Parry; Pianoforte Trio, in B minor, Parry; in E flat, Stanford.

H. P. J.—'The Wolf,' words by John O'Keefe, is a song by William Shield (1748-1829). It was introduced into the ballad-opera of 'The Castle of Andalusia,' published in the year 1798.

T. M. D.—Many thanks. It is more than difficult to please everybody—it is impossible. Do the best you can, and do not suffer vexation of spirit at the contrary opinions of half-a-dozen different people.

HARMONY.—(1) Yes, you can obtain a diploma for Theory only by passing the examination for the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music in that subject. (2) Both.

JANE.—We are sorry that we cannot inform you, but we will make inquiry and answer your question as soon as we have obtained the information.

LEGATO.—(1) For Arpeggio studies, see Books 14, 15, and 16 of Franklin Taylor's Pianoforte Studies. (2) Yes, use the pedal by all means, but do not abuse it.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—(1) Rachmaninoff was born in 1873. (2) We regret that we cannot give you the addresses of the performers you mention—two of them are dead.

VERONICA.—It is impossible to give a satisfactory pronunciation of the name by a phonetic spelling of it.

A correspondent is desirous of discovering the composer of an old tune named 'Madeley.' Its metre is 8.7.8.7. D., Key D, duple rhythm. We have traced it back to 'Psalmody Evangelica,' edited by T. Williams, 1789, where the tune is anonymous. Three other tunes bearing the same name, but all different from that inquired about, are to be found in hymnals subsequently issued. Perhaps some of our readers who are hymn-tuneologists can ferret out the desired information.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND
EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY,
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

Separately, from the above:

THE RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS. Price 6d.
THE CANTICLES. Price 4d.

NEW WORK.

STOOD THE MOURNFUL MOTHER WEeping

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"We know nothing of the composer, but he must be possessed of some courage to produce an English version of the 'Stabat Mater.' The text is translated by the Rev. J. Monsell, D.D. The work is divided into the usual ten numbers, with slight modifications. The opening chorus, 'Stood the mournful mother weeping,' is in F minor, and has a striking and passionate introduction. With the entry of the voices, the treatment is severe, and in the ecclesiastical style, but the expression is modern. The first part is employed in the last chorus, 'When my mortal body, dying,' but then changing to the major at 'Take my soul to Paradise,' and concluding with a well-worked-out fugue at 'To adore Thee, my God.' No. 6, 'Holy Father, let affliction,' is one of the most elaborate numbers. It is for soprano solo and chorus. In this the influence of Dvorák seems apparent, as that of Rossini appears in No. 4, 'For the sins of each offender,' but there is no direct imitation. The composer has individuality, and is a skilled musician. No. 9, 'Make me with His stripes be stricken,' beginning with a tenor solo followed by a solo for bass, and concluding with a quartet, is a fine piece of writing; and the whole composition reveals not only a high aim, but the ability to achieve it."—Birmingham Daily Post.

Published separately:

No. 5. CHORUS (unaccompanied), "JESU, FOUNT OF LOVE,"
Price 1s. 6d.

"No. 5, 'Jesu, Fount of Love,' is a chorus, anthem-like in character, the sensuous harmony of which cannot fail to touch the feelings, if it be well sung, without accompaniment, as suggested."—Coventry Herald.

ANTHEM—"PUT ME NOT TO REBUKE."

(Sung in Hereford Cathedral.)

COMPOSED BY W. MASON, L.R.A.M.

Musical Opinion says: "A sound and dignified piece of writing, showing solid musicianship."

Birmingham Daily Gazette recommends it to parish choirs as an expressive setting of the words, and as worthy of being named with certain other well-known settings—in fact, preferring it to many of the best-known and most popular anthems.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS

WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

PREFACE.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason, the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern, so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

The lack of certain well-known hymns in that book and the need of extra hymns for certain occasions are often felt. This is clear from the fact that many supplemental appendixes and leaflets are now used with it, particularly books for mission services, children's use, and other special occasions.

It may be said by many that we already have too many hymns, and that a large number are most unsuitable. There is no subject upon which persons differ more thoroughly than the suitability of different hymns. No two people will ever agree as to all the hymns in any collection. The only way of dealing satisfactorily with this problem seems to be to give a comprehensive compilation, together with guidance as to the character of each hymn. Hence, in the index of first lines a letter has been prefixed to each hymn giving an indication as to its characteristic—whether a hymn of direct praise, a prayer, or sentimental, historical, etc., etc. Those who object to hymns of any particular class can, therefore, easily avoid their use.

Guided by these two principles, hymns have been included for the following reasons:—

1. Hymns which, being in constant request, are inserted, not necessarily because of their merit, but rather because they have been found to be of real use in many cases.

2. Since the formation of other hymn books, much greater prominence has been given to music in connection with Choral Celebrations, and with this has grown a want of more hymns, especially short ones of one or two verses for different parts of the service.

3. So also has there grown a demand for further hymns for Almsgiving, for Processionals of a greater length than usual, for Harvest, Flower, and Mission Services, besides other special occasions.

4. Finally, it is felt by very many to be a mistake to accustom children to the use of a Children's hymn book which will be discarded when they have grown older. Far better is it to accustom them at once, when young, to love the hymn book which they will use in after life. For this purpose a few more children's hymns than are supplied in other books seem to be wanted.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

The opening Chorus of this Anthem is majestic. Each part has strength and effect with powerful modulations. The next Chorus is bright, telling, and lively, and works up to a splendid ff on the words "Open me the gates"; the voices moving in triumphant style. This is followed by an impressive Bass Solo "The same stone which the builders refused." The music throughout is melodious, lofty, and spirited.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised. Mr. Gaul was engaged on this, his latest work, for about three years, and we believe that all who hear it will agree that the time was very profitably spent."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS

BY

AGNES HONORIA LEEDS,

LICENTIATE OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

108 pp. Oblong Folio, profusely illustrated in colours, bound in coloured paper board covers, cloth back, price 7s. 6d.

"MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS" is a book which appeals to the minds of children between the ages of four and eight. Knowing the love which these little folks have for pictures, and the educational value of pictorial aids in imparting knowledge to those of tender years, the author has embodied in the present work a system of teaching notation by means of illustrations of familiar objects, a method which she has employed for many years with the greatest success. The scheme is entirely systematic and progressive, and by its means the child-pupil is led to form an actual friendship with the individual notes.

With regard to the value of notes, the method followed is that of grouping them into one FAMILY—the members of which become personally known to the pupil—the value of each note being clearly indicated by its degree of family relationship. Thus we have "Mr. Semibreve, Mrs. Minim, Master Crotchet, Miss Quaver, Master Semiquaver, and Baby Demisemiquaver." Furthermore, the child is initiated in a Game of Exchanging Notes, according to the respective values of the various notes.

The book also contains Elementary Ear Exercises and a special chapter is devoted to Signs and Ornaments. Other sections are Scales in One Octave, Easy Sight-reading Exercises, Easy Finger Exercises, together with little Solos, and Duets for Teacher and Pupil, and for little Pupils by themselves.

STRING QUARTET

IN A MINOR

COMPOSED BY

JOHN B. McEWEN.

1st Violin, 2s.; 2nd Violin, 2s.; Viola, 2s.; Violoncello, 2s.
Score, 5s.

THE TIMES.

Many of the themes are none the less charming that they suggest memories of definite tunes, such as "Cold and raw," which has suggested several passages in the slow movement. This and the scherzo are, perhaps, the best movements, and the trio of the latter has a really impressive subject given out by the viola.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

It would undoubtedly charm the ears of the music-lovers on the northern side of the Tweed, for the chief themes are of genuinely Scottish character. If these possess less attractiveness for the Southron, there is, nevertheless, much to admire as regards the effective manner in which they are handled. The music is, indeed, remarkably animated. Of the four movements the most pleasing are the impassioned Andante quasi Adagio, and the fiery and assertive Vivace, while the Finale contains much that is bright and spirited.

STANDARD.

The first and second movements are built up with themes possessing character expressed in Scottish musical idiom and treated with pronounced skill. Of the two the second is the better. This is an Andante quasi Adagio, which shows that the composer has the power to express depth of sentiment. The succeeding movement, headed Vivace, is bright and vigorous, these attributes being heightened by a central section in slow tempo containing some charming passages for the viola. In the Finale, reference is made to the principal themes of the preceding movements, and an effective climax closes an interesting and scholarly composition.

MORNING POST.

The subject matter of the Andante quasi Adagio was quaint, the opening plaintive theme sounding like a genuine Scots folk melody. This and the following movement, Vivace, a vigorous Highland dance with a pathetic and well-contrasting lament by way of trio, seemed to us the sections of the work which made the readiest appeal. The performance was very good, and at the close there was much applause.

DAILY NEWS.

The composer has used Scotch themes to some extent, but the whole complexion of the music has nothing narrowly national, and, in spite of evidence that the composer has taken many models for his style, the music has an individual note. . . . The slow movement is thematically the most interesting, and has much imagination and freshness of thought.

OBSERVER.

The work is a masterly composition, strong and fresh in thematic material,—Scottish musical idioms are freely used—and ingenious, free, and picturesque in treatment.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The part-writing is always interesting and scholarly, and in the second number—an Andante quasi Adagio, built up with an expressive melody—there are several passages of great beauty. The Vivace, containing a charming slow section, is a captivating movement, and the Finale will probably improve on intimacy.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The work, to begin with, is cast according to a true and rightly classical mode; it is throughout clever, and perhaps the most telling criticism upon it lies in the obvious fact that too often its liveliness does duty for life. Scottish it is in every detail of its being; and Mr. McEwen has without any question adapted the Scottish manner of musical thought to his really good sense of harmony, counterpoint, and instrumental combination.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

The succeeding quartet—one in A minor, by Mr. John B. McEwen—touched the main spring of modern development, so far as the term can be applied to music that is necessarily limited in its power of expression. There were moments when it seemed almost as if the composer were writing for a quartet of strings with the sound of the orchestra in his ear. Full justice, however, must be rendered him for the admirable manner in which he caught the peculiar glow of Scotland's pathetic minstrelsy.

THE WORLD.

It was a work well worth listening to, for it has great freshness of feeling and shows no little skill. It is Scotch, and is not ashamed of its nationality, nor does it attempt to hide its origin beneath the thin disguise of an English accent. Mr. McEwen's themes are mostly in the nature of Scotch folk-songs, and their varied expression gives him all the musical contrasts he needs. He uses them discreetly and does not get beyond the limits of chamber music, as so many modern writers do in their most expressive moments. . . . There is a refreshing natural note in the whole, and in the slow movement we have moments of real beauty, while in the trio of the Scherzo there is an impressive and cleverly used viola solo.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his "Suite Venitienne" at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. . . . In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL UNION CONCERTS,
GLASGOW.
MISCELLANEOUS.

Glasgow Herald, November 30, 1903.

"It is seldom so fine a singer as Miss Lillie Wormald comes to Glasgow unannounced by preliminary paragraphs. Miss Wormald has a voice of beautiful quality, which she uses with wonderful skill. . . . The audience were delighted. Miss Wormald had to return to the platform many times after all her solos."

Glasgow Daily Record, November 30, 1903.

"The efforts of Miss Lillie Wormald, the vocalist of the evening, well deserved the tribute which they received from the audience. She possesses a charming voice, of considerable flexibility, and was heard to the utmost advantage in the 'Scene et Légende Hindoue,' from Delibes' 'Lakme.' Her other contributions comprised items by Bizet, Dvorák, and E. Dell'Acqua, which evoked an ovation of applause. Dr. Cowen's 'A Birthday Song' was conceded as an encore."

"CREATION."

Glasgow Herald, December 23, 1903.

"In the absence of Madame Lucile Hill, Miss Lillie Wormald took the soprano solos. . . . In the florid solo parts she was delightful. 'With verdure clad' and 'On mighty pens' were little short of perfect. The duets were also most enjoyable."

Glasgow Daily Mail, December 23, 1903.

"Miss Lillie Wormald possesses a beautiful voice and sings with artistic method. . . . 'With verdure clad' and 'On mighty pens' were almost irreproachable."

MR. MAX MOSSEL'S SUBSCRIPTION CONCERTS,

Compositions, which must be sent in on or before the 31st inst., should be addressed to:—

THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES,

and endorsed 'MUSICAL TIMES COMPETITION.'

MISS MURIEL FOSTER.

'There is so much reason for singing in this sweet world, when one thinks rightly of it.'

'If you are singing, and sing false notes, it does not matter how true the words are. If you sing at all, you must sing sweetly.'

'The law of nobleness in Music and Poetry is essentially one. Both are the necessary and natural expression of pure and human joy or sorrow, by the lips and fingers of persons trained in right schools to manage their bodies and souls.'

'... The finest models—that is to say, the truest, simplest, usefullest. Note those epithets: they will range through all the arts. Try them in Music, where you might think them the least applicable. I say the truest, that in which the notes most closely and faithfully express the meaning of the words, or the character of intended emotion; again, the simplest, that in which the meaning and melody are attained with the fewest and most significant notes possible; and, finally, the usefullest, that Music which makes the best words most beautiful, which enchants them in our memories each with its own glory of sound, and which applies them closest to the heart at the moment we need them.'

The above extracts from the writings of John Ruskin furnish an appropriate prelude to the biographical consideration of a most gifted English singer who forms the subject of the following remarks.

Muriel Foster—one of a family of three sisters—was born at Sunderland on November 22, 1877. As a great-niece of the late Birket Foster, the celebrated artist, she bears a cousin relationship to Mr. Myles Birket Foster. The loss of both parents while Muriel Foster and her twin-sister, Hilda, were yet in their girlhood, and the monetary circumstances in which as orphans they were left, necessitated a training whereby they should earn their own livelihood. In 1896 they both entered the Royal College of Music, not as students with the idea of becoming professional vocalists, but in order to qualify themselves as teachers. Both the girls, as well as their elder sister, Winifred, were clever. So rapid was the progress made by Muriel that in the first year of her pupilage at Kensington (1896) she gained a Council Exhibition; moreover, she fortunately obtained her first paid engagement in that year when she sang (on November 6, 1896) at Bradford in Sir Hubert Parry's 'King Saul,' performed under the composer's own direction. She took part in the performance of Verdi's 'Falstaff,' given by the College students at the Lyceum Theatre on December 11, 1896, concerning which THE MUSICAL TIMES said: 'Muriel Foster sang well as Dame Quickly, though in appearance she was too youthful and attractive'!

It seemed as if her College career would come to a premature end owing to financial difficulties, when she happened to sing at a concert given in a private house. A lady present on that occasion was so charmed with the young singer's voice that she offered the sum of £100 towards her further education and maintenance. Although the name of this kind-hearted lady remains a secret, the mention of the fact may induce others to follow her generous example in befriending other gifted students of music. The opportunity of gaining an Open Scholarship at the College was too good to lose; she therefore entered for the fray, with the result that she won the Scholarship, while Hilda, her twin-sister and fellow student at the College, ran her very closely in coming out proxime accessit. This was early in 1897. In that year (on June 8) she sang at the Brahms Commemoration concert given at the Royal College of Music, the programme of which included one of the most inspired works of the master, the beautiful Rhapsody for alto solo and male-voice chorus (Op. 53). Concerning its interpretation THE MUSICAL TIMES may again be quoted: 'The solo in the latter piece [the Rhapsody] being sung by Muriel Foster with much expression and finish, and excellent pronunciation of the German text.' In the following year (1898) she obtained the London Musical Society's prize, and in 1900 the medal given by the Musicians' Company to the best student at the College.

Miss Foster refers in terms of warm appreciation and sincere gratitude to her singing professor at the Royal College, Miss Anna Williams. 'She has taught me everything. I went through all the chief oratorios with her, and cannot speak too highly of her splendid teaching. I took the organ as a second study, under Mr. Walter Alcock, and greatly enjoyed playing it. Mr. Herbert Sharpe gave me pianoforte lessons, and I attempted harmony and counterpoint under Dr. Gladstone and Dr. Walford Davies, but perhaps the less said about my theoretical studies the better.' It should be mentioned that her eldest sister, Winifred, was also a student at the Royal College, her principal study being the violin. Hilda and Muriel gained much distinction in their singing of duets, but the former retired from professional life on her marriage (in 1900), as has also her eldest sister from the same reason.

The last year (1900) of Miss Foster's college life was an eventful one in that she qualified for the Associateship of the College, received her first Festival engagement (at Worcester), and, with her sister Hilda, had the honour of singing at Balmoral by 'command' before Queen Victoria, on the revered Queen's last birthday. 'I was so dreadfully nervous,' she says, 'that I became paralysed with fright. I had to start my song three times, but when I overheard the dear old Queen say to Princess Beatrice: "What a beautiful voice!" I became reassured and was able to go on. She gave me a handsome brooch and spoke in such a motherly way to me.'

Miss Foster has been a great traveller for one who has so far had a short career. In 1901 she toured with Madame Albani's concert-party in Canada, everywhere meeting with success. She says: 'Madame Albani treated me as if I were her own daughter. She was kindness itself. Nothing gave her greater pleasure than when I had a recall or encore, and I had a very happy time with her in Canada.' A great honour was conferred on the subject of this sketch when she was invited to sing at the Lower Rhine Festival of 1902, held at Düsseldorf under the direction of Professor Julius Butts, when her interpretation (in German) of the part of the Angel in 'The Dream of Gerontius' called forth well-merited marks of approval and favourable notices in the German newspapers. In the autumn, at the Worcester Festival, she sang the same part in English at very short notice, replacing Miss Brema, who was ill. In December she toured through Holland with the Mengelberg Orchestra as the only vocalist at those concerts. She has also sung at Berlin, Cologne, Frankfurt, Dresden, Aachen, and other places in Germany, and in the spring of last year she appeared at concerts in Russia. She says that while the Germans are 'fearfully critical' they are very appreciative of anything they like. Last year Miss Foster had the honour of singing at Windsor Castle before their Majesties the King and Queen and the King and Queen of Italy. In this connection she relates the following amusing incident, preluding it with the remark: 'I have a most shocking memory for faces; I cannot remember them. After the concert, and the King and Queen and others had spoken to me, I said to a gentleman of the Court (as I thought): "Now please tell me who everybody is." "With pleasure," was the courteous reply. "That lady over there is my niece, Princess Victoria, and that lady is—" Imagine my feelings when I discovered that "the gentleman of the Court" who so readily gave me this information was the Duke of Connaught! He thoroughly entered into the fun of the thing, and I then and there decided to buy photographs of all the Royal Family so that I may avoid such a catastrophe in future.'

Two conditions at least are necessary to the making of a great singer—a voice and brains. If, as in the case of Miss Muriel Foster, a graceful presence can be added thereto, so much the better. As Queen Victoria said, she has a beautiful voice, and, moreover, she knows how to use it. The clear enunciation of the words (English or German) is one of her several attributes—not as a thing in itself, but as an essential element in the true conception of the whole. And then she has a highly-developed artistic temperament, to which, for instance, her masterly interpretation of a difficult Bach aria bears abundant testimony. She is perhaps at her best in serious songs, and in strains that are pregnant with deep expression. Her vocalization is perfect. She never strives after effect or the winning of popular applause, but, to her credit be it said, she steadily keeps in view the highest ideals of interpretative art. The 'brains' to which we have referred are especially useful in an emergency. For instance, at the Cardiff Festival of last year, in the unavoidable absence of Miss Brema, Miss Foster had to learn the contralto parts of two important works at very short notice—César Franck's 'Beatitudes' and the 'Samson and Delilah' of Saint-Saëns: the latter she learnt in two hours! She created the part of Mary Magdalene in Elgar's 'The Apostles.'

On the 9th ult. a very large, appreciative and enthusiastic audience filled St. James's Hall, when Miss Foster gave a vocal recital previous to her departure to the United States and Canada. The versatility of this young and gifted artist may be estimated in the following list of eighteen songs, in which the beauty of her voice and the charm of her personality found full expression:—

'Mortals, trust this wondrous mercy'	Bach
'O wüsst ich doch den Weg zurück'	Brahms.
'Willst du, dass ich geh'?'
'Geheimnis'
'Meine Liebe ist grün'
'Chanson de l'Adieu'	Tosti.
'Pensée d'autrefois'	Fontenailles.
'Berceuse'	Bizet.
'Maman, dites moi'	Weckerlin.
'Gute Nacht, Mägdlein'	Dvorák.
'Frage'	Max Bruch.
'Von Jenseits'	Rachmaninoff.
'Muttertändelei'	Richard Strauss.
'Night'	Garnet-Wolseley Cox.
'Boat Song'	Stanford.
'The Shepherd's Song'	Elgar.
'Rondel'	Philip Williams
'Day and Night'

No artist, especially one who has for so short a time enjoyed public favour, could have had a more enthusiastic send-off, or have been the recipient of so much genuine appreciation. Miss Foster has many well-wishers who feel confident of her future in America and elsewhere. She fully deserves all the success that has hitherto attended her, because she so worthily upholds all that is best in the traditions of English vocal art.

TEWKESBURY ABBEY.

On one side,—the town, the Abbey, and beyond it a wide stretch of meadow and woodland as far as you could see; on the other, the broad Ham, the glittering curve of Severn, and the distant country, sloping up into the blue hills far away.—John Halifax, Gentleman.

In times far distant, how long ago it matters not, a hermit dug his cell, or built his chapel in Gloucestershire at the confluence of the Avon and Severn. The name of this hermit was Theoc, or Theocus. Hence we get Theocsburg, Theotisbryg, Teodechesberie, Theokusburia, all these variants being now softened into Tewkesbury. A town as he should behave himself well.' The superiority of the town over Gloucester in those olden times is shown in the fact that whereas Tewkesbury issued thirty 'tokens' (as current coin), Gloucester issued only twenty, a sure token of Tewkesbury's greater importance. Students of Shakespeare will remember more than one reference of the Immortal Bard sprang up, which in course of time outgrew its early British limitations and became a free borough under the charter of the Earls of Gloucester. This document contained the quaint provision that every freeman might brew, and bake, and grind his own corn. Tewkesbury was first incorporated in 1574 by Queen Elizabeth, her charter stating that 'the town was great and very populous.' Her Majesty decreed that Wednesday should be market-day, and nominated a Town Clerk to exercise the duties of that office 'so long to the old Gloucestershire town. In Part II. of 'King Henry IV.' (Act ii., Sc. 4), he puts into the mouth of Falstaff these words:—

He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him [Poins] than is in a mallet.

And does not Dickens, in chapter 49 of 'Pickwick,' refer to 'The Hop-Pole Hotel,' at Tewkesbury? (see the above illustration). He tells us that, after having dined at that hostelry en route, 'Mr. Pickwick and Mr. Ben Allen fell fast asleep for thirty miles, while Bob Sawyer and Mr. Weller sang duets in the dickey.' Among the literary associations of the place must be mentioned the story of 'John Halifax, Gentleman,' the scene of which is laid at Tewkesbury, although the authoress, Mrs. Craik (Miss Muloch), calls it 'Norton Bury.' From its geographical position the town may claim to be a watering-place, when the floods are out! In this connection we may quote the following interesting

ROBERT FITZ-HAMON, AND SIBILLA, HIS WIFE,

MANUSCRIPT VOLUME IN THE POSSESSION OF SIR VERE ISHAM, BART.,

entry from the Feoffee Book Memoranda preserved in the Abbey:—

In the year 1770 was the highest Flood ever remembered at Tewkesbury. . . . It came into the Church and Chancel, so that Divine Service could not be performed. And notwithstanding many of the graves in the church were bricked round, yet there was scarce a grave-stone but what was turned upon its edge, and the insides of the graves appeared which was shocking to behold. It likewise loosened some parts of the Foundation of the Church, particularly the large pillar next the Bailiffs seats which supports the Tower, a part of which fell down and has since been rebuilt.

Every schoolboy is familiar with the famous and terrible Battle of Tewkesbury, the last in the Wars of the Roses, fought on May 4, 1471, when the Yorkists under Edward IV. gained a crowning victory over the Lancastrians, and when poor young Prince Edward was so cruelly assassinated. Interesting relics of the battle are to be found in the vestry door of the Abbey, which is backed with iron plates traditionally said to have been beaten out of old swords and armour used in the fight which took place in and around the church. It is not surprising that so historic a town—now peaceful enough—in the old country should furnish a name for two places across the Atlantic. In the State of Massachusetts we find a Tewksbury,—though it is in the County of Middlesex!—and there is a village of the same name in Quebec. For quietude, picturesque old-timbered houses, pleasant walks, and historical associations, our Tewkesbury is deservedly famous and is well worth a visit.

The glory of Tewkesbury is its noble Abbey Church. To think that the massive tower of that venerable sanctuary has stood for nearly 800 years, a silent witness to all the changes that have taken place in the development of England's greatness, and typifying, in its strength and solidity, all that is best in the nation's characteristics! The first church formed part of the Anglo-Saxon monastery built about the year 715 by two Saxon nobles and brothers named Oddo and Doddo. Four hundred years later (in 1102) Robert Fitz-Hamon, who had married a niece of William the Conqueror, refounded the monastery as a Benedictine abbey. Portraits of Fitz-Hamon and his spouse, holding a model of the Abbey in their hands, form the adjoining illustration. Twenty years were occupied in the erection of the Abbey.

They dreamed not of a perishable home,
Who thus could build.

The conventual buildings have disappeared, but the church stands in all its stately proportions. The consecration took place on November 20, 1123, with much ceremony, the dedication charter of Fitz-Hamon and of the Earl of Gloucester, sealed with their seals, being laid upon the altar. At the Dissolution the Abbey was seized by the King's Commissioners, but the good people of Tewkesbury petitioned their 'most dread sovereign lord' to spare their church, with the result that for the payment of the sum of £453 their prayer was granted.

The architecture of the Abbey is of course Norman. The North Porch is of unusual dimensions, and the tower, 132 feet high, is one of the finest and most perfect Norman towers in existence. A special feature is the recessed West front, as shown in our illustration. On entering the building and looking down the Nave, one is struck with its resemblance to Gloucester Cathedral. There are the same grand old Norman pillars, which seem as if they supported the roof shoulder-high. The absence of an organ screen permits of an uninterrupted view from West to East, and vice versâ. The ambulatory of the choir reminds one of Westminster Abbey—on a small scale, of course. Behind the altar is the Clarence Vault, in which were interred the bodies of the famous Duke of Clarence and his wife; but in 1709 the remains were displaced to make room for the body of a 'periwig-pated alderman' of Tewkesbury, named Hawling! When, in 1829, Alderman Hawling's remains were removed, tradition says that the Clarence vault smelt very strong of Malmsey wine!

Tewkesbury Abbey, from the South.

(by Mr. W. G. Bannister, Tewkesbury.)

The Abbey is famous for its beautiful tombs and chantries, considered by many authorities as the finest in England. The Beauchamp Chantry—or, as it is frequently mis-called, the Warwick Chantry—claims special mention by reason of its exquisite beauty. A well-informed writer—Mr. Knight, in his ‘Cursory disquisition on the Conventual Church of Tewkesbury and its antiquities’—thus describes this fine specimen of art in stone, erected in the year 1422 by Isabel le Despenser, to the memory of her first husband, Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Abergavenny and Worcester, otherwise Ricardus de Bello Campo. Mr. Knight says:—

There can be but one opinion on the praise which belongs to the exquisiteness of finishing by which the several parts of it are distinguished. The entablature, wedged between two of the old pillars of the choir, and appearing to rest upon light columnar buttresses of singular beauty, gives us an assemblage of filigree and fretwork which may vie with the finest specimens of similar workmanship in the kingdom: the elegant palm-leaved parapet which occurs in the division between the storeys, the numerous escutcheons blazoned in their proper colours—the niches and pedestals under their respective canopies once ornamented with figures which fanaticism has dislodged—the slender shafts supporting a higher apartment, probably the rood-loft in the inside of the fabric, from whence half-figures of angels are seen to issue,—the pendants drooping, like congelations in a grotto, from a roof adorned with a most delicate tracery spread over it like a web;—these and a countless multitude of minuter beauties almost distract attention, and overwhelm the judgment with their different claims to notice.

In regard to the tombs, a curious epitaph is to be found on the monument of one Thomas Merrett, a barber chirurgion, who departed this life in the year 1669. This epitaph thus records Surgeon Merrett's merits:—

T hough only stone salutes the reader's eye,
H ere in deep silence precious dust doth lye,
O bscurly sleeping in Death's mighty store,
M ingled with common earth till time's no more:
A gainst Death's stubborn laws who dares repine
S ince so much Merrett did his life resigne.

M urmurs and tears are useless in the grave,
E lse he, whole vollies at his tomb might have;
R est here in peace, who like a faithful steward
R epaired the church, the poor and needy cured.
E ternal mansions do attend the just,
T o clothe with immortality their dust,
T ainted (whilst under ground) with worms and rust.

Mention must be made of a chaste marble tablet on the south-east tower pier to the memory of the authoress of ‘John Halifax, Gentleman.’

Within the limits of our space it is impossible to mention a tithe of the interesting things in and connected with this old Abbey. The accompanying views will give a general idea of its architecture. We must therefore be content with calling attention to a few features of special interest. The bosses on the outer of the three longitudinal ribs of the first four bays of the Nave, counting from the west door, consist of musical subjects—angels playing the following instruments: pipe, tambourine, cymbals, bagpipe, hurdy-gurdy, harp, dulcimer, organ, rebec, and zither. Mr. Bannister, the well-informed sacristan and historian of the Abbey, tells us that ‘these musical bosses are associated with central bosses representing events in the Life of Christ up to that of the Last Supper, after which musical instruments do not occur except in two smaller bosses terminating cross ribs.’ This is interesting, as is also the fact that the present scheme of colour decoration is the work of the late Mr. T. Gambier Parry, father of Sir Hubert Parry. He considered the roof to be ‘a marvellous specimen of English carving, and that together with the roofs of Gloucester and Norwich Cathedrals, it combined some of the finest features of mediæval sculpture.’

The stained glass in the seven windows of the Choir is one of the most prominent and attractive features of the Abbey. It dates from circa 1322, and although the ravages of time and neglect have left their mark, perhaps there is nowhere else in England quite so much glass of the same date and, on the whole, in such good condition. The East window has, in the circle at the head of it, a representation of an angelic choir playing upon the following instruments—tambourine, flute, organ and harp (some instruments are gone through damage), and in other parts of the window are angels blowing trumpets. The South-west window of the Choir contains four knights clad in armour. These warrior-like representations are valuable as giving accurate information as to the armour and knightly gear of the time. It is satisfactory to learn that the safety of this old glass has now been ensured by a protective external window of rolled glass let in the mullions from the outside.

We may now consider some interesting references to the Miracle Plays performed long ago in the Nave of the Abbey. These plays found their way southwards from Coventry, where they flourished exceedingly. Amongst disbursements in the Tewkesbury churchwardens' accounts of the year 1578 are the following items:—

Item to Richd. Westone for making jerkins, xiiij.
Item to Mr. Fyelde for buckeram for capes, viij.
Item for two shippe skines for the sinners gears, xvjd.

Among the receipts for the year, an amount of 'vjs. viij' is entered for the 'hyer of the players apparell,' and a 'Note of certaine goodes of the churche' handed over to the new churchwardens on May 4, 1585, contains the following inventory:—

PLAYERS APPARRELL

Item viij. gownes and clokes
Item vij. jirkyngs
Item iiij. cappes of greene sylke
Item viij. heades of heare for the apostles and x. beardes.
Item a face or vysor for the devyll.

In the year 1599 the churchwardens built a battlement on the tower. Bazaars and fancy fairs had not then been invented, so in order to defray the cost of the battlement, the churchwardens 'set forth three stage plays to be played in the Abbey at Whitsuntide in the following year'!

The subjoined quaint extracts are from the 'Feoffee Book Memoranda':—

THE WEST FRONT, TEWKESBURY ABBEY.

Tewkesbury Abbey possesses two organs—an ancient and a modern instrument, both of which are in constant use. The elder of this 'pair of organs' has a very interesting history, with which the names of Cromwell and Milton are associated. In the year 1637, Thomas Harris, the elder—the first of four generations of organ-builders of that name and grandfather of the celebrated Renatus Harris—built a 'double organ' (great organ, with choir organ in front) for Magdalen College, Oxford. Evelyn, in his Diary, thus refers to the instrument, under date of July, 1654 :—

Next we walked to Magdalen College, where we saw the library and chapel, which was likewise in pontifical order, the altar only, I think, turned tablewise; and there was still the double organ, which abominations (as now esteemed) were almost universally demolished; Mr. Gibbon [Christopher Gibbons], that famous musician, giving us a taste of his skill and talents on that instrument.

In the same year (1654) Cromwell, who is known to have been very fond of music, had this organ removed to Hampton Court Palace, where he and John Milton resided. It is said that the poet played on this identical organ at Hampton Court Palace. Macaulay, in his essay on Milton, says: 'We can almost fancy . . . that we can see him sitting at the old organ.' This tradition has caused the instrument to be named 'Milton's organ.' At the Restoration it was removed back to Magdalen College, the sum of £16 10s. being paid for its transportation from Hampton Court to Oxford.

In 1690 Renatus Harris undertook to improve and repair the organ built by his grandfather, and to make it 'an extraordinary instrument and the best old organ in England,' for the sum of £150. He covenanted to render the mechanism 'strong, staunch, good, and serviceable'; to make the pipes 'bear a good tone, strong, clear, and sweet'; to 'alter the pitch of the said organs half a note lower than they are now,' and to make the 'two sets of keys fall as little as can be to give the pipes their due tone, the touch to be ready, soft, and even under the finger.' Could anything be more satisfactory even from a twentieth-century point of view? This organ had no reed stops, but Renatus Harris introduced a 'Cedirne, of metal' (Cithern), doubtless a string-toned stop; and for the first time in England he applied the terms Furniture and Cymbal to the compound stops.

It may not be without interest as showing the evolution of organ-building in England if we give both specifications of this Harris instrument—(i.) the original Thomas Harris organ of 1637; and (ii.) as renovated by Renatus Harris in 1690 :—

But what has this Magdalen-Miltonian-Cromwellian organ to do with Tewkesbury Abbey? We shall see. Judging from the Churchwardens' accounts, it would seem as if prior to the year 1737 Tewkesbury Abbey possessed no organ whatever, though this is difficult to believe. At all events, at a Vestry meeting held on March 9, 1735, the parishioners decided to acquire an organ for their Abbey church, and to purchase the instrument which was in Magdalen College, Oxford (the Milton organ above referred to), then in the market. The organ having been duly bought, paid for, and removed to its new home, it was placed upon an ugly screen, which at that time and until the restoration of the Abbey in 1875, divided the church into two portions. In 1796 the instrument was repaired and a swell organ added, at a cost of £186 8s., 2d. by 'Mr. Holland, organ builder.' In this state the organ practically remained for half-a-century till, in 1848, 'Henry Willis of London' (then a young man of twenty-seven) rebuilt it at a cost of £322 15s. 8d. In the previous year Willis had successfully rebuilt the organ in Gloucester Cathedral,—'my stepping-stone to fame,' he records in the illustrated biographical sketch of him which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1898 (p. 297)—and what more natural than that the neighbouring town of Tewkesbury should employ him in a similar capacity? The specification of this Milton organ, as rebuilt by Father Willis, and as it now stands in the South Transept, is as follows :—

The second organ in Tewkesbury Abbey is a large four-manual instrument, at present without a case, standing in the North Transept. It was built by Messrs. Michell and Thynne, and exhibited by them at the Inventions Exhibition at Kensington in 1885, and at the Liverpool Exhibition in the following year. The late Rev. C. W. Grove, of Mythe House, Tewkesbury, and a great benefactor to the Abbey, purchased this Exhibition organ and presented it to the Abbey, as the following inscription upon the instrument records :—

To the greater glory of God, and to commemorate the Jubilee of Our Most Gracious Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, this Organ is given to Tewkesbury Abbey by Charles William Grove, June 21st, A.D. 1887.

The open diapasons are made of tin alloyed with about eight pounds of lead to the hundredweight. It is a positive delight to hear the lovely tones which these old Harris pipes produce—no repelling harshness, but a mellowed quality which captivates the ear by its old-world charm. No wonder that Dr. S. S. Wesley held a very high opinion of this organ. It is interesting to learn that he loved to play upon it on many occasions during his organistship of Gloucester Cathedral, and that the old man who used to blow for him is still living in Tewkesbury.

Both the organs are used at the services—the Milton instrument to accompany the choir, the Grove gift to support the congregation, the organist being able to make his way unobserved from one instrument to the other. As they are tuned in unison they can be played simultaneously.

The only known roll of organists of Tewkesbury Abbey dates from the year 1737, contemporary with the acquisition of the Milton organ. At a Vestry meeting held on April 5, 1737, the churchwardens were empowered to pay an organist a salary of £20 per annum 'out of the profits arising to the church from the graves, the seats, and the bell.' To meet this liability, it was ordered—

That a tax of two shillings and sixpence should be laid on the great bell whenever it was rung for a funeral in the afternoon, and a further charge of two shillings and sixpence when it was rung in the morning; that an additional charge of three shillings and fourpence should be put upon every grave opened in the church; and the seats be raised two shillings and sixpence in the pound.

The first organist was one James Clearely, of Gloucester, who held the post for thirty years, the same length of service as that of his successor, Charles Edward Chandler, to whom succeeded his son, Nathaniel Chandler, who reigned forty-nine years. This trio covered a period of 110 years, and brings us to 1847, when a nephew of the last named organist was appointed. This gentleman, Nathaniel Chandler White, is stated to have been 'somewhat of a genius.' On one occasion he played the whole of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' (except the overtures) entirely from memory, a feat which he successfully accomplished in the space of one hour and twenty minutes. From 1867 to 1878 the office was held by a gentleman possessing a musical name, to wit, James Thorniloe Horniblow. At one time he held the organistships of the Abbey, Ripple Church, and Holy Trinity Church, Tewkesbury, in addition to attending to the claims of his business as a clothier and draper. The appointment (in 1878) of Mr. Henry Rogers, a professional musician, was coincident with the new era that dawned for the old Abbey on the completion of its restoration (in 1879), and the improvement of its musical service.

The present organist of the Abbey, appointed in January, 1900, is Mr. Alfred W. V. Vine, a Licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music and

Associate of the Royal College of Music, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. He was formerly a chorister at St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, and strangely enough the present vicar of Tewkesbury, the Rev. O. P. Wardell-Yerburgh, was one of the assistant clergy of St. Peter's at the same time. Mr. Vine cannot speak too highly of the help and encouragement he receives from his vicar, and of the cordial co-operation which mutually exists between them in the discharge of their important duties. There is a daily choral Evensong (boys only), and no pains are spared by clergy and organist to make the services worthy of the venerable fane in which they are held.

For valued assistance in the preparation of this article, thanks are due and are tendered to Mr. W. G. Bannister, the courteous sacristan and verger—who knows more about the Abbey than anyone else—for out-of-the-way information willingly given and the views taken by himself, some of them specially for this article; and to Mr. Alfred Vine, the organist, for help in various ways.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

Attention is called to an unusual but interesting competition, for which a prize of fifty guineas has been generously offered by Mrs. Ada Lewis, the composition of a Pianoforte Quintet. Full particulars of this welcome stimulus to British-created chamber music will be found in our advertisement columns. We may also take this opportunity of reminding those who intend to enter for THE MUSICAL TIMES composition prizes—of which the conditions are set forth on page 153—that the time limit for sending in manuscripts will expire on the 31st inst. In answer to some inquiries on the subject, we desire to say that the unsuccessful manuscripts will be returned upon application.

PROGRAMME MUSIC.

BY PROFESSOR NIECKS.

The notions about programme music display an amazing diversity. They are of all sorts, among which, however, the clear and right are much less common than the vague and wrong. One may say without being guilty of exaggeration that a really adequate and complete notion of programme music is one of the rarest phenomena. In view of the fact that the great mass of our present-day music is programme music, this must be admitted to be a preposterous state of matters. Rightly considered, the question about programme music is no longer whether it be legitimate, but what kinds of it are so. To formulate the problem quite unmistakably we might state it thus: What are the qualities that legitimize programme music? To insist on the illegitimacy of the whole genre is taking up a position for which no tenable right and reason can be produced. The legitimacy of the genre could not be invalidated even by proving the badness of every piece of programme music that ever was written. It certainly cannot be invalidated by the fact, which no reasonable person will dispute, that an enormous amount of bad music in the nature, or supposed nature, of programme music has been written. In fact, in animadversions on programme music, the attack is always on a bugbear of the combatants' own creation—not on what the thing really is, but on what it is not, or, at least, need not be.

That programme music and imitative music are synonymous is one of the most inveterate and most frequently encountered misunderstandings. Nothing, however, could be farther off the truth. As Berlioz, one of the greatest composers of programme music, puts it, the imitation of the tones and noises of nature may be a means, but almost never an object; should be considered a complement to the musical idea, not the musical idea itself. Of course, composers have not always acted in accordance with this wise view. Many pieces have been written with the object of imitating the tones and noises of nature—the growling and crashing of thunder, the roaring and swishing of the sea, the whistling of the wind, the rustling of the leaves, the purling of the brook, the rushing of the river, the splashing of the fountain, the chirping and warbling of the birds, the cooing of the dove, the barking of the dog, the clatter of the trotting and galloping horse, and so on. And pieces have been written not only with the object of imitating the tones and noises of nature, but also the tones and noises made by the machines invented by man. Favourite imitations of this kind are, for instance, the mill wheel and the spinning wheel, and especially that at all times cherished one of the din and turmoil of battle. But where such imitation is the main object, the outcome, if music at all, is music of a low order. It is of value only when it is subordinate to a nobler object, subservient to a higher purpose. In fact, such imitation is a good servant, but a bad master.

Another misunderstanding is the belief that the excellence of the imitation is proportionate to its accuracy; that the greater the likeness to the real thing, the better is the musician's imitation. Again nothing could be farther off the truth. Suggestiveness is all that is required. And while we can do very well without accuracy of imitation, we cannot do at all without musical beauty, which, however, has to be sacrificed if accuracy of imitation is the supreme aim. Now such a sacrifice is impossible so long as we regard music as an art. To the artist it must be an unshakable axiom that what is not good music is not good programme music.

Yet another misunderstanding has to be mentioned—namely, that programme music is intended to express all that is in the programme. A moment's reflection makes us see the absurdity of the notion. If this were really the intention, the programme would be a ridiculous superfluity, an idle redundancy. Why the programme, if the music can express all the programme contains? In fact, the very reverse is the case. The raison d'être of the programme consists in its ability to supply what the music lacks, in its ability to express what music cannot express, or for the nonce will not express.

But, it is asked, why does music not confine herself to the sphere peculiarly her own, where she is free, all-powerful, and independent? Why should she become a servant if she can be mistress? These questions are best met by other questions. Why do you not blame the pictorial artists who illustrate legendary, historical, and imaginative subjects, and the works of other arts, and thus overstep the boundaries of their own peculiar spheres? Why do you approve the composers who set to music songs, and opera and cantata libretti, and thereby reduce their mistress to the status of a servant? We hear it also stated that the composer produces the best he himself and his art is capable of when he expresses his own subjectivity, his own experiences, thoughts, and feelings. This no doubt is true, generally speaking. But does this carry with it a condemnation of every other way of exercising the artistic faculty? If it does, the condemnation includes not only programme music, but also all vocal music, especially dramatic music. However, to be consistent, we must then say that the lyrical poet is the only true and genuine poet, and the dramatic poet a mere sham, a worthless pretender. Nobody would be foolish enough, I think, to maintain this. Why, then, maintain it in connection with music? The question both in literature and music is whether the artist has the dramatic sense, whether he can put himself in the place of the dramatis personæ. Have not Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Rossini, Verdi, Méhul, Auber, Boieldieu, Gounod, Berlioz, Wagner, and others done so without degrading the art and themselves? Could they have done better? Nay, could they have done as well without the words, without, as we may say, the programme? Indeed, there are artists so constituted that they can do their best only when stimulated from without. Of such Löwe, the great ballad composer, is a striking example, Gluck a more famous and equally striking example, and Richard Wagner the most illustrious and the most striking of all.

Thus far I have dealt in negatives; now it is time to think of positives. What, then, is programme music, and in what respects does it differ from the music that is not programme music and has been called absolute music? The question could be easily answered if we could say that absolute music was a purely formal play with sounds without any meaning and unconnected with conscious ideas and feelings, and that programme music was a combination of sounds for the purpose of expressing definite ideas and feelings. Such a distinction, however, does not exist. Neither does the absence of a programme prove the meaninglessness of the music, nor the presence of a programme the nature and amount of the meaning, or indeed any meaning at all. No doubt there is music that is no more than a purely formal play with sounds, but such music is to be found not only among supposed absolute music, but also among pretended programme music. On the other hand meaning is embodied, and ideas and feelings are expressed, not only in programme music but also in music without a programme. Can anyone be so dull as not to perceive that, for instance, Beethoven in his grand instrumental compositions expresses something, expresses something definite, not something necessarily definable by words, but something fully apprehensible by our psychic faculties? In fact, there is an immense deal of apparent absolute music that is in reality undeclared programme music, and an immense deal of declared programme music that is in reality absolute music pure and simple. How much of vocal and ballet music, and of instrumental music with titles and longer verbal expositions is meaningless formal play with sounds! That I class vocal music with programme music ought not to surprise anyone, for the words in vocal music form for the serious musician the strictest and most dictatorial of programmes. Careful study of the subject makes it unmistakably evident that it is impossible to draw a line between what is called absolute and programme music. Suppose we make consciousness and clearness the test. Where do they begin, and unconsciousness and vagueness end? As, however, we find all degrees of clearness and vagueness both in absolute and programme music, the criterion does not serve.

My way of arriving at a distinct and adequate notion of programme music is, as the sequel will show, something else than the formulation or adoption of a definition. The problem is too big and too complex to be encompassed and unravelled by a concise formula. A definition, however, makes a good starting point.

The popular conception of programme music is instrumental music the subject of which is set forth by a written or printed verbal programme. Such a definition, however, defines only a part of the whole genus. A large mass of other instrumental music has an equally good claim to be classed with programme music—namely, instrumental music that accompanies the spoken word in melodrama, the pantomimic performances in ballets, operas, and plays, and the exhibition of pictures and tableaux vivants. Again, although as a rule we understand by programme music purely instrumental compositions, long or short, but self-contained, a great deal of the preludes, interludes, postludes, and instrumental accompaniments of vocal compositions is of the nature of programme music, the programme being indicated by the preceding, following, and accompanying words. Nay, we may even go so far as to say that pure vocal music, too, if expressive, belongs to the category of programme music. In short, a programme may be any kind of setting forth of the subject, not merely a separate verbal one; and music, whether standing alone or not, is essentially programme music whenever it leaves the domain of the purely formal play with sounds, or of the formal play with sounds merely tinged by an unconscious reflection of vague moods, emotions, and impressions.

But programme music as usually understood is, as I have already said, pure instrumental music with a written or printed verbal programme. This programme may be expressed by a few words, or even by a single one, as well as by a longer exposition. In the former case we get not the subject itself, but a reference to it, which may be a reference to history, to a poem, play, novel, or legendary tale, to a scene in nature, to a personal experience, &c., &c. And whether the programme be short or long, it may either tell us exactly what the composer illustrates, or leave us to find out what part of the subject he has chosen for illustration. On seeing on the title-page of a musical composition the name 'Faust' or 'Hamlet,' it would be unreasonable to conclude that the musician had reproduced in his work the whole content of Goethe's or Shakespeare's masterpiece.

Programme music, as we have seen, has not for its object the imitation of the sounds of nature, and of animals and machines; in other words, it is not tone-painting in the narrow and most common sense of the word. On the other hand, programme music is tone-painting in the wider and truer sense of the word, in the sense that comprises both soul and body painting. In short, programme music depicts not only the audible and the visible outer world, but also the inner world—that is, the moods, emotions, and thoughts of the painter and of others. Indeed, while programme music, the aim of which is solely or chiefly the imitation of things audible and visible, belongs to the lowest class of music, that which confines itself to, or occupies itself chiefly with, the expression of mental impressions, moods, and volitions belongs to the very highest class. In good programme music the imitation of the outward must be subordinate to the expression of the inward. In due subordination, however, the imitation of the outward can do excellent service, being capable of furnishing the outward associations of the inward facts, and thus adding to the clearness and vividness of the representation. Although, the first condition of good programme music is its being good music without the programme, nevertheless, owing to the explanatory programme, things are possible in programme music both in regard to matter and form which in absolute music would be inadmissible. Creative power presupposed, success in this kind of composition depends on the choice of the programme and the use made of it. The composer who wishes to succeed has to choose a really musical programme, and to extract from it the really musical part of the contents.

A CHELTENHAM MUSIC-MAKING.

BY ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Tennyson thus describes Cheltenham in a letter written to his friend Rawnsley in the year 1845:— 'Here is a handsome town of thirty-five thousand inhabitants, a polka-parson-worshipping place, of which the Rev. Francis Close is Pope, besides pumps and pumphooms, chalybeates, quadrilles (as you have taken to them again) and one of the prettiest countries in Great Britain.' Prior to his marriage in 1850, the poet

King George III. derived benefit from drinking the waters, that the place became fashionable. Now the town has become celebrated as an educational centre,—the Ladies' College alone has nearly 1,000 pupils—and as a place where retired people may spend the eventide of their lives peacefully and pleasantly.

But it is the music of Cheltenham with which we have to do. We may begin by mentioning a few lived with his mother and sisters at Cheltenham. There he probably wrote a part of 'In Memoriam' and perchance the songs in 'The Princess,' including 'Sweet and low.' This 'handsome town of 35,000 inhabitants' can now boast of 50,000. It is nearly two hundred years since a saline spring was discovered in what was then the mere village of Cheltenham; but it was not until the year 1788, when names associated therewith. That of John Bishop is naturally the first to be called to mind; John Barnett, of 'Mountain Sylph' fame, lived and died there; Mrs. Lloyd, the mother of Mr. Edward Lloyd, was a former teacher of the pianoforte at the Ladies' College; and the father of Madame Frickenhaus, Mr. W. E. Evans, formerly a professor of music, an organ-builder and excellent violinist, who became known in connection with the manufacture of free-reed instruments. Mr. Evans had as an assistant and fellow inventor one Henry Willis, who lived in Cheltenham for three years in the early forties. Miss Agnes Nicholls is a native of this 'garden town,' and no account of the musical activities of the place would be complete without full acknowledgment of the work done by Mr. J. A. Matthews in popularizing music, more especially oratorio, during his residence there of nearly thirty years.

In former days Cheltenham was a good place of call for concert-parties on tour. In 1818 Sir George Smart favoured the town with his presence. From a copy of old Smart's programme now before us we find that the inside coach fare (single journey) from Cheltenham to London was two guineas, plus 4s. 6d. extra for luggage and exclusive of tips. Poor Mr. Goss (the uncle of Sir John) paid one guinea for an outside seat in the depth of winter! We may pass on to some recorded musical doings in the thirties. In 1834 the local orchestra gave a performance, when—

The overtures to Zampa and William Tell, the stars of the programme, were never better performed, especially in the softer passages, which were all harmony.

and furthermore we are told that—

Signor Morelli performed a Rondo on the pianoforte with one finger only of the right hand, with surprising agility.

Bochsa, the mountebank, directed a performance of Czerny's celebrated Concertstück, played by sixteen performers on eight pianofortes. Not to be outdone by Bochsa, Mori, three months later, presented the work with twenty performers—sixteen on eight pianofortes and four on harps! Again, we learn that a concert—was opened by Weber's magnificent overture to Freischütz, which was executed in fine style, the wind instruments having been exchanged for stringed ones, in order to give more complete effect to the orchestra.

The law of libel could not have been so threatening then as now, as The Looker-on—an excellent local newspaper still in existence—reported that—

Mr. D'Arcis played a flute fantasia on the familiar air 'Cherry Ripe' after his own peculiar fashion, which, as most of our readers well know, is very peculiar.

A Philharmonic Society existed in Cheltenham so long ago as 1838. At the first concert in that year Mozart's C major ('Jupiter') Symphony and Beethoven's in the same key were performed under the direction of a resident musician named Uglow. Other conductors have been Mr. Evans (already referred to), Mr. Tennant, Mr. Richard Blagrove, Mr. Frederick Helmore, Mr. Adolph von Holst, Mr. T. Riseley, and the late Dr. A. E. Dyer, the highly-esteemed organist of Cheltenham College. In 1858, as the credit balance at the end of the season stood at £3 10s., it was explained that the professional orchestra had cost for one concert the sum of £65, whereupon the committee decided that only a pianoforte and harmonium should in future be used for all accompaniments!

The present Cheltenham Philharmonic Society was started in 1893, with Mr. C. J. Phillips, professor of singing at the Ladies' College, as conductor. The aim of the Society is to produce choral and orchestral works seldom or never heard in the district. Towards the attainment of this end the following works have been performed during the ten years of the Society's existence:—

Choral: Spectre's Bride, Swan and Skylark, Paradise and the Peri (Schumann), Faust (Gounod), King Olaf, Hymn of Praise, Song of Miriam, Martyr of Antioch, Rheinberger's Christophorus (for the first time in England), Magnificat (Bach), Requiem (Mozart's and Verdi's), Walpurgis Night, Acis and Galatea, Liszt's 13th Psalm, Ruins of Athens, &c.

Symphonies: Nos. 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8 (Beethoven), G minor (Mozart), B minor (Schubert), Pathetic (Tchaikovsky), Fantastic, and Harold in Italy (Berlioz).

Overtures, &c.: William Tell, 1812, Tannhäuser, Meistersinger, Carnival Romaine, Flying Dutchman, Britannia, Egmont, Hebrides, Der Freischütz, Faust Ballet Music (Gounod), Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, Midsummer Night's Dream, Gioconda, &c.

Madrigals, Part-songs, &c.

The above list speaks for itself, but attention may be drawn to the catholicity of taste which it displays; moreover, does it not bear abundant testimony to the growing appreciation of music of the highest class?

Cheltenham music has hitherto suffered from the lack of a suitable building in which to give orchestral and choral concerts on a large scale. This deficiency has now been supplied by the erection of the new and handsome Town Hall (of which we give an interior view), built at a cost of £45,000, and opened on December 5 last. The honour of giving the first concert in this palatial municipal building fell to the lot of the Philharmonic Society, and the musical house-warming (postponed from 1903, the Berlioz centenary year) took place on January 28 of the present year, when the following programme was performed:—

PART I.

Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast		Coleridge-Taylor.
Overture		'A Roman Carnival'
Choral Songs	From 'The Bavarian Highlands'	Berlioz.
	(1. Aspiration. 2. The Marksman.)	Elgar.

There is no need to offer a detailed criticism on the manner in which this interesting programme was carried out. If the orchestral selections proved more satisfactory than the choral numbers, the unfortunate position in which the architect has placed the chorus is largely, if not wholly, the cause. The accompanying illustration will show that the singers are practically shut off from the main building by being placed in a stage-like recess. How is it possible for the vocal tone to adequately make its escape from this boxed-up position? And how can the voices of the chorus properly balance with the orchestra, the players of which are out in the open, so to speak? It is to be hoped that this defect, as well as (on this occasion) the totally inadequate exit arrangements, will soon be remedied. But to return to the concert. Everyone worked with right good-will to secure the best results. The chorus, as might be expected with a conductor who is so efficient a voice-trainer, sang with care and intelligence, while the band (with Mr. Alfred Hobday in the solo viola part) gave a most creditable performance of Berlioz's 'Harold in Italy' Symphony, and with only one rehearsal. Mr. C. J. Phillips, the honorary conductor of the Society, conducted with marked ability and real enthusiasm, while Mr. Lewis Hann, a worthy scion of that famous musical family, faultlessly led the band.

A word of hearty congratulation is due to those responsible for this inaugural concert given by the Philharmonic Society in the new Town Hall. Finally, the whole-hearted enthusiasm of Mr. C. E. Rainger, the zealous and hard-working honorary secretary, is invaluable to the best interests of this excellent Society.

Occasional Notes.

"ORPHEUS."

Orpheus was a man of note,
Who lived so long ago
That what he played, and how he sang,
We really do not know.

'Tis said that at his voice around
The lions meekly lay;
The horse stood still, dogs hunting stayed,
The donkey ceased to bray.

He did not live in Gloucestershire,
Of that we are aware;
The county was not in the map just then,
And nobody much was there.

To tell the honest, simple truth,
It's quite upon the cards,
He never lived at all,
But was invented afterwards.

But what of that, now we are here,
An Orpheus that can sing;
An Orpheus that can whisper soft
Or make the welkin ring!

Whether he lived or died at all,
It matters not a—dime,
For the world will know there's an Orpheus now,
And no mistake this time!

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

If, as Sir Hubert Parry tells us, Orpheus did not live in Gloucestershire, he has many votaries in the cathedral city of that county. Immediately after the Gloucester Musical Festival of 1898, the conductor, Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of the Cathedral, convened a meeting at his house to consider the formation of an Orpheus Society, with the result that invitations were sent out to those likely to join such a fraternity. Although a severe test is now imposed upon those who wish to belong to the Gloucester Orpheus Society, the membership stands at the very respectable figure of seventy-four. Rehearsals are held fortnightly, and members are compelled—though we learn that they do not need compelling—to attend a certain percentage of the practisings or they will not be allowed to sing at the concerts—one per annum only—which the Society gives. No instrument of any kind is used, unless a pitch-pipe just to give the key-note comes under that designation. The fame of these Gloucester Orpheusites—if so they may be called—after two years' vigorous training at the hands of their conductor, Mr. Brewer, soon became known, as they were invited to sing at the chamber concert given during the Hereford Festival of 1900. On that occasion they won unanimous praise from so fastidious a body as the musical critics of the London Press. The Society has been highly favoured by composers such as Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Mr. C. Lee Williams, Professor Horatio Parker, who, with Mr. Brewer, have written works specially for the delectation of this capable body of singers. It is not surprising to learn that the rehearsals are a positive delight to the members, and that the earnestness and intelligence they have shown in the work of preparation is of a most gratifying nature. A true esprit de corps animates everybody concerned—singers, conductor, and secretary (Mr. A. C. Champney)—who, without fee or reward, work together for the pure love of unaccompanied vocal music. The President of the Society, Sir Hubert Parry, takes a very warm and practical interest in the operations of these Gloucester enthusiasts. For the capital concert given by them on January 27, Sir Hubert—who, by-the-way, is a neighbouring squire—wrote both the music and the words of a madrigal specially for the Society. These Orpheus-inspired verses—which we give in the preceding 'Occasional note' to this—were wedded to music as humorous as the lines themselves. Gloucester has reason to be proud of its Orpheus Society, and while we have much pleasure in calling attention to its artistic aims and its high attainments, we trust that so good an example may be followed in other cities and towns, with results equally as satisfactory to the cause of English music and the promotion of social intercourse in united song.

Similar success appears to attend the Sydney Liedertafel, a Society in Greater Britain whose existence dates from 1881, and that consists of over one hundred singing members. (A recent concert is noticed on p. 192). A correspondent writes as follows concerning the operations of the Society: 'The chorus meets for practice every Monday evening from 8 until 10. At 9 o'clock there is a brief interval, at which hour pipes are lighted for the remainder of the evening. We have our own bar for refreshments, therefore we often count a hundred in a bar! At 9.15 the rehearsal is resumed and continued till 10 p.m. The Committee meets every Monday evening at 5.15, and after an adjournment for tea, the Test Committee sits in judgment on those applicants who wish to join the Society—the "test" being of such a nature as to keep out "undesirables." Five concerts are given during the year—three with orchestra and two smoking concerts. We do good music and have ideals.' Excellent!

English as made in Germany is beautifully exemplified by the following extract purporting to be a translation from a review in the Zeitschrift der Internationalen Musikgesellschaft—:

Hans ———, whose Sextet for Strings is according to my conviction one of the best among our new chamber music works, produced in his 16 parts chorus another great work of art. Eminent in conception as well as in execution the work is of such a striking, genuine religious depth of thought and atmosphere, also of noble melody and piety of expression that it can not be recommended enough for serious study. The masterly knowledge of the composer is shown here again by his use of the technical matters. The effects of sound are most carefully divided and chosen in this a-capella work. There is no note too much or too little even in the counterpointal network which is generally based on interesting harmonies. It is a creation of crystal clearness.

This work offers a splendid study and up-to-date chorus societies may welcome it with open arms.

From the same source—a trade circular—we learn that a certain song has been 'frenziedly encored in Vienna concerts.' No doubt!

A score of Purcell's 'King Arthur' in the library of the Paris Conservatoire contains the following interesting information on its title-page:—

[Purchased at the Musical Sale of Mr. Picart an excellent Amateur as well as a good judge of sterling Music; he was an esteemed acquaintance of my dear old friend Sam Wesley who was an enthusiastic admirer of Henry Purcell, and who was himself one of the very greatest Musical Geniuses that England ever produced.]

I always associate the memory of Samuel Wesley in my imagination, with Purcell and Sebastian Bach, for his musical genius partook of the principal characteristics of both these great composers, in contrast with his own peculiarly charming style, and extraordinary power in the extempore production of fugal Counterpoint.

This is a remarkably clear and well-written Copy of the Score of Purcell's admirable Composition, and is in excellent preservation, besides being beautifully and appropriately bound in Ancient Morocco.

I have the pleasure of presenting it for preservation in the library of the Musical Antiquarian Society.

V. NOVELLO.

[M?] 1849.

This is apparently one of the two scores mentioned by Professor Edward Taylor in his preface to the edition of the work issued by the Musical Antiquarian Society in 1843, and therein thus described:—

In my own library, nearly contemporary with the time of Purcell.

From the collection of Mr. Corfe, Organist of Salisbury Cathedral: date about 1720.

It is not every cathedral organist who is so keen an antiquary as Dr. Joseph C. Bridge, of Chester. Not only is he indefatigable in the pursuit of his old-world hobbies, but he gives the good people of Chester the benefit of his antiquarian garnerings. Dr. Bridge has written a lecture on the subject of 'Horns,' for delivery in connection with the Chester and North Wales Archæological and Historic Society, of which he is an active member—Part I., delivered on the 16th ult., and Part II., to be given on the 15th inst., fully illustrated with lantern slides. The following syllabus gives some idea of the scope and interest of Dr. Bridge's informing discourses:—

PART I.

The Horn as an emblem of power and authority—Cornage or Horn tenure—Charter Horns—The Horns of Pusey, Boarstall, Hungerford, and Tutbury—The Wirral and Delamere Horns—The 'Horns of the Altar' at Carlisle—The Bruce Horn—The Horn of St. Ulphus at York Minster—The Ripon Horn.

PART II.

Hirlas or Drinking Horns—The Penrhyn Hirlas—Corpus Christi Gild Drinking Horn—The Folkmoot Horns of Faversham, Canterbury and Dover—Hunting Horns—Oliphants—The Horn as a musical instrument—Old Danish and Irish Horns—The Pastoral Pibcorn or Hornpipe—The Jewish Shofar—French Horns—Russian Horn Bands—Fairy Music—Horned Head-dress—Horned Woman of Saughall.

The first performance in Australasia of Dr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' took place in the Town Hall, Sydney, on December 21, under the careful direction of Mr. J. A. Delany, with great success.

The chorus consisted of 400 voices, the orchestra was led by Mr. Rivers Allpress, and Mr. H. Dawkins presided at the organ, while the soloists were Miss Florence Gibson, Mr. A. R. Richards, and Mr. W. Reginald Gould. The enthusiasm of the large audience who attended the concert can best be judged from the fact that the whole of the final section of the work had to be repeated. 'The Apostles' received its first hearing in America on the 9th ult., when Dr. Elgar's latest oratorio was performed by the New York Oratorio Society in Carnegie Hall, under the experienced conductorship of Mr. Frank Damrosch.

'The Waltz from Mozart to Johann Strauss, the younger,' formed the subject of the fourth Historical Concert of the Session given in the University Music Class Room, Edinburgh, on the 3rd ult. On that interesting and cheerful occasion forty members of the Scottish Orchestra, under the inspiring conductorship of Professor Niecks, discoursed these terpsichorean strains:—

A novel, yet pleasant compliment is to be paid to the 'old country' by the Transatlantic Society, an organization which 'labours for the accomplishment of a cordial good-will between the peoples of the United States and of the British Empire.' On the 19th inst. there is to be presented, at the Academy of Music in Philadelphia, the entire music performed at the Coronation of King Edward VII. and Queen Alexandra in 1902. We quote from The Church Standard, a periodical published in Philadelphia:—

There will be large choral and instrumental providing. Besides a quartet of solo voices, sixty boys and men will be furnished by the best choirs in Philadelphia; these are to represent the choir of the Abbey. A supplementary body of thirty boy choristers will take the place of the Westminster School boys who, stationed aloft, sang vociferous acclamations, 'Vivat Regina Alexandra! Vivat Rex Edwardus!' There will be also in the performance at the Academy a general chorus composed of mixed voices, several hundred in number, coming from various choirs and societies. Instrumental assistance will be furnished by the Philadelphia Orchestra, seventy-five men. Dr. W. W. Gilchrist, of national reputation, will be the conductor.

In this country the occasion will be unique—nothing just like it before or after.

The 'after' is good. May not this unique venture on the part of the Transatlantic Society be regarded as a crowning achievement?

Who has not smiled at the words of songs? Mr. Myles Birket Foster, known to his friends as a refined humorist, extracted some fun out of the subject of 'Words and Music' in the paper he read before the London Section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians on the 13th ult. Here are some of the choice specimens which Mr. Foster gave of 'doddering feebleness,' to adopt his designation of the rubbish that is sometimes set to music :—

Nature cares not whence or how,
Nature cares not why,
It is enough that thou art thou,
And I am I.

Nature cares not whence or why,
Nature asks not how,
It is enough that thou art thou,
And I am I.

From this egotistical strain, with its howy-thouyness, the lecturer turned to a more grave subject :—

There came a sound of music,
As I watched in the old churchyard,
And a voice like some angel singing,
Melted my soul, which was hard.

The moon shone forth from a dark, dark cloud
As I heard the last refrain,
I crouched by the door of that old, old church
And said, 'Will you sing that again?'

Such a 'last refrain' is not a gain, even to a melted soul 'which was hard.'

Mr. Ben Davies intends to leave England on the 12th. inst. for a concert tour in South Africa. May 'good hope' attend the popular tenor in his journeyings.

The Mendelssohn Scholarship is now vacant. Full particulars can be obtained of this important prize, primarily for composers, from the Hon. Secretary of the Committee, Mr. J. Edward Street, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey.

THE BRIDE.

The bride's procession entered at half-past twelve o'clock in the order given in the official programme which we published yesterday. The choir of St. George's Chapel led the procession from the west, singing, by special request of the Duchess of Albany, the well-known hymn (to Stann's tune) 'O God, our help in ages past.'

The above information is contained in a daily newspaper's account of the recent Royal wedding at Windsor. Who is Stann? Is he a new composer? Does Stann stand for half a composer of repute? No: this is a poser of a type that can be traced to the composing-room of a printing-office. The compositor has shown unintentional disrespect to the patron saint of Soho in decapitalizing her name; therefore Stann's stands for St. Ann's. What's (not Dr. Watts) in a name?

A constant reader, dwelling in a northern suburb, says that from his point of view, he likens the Crystal Palace to the skip of an octave, because 'it is far too far to get to it.'

This from a local Directory in a northern city, south of the Tweed :—

In this way the amateur cuts out the professional—at least, so it seems.

Church and Organ Music.

WESLEY'S 'WILDERNESS.'

Samuel Sebastian Wesley was a young man aged twenty-two when he composed his masterly anthem 'The Wilderness,' a classic of the highest order in English Church music. A full history of its composition appeared in the Biographical Sketch of Dr. Wesley in our issue of May, 1900, to which the reader is referred; therefore a brief summary of the coming into existence of the anthem may now suffice.

Wesley was appointed organist of Hereford Cathedral in the summer of 1832 at the age of twenty-two. The cathedral organ, then being rebuilt, was re-opened on November 6, for which occasion he composed 'The Wilderness.' He then sent in the anthem for the Gresham Prize—'a gold medal value five guineas for the best original composition in sacred vocal music'—given by Miss Maria Hackett, but it failed to secure the award. One of the judges, R. J. S. Stevens, Gresham Professor of Music, said: 'It is a clever thing, but not cathedral music!' 'Fiat justitia' was the motto selected by old Sam Wesley for his son's anthem, but ———. Soon after Wesley arrived at Hereford his Dean was made a Canon of Windsor, 'which'—wrote Wesley to his mother—'adds about 14 hundred a year to his income!! I wish I was a Dean!' There is extant the draft of a letter penned by Wesley, which reads thus :—

Hereford, March 9, 1833.

Dear Sir,

I send you the anthem I spoke of. Will you print it?

The Dean offers to have it performed at Windsor before the Queen, and to take me to accompany it, if I choose to go, which would be expensive. I should dedicate it to the Dean—he offered to permit me to present it to Her Majesty, but I prefer his name—if you think it worth printing. I will send you the title-page. Let me have a letter if you print. If you do not, oblige me by sending the thing to No. 8, King's Row, Pentonville, directed to me.

Believe me, truly yours,

Chapter Garden,

S. S. WESLEY.

Cathedral, Hereford.

The above characteristic letter, evidently intended to be sent to a music publisher whose name is not given, shows that Wesley wished to print 'the thing'—as he called his 'Wilderness'; but seven years elapsed before this consummation was realized.

So far an epitome of its history. We may now turn to the consideration of some of the afterthoughts of its composer whereby he made it a gem of the first water. For the purposes of comparison we have had access to the following sources of reference :—

(i.) An autograph score, dated at the end, '1834,' and contained in an oblong 'organ book of anthems' (MS.) at Hereford Cathedral. This has been placed at our disposal by kind permission of the Dean of Hereford, through the friendly offices of Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist of Hereford Cathedral.

(ii.) The earliest printed version (circa 1840) entitled 'The Wilderness and the solitary place. The 35th chapter of Isaiah, adapted to music by Samuel S. Wesley. Price [blank].' No publisher's name. A copy of this edition—containing two annotations in Wesley's own hand and evidently used by him to play from at Leeds Parish Church between 1842 and 1849—has been kindly lent us by Mr. Henry C. Embleton, of Leeds.

This Leeds copy is headed 'Anthem 2,' and has two separate paginations—1 to 27, and 47 to 73.

It therefore probably forms one of the 'Six Anthems' advertised in the Musical World of October 15, 1840, as about to be issued by subscription. Much of the organ part of this, the first printed edition, is written on two staves; the sections which blossom out into three staves are the bass solo, the quartet beginning 'For in the wilderness,' and the last seventeen bars of 'And the ransom'd of the Lord'; the final quartet is written on two staves.

(iii.) The volume of Twelve Anthems (of which 'The Wilderness' is No. 5), issued by subscription in 1853, and dedicated to the Dean of Winchester (Dr. Garnier). Vocal-parts of these Twelve Anthems were also issued in a lithographed form, of which a set is, through the kindness of Mr. Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, now before us. The title-pages of these vocal-parts state: 'Published for the author, Winchester, of whom copies may be had.' Wesley then lived at Kingsgate Street, Winchester. This lithographed publication bears no date, and whether it was issued before or after the score edition of the Twelve Anthems (1853) is at present uncertain.

(iv.) A proof copy of a freshly engraved edition, bearing the postmark 'Gloster, May 14, 71,' and addressed to a proof reader. This copy, containing some amusing comments in Wesley's own hand, is in the possession of the present writer.

(v.) An orchestral score of the anthem, written in a copyist's hand. It bears the Exeter post-mark of March 25, 1859, and is addressed to Dr. S. S. Wesley, Winchester. This copy is now in the possession of Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral, who has been good enough to place it at our disposal. 'The Wilderness' was orchestrated by the composer for performance at the Birmingham Musical Festival of 1852, and conducted by him on that occasion.

To set forth all the variants found by collating the above-mentioned copies of the work would exhaust our space if not the patience of our readers; therefore only the most striking changes will be noted.

No metronomic indications appear in the original autograph, nor in the Leeds printed copy, nor, as regards the first movement, in the 1853 edition. The speed-rates subsequently inserted by Wesley (or by someone else) have, by-the-way, undergone some changes. For instance, the opening section has been slowed down from crotchet 72 to 60; the bass solo from 88 to 76; 'For in the wilderness' section from minim 63 to 54; and the final quartet from crotchet 56 to 48. These are all slower speeds; on the other hand the Allegro section ('And the ransom'd of the Lord') has been increased from minim 84 to 96. These speed-changes show the varying moods of the composer, who probably did not very strictly adhere to any of these, or any other metronomic indications.

The changes begin very early. In the sixth (complete) bar, the original MS. and the Leeds copy have a turn over the G sharp in the bass part; probably some bass singer over-embellished this ornament and Wesley eliminated the turn. In the following bar the upper E (in the bass solo) is absent; a rest takes its place. At this point the accompaniment seems to have given the composer some trouble; there are two variants at bars 6 and 7, and in the Leeds copy the left-hand part of the trio phrase ('And the desert shall rejoice') is assigned to 'Diaps. Gt. Org.' The appoggiaturas in bar 11 are absent, and at the last beat of the bar the bass note is A sharp only.

The semibreve B in the organ part of bar 11 is absent, the soprano voice being without accompaniment after the first beat. Passing over some minor changes, we come to the following passage as originally written:—

and rejoice with joy and singing, re-joice with joy and singing.

Counting from the end of this (first) movement, in bar 5 the third soprano note is the low, not the upper E, and the vocal cadence has no suspension, the penultimate note in the alto part being a semibreve D. The first chord of the little concluding symphony appeared as a $\sharp G$ on G sharp, the melody and bass remaining as it is now, and the D being sharpened at the fourth beat of the bar.

The accompaniment to the bass solo has undergone so many changes that it would be impossible to mention them all unless the entire movement, as Wesley at first wrote it, were to be printed in full. Although these alterations might come under the head of 'mere details,' such touchings-up are important factors in every art creation, and therefore by no means to be depreciated. As an example of Wesley's afterthoughts we give the first six bars of the bass solo (headed by him 'SOLO BASS. A minor') as they appear in his autograph score of 1834:—

SOLO BASS. A minor.

G. O. Diapasons.

Swell Reeds.

Pedals G. O. and double pipes.

(stac.)

The accompaniment octave passage beginning in bar 12 (i.e., of the bass solo) is assigned to the swell manual, and is at first written in the tenor clef; four bars later this left-hand part is written in the alto clef; then the treble clef is employed for a bar, and the alto clef resumed! The shakes, which give so much zest to this vigorous movement, were afterthoughts. The voice part, as well as the accompaniment, shows traces of Wesley's improving hand—in fact his minute alterations are thoroughly Mendelssohnian in character and effect. For example, bars 19-21, in which we miss the forceful skip to C on the word 'and,' were originally thus:—

19 20 21

Be - hold . . . your God; . . . He will come and save you.

In the autograph score this bass solo movement is one bar longer than it is in the published version—54 bars instead of 53. The additional bar (indicated by * in the subjoined example) appears in the final symphony of the solo, which, as a further instance of Wesley's refining process, we give in full :—

45 46 47 48

Gt. will come and save you.

Further consideration of this interesting comparison must be deferred till next month.

THE NEW PRECENTOR OF TRURO CATHEDRAL.

The Rev. Edward Charles Corfe has been appointed Precentor and Canon Residentiary of Truro Cathedral, in succession to the late Canon Donaldson. The new Precentor not only bears a well-known name in English Church music, but he inherits long and distinguished traditions of cathedral life in connection therewith. At the close of the 17th century members of the Corfe family were lay clerks in the choir of Winchester Cathedral. Mr. Corfe's great-grandfather, Joseph Corfe (1740-1820),—still known by his Service in B flat—was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal and organist of Salisbury. In the latter office he was succeeded by his son, Arthur Thomas Corfe, once a chorister at Westminster Abbey. A younger son of the foregoing, Charles William Corfe, Precentor Corfe's father, was from 1846 to 1882 organist of Christ Church, Oxford, and from 1860 Choragus to the University, while the Precentor's uncle, John Davis Corfe, was for fifty-one years organist of Bristol Cathedral (1825-1876). Considering this long line of cathedralism, so to speak, it is not surprising to learn that the new Precentor is a skilled musician and chanter; he is also an eloquent preacher and a good organizer, and is much respected and trusted by all who know him. Good days, as in the past, would therefore seem to be in store for the music of Truro Cathedral.

Mr. Joseph Walker, a native of Huddersfield, and for forty-three years (1858-1901) an alto lay-clerk at Durham Cathedral, died at Durham on the 2nd ult. at the age of seventy-five.

HENRY LISTER PARRATT.

The death of Mr. HENRY LISTER PARRATT, organist of Huddersfield Parish Church, which, we regret to record, took place on the 15th ult., at Huddersfield, in his seventieth year, has removed a notable Yorkshire organist and a member of a well-known musical family. Born at Huddersfield on September 17, 1834, he received his first instruction in music from his father, Thomas Parratt, a very able and much-respected musician, who held the organistship of Huddersfield Parish Church for nearly fifty years. There were no water, gas, or electric engines for blowing organs in those days, and Henry and his now distinguished brother Walter (Sir Walter Parratt) used as boys to blow for each other in their frequent practisings. Did they enjoy their music-makings any the less on that account? Hard work was their lot, but it gave them that grit which goes to the making of strong and well-equipped men.

Henry Parratt was boy-organist at Armitage Bridge Church. He afterwards came to London, studying the organ and theory under Dr. E. J. Hopkins, and holding the organistship of Christ Church, Hampstead, from 1854 to 1862. For a few months he held a similar post at St. Paul's Church, Huddersfield, in succession to his brother Walter, who had become private organist to the Earl of Dudley at Witley Court. On the death of his father, March 27, 1862, Henry was appointed organist of Huddersfield Parish Church, a post he has worthily held, maintaining all the best traditions of legitimate organ playing, for very nearly forty-two years. Father and son therefore held the Huddersfield appointment for the long period of ninety-one years; the father played the service on fifty Christmas Days in succession, and Henry, the son, on forty out of the forty-one Christmas Days during his period of office, he having missed only one, that of 1902, owing to illness.

Mr. Henry Parratt was a true artist in all his interpretations, his playing being conscientious, chaste and devotional in the highest degree. He not only possessed high ideals, but steadfastly endeavoured to live up to them, and in so doing he would never countenance anything that might in any degree tarnish the purity of the service-music entrusted to his reverent hands. It has been truly said that his 'assiduity, skill, and artistic method greatly helped to make the musical services at Huddersfield Parish Church a model of devotional beauty in prayer and praise.' Several of his pupils have become distinguished—e.g., Dr. A. L. Peace, of Liverpool, Mr. Thomas Berry, of Glasgow, Mr. J. H. Pearson, of Brighouse, and Mr. J. E. Ibeson, organist to the Huddersfield Choral Society. A man of an exceedingly retiring nature, and one of the gentlest of souls, Henry Parratt lived for his art, and lives still in the respect of his fellow men, for he regarded life's duty as a sacred trust committed to his keeping—a trust which throughout the whole of his career he discharged in a faithful and conscientious spirit worthy of all emulation. The memory of the just is blessed.

A NEW LENTEN CANTATA.

The last days of the Saviour's life on earth have furnished a source of inspiration to composers not a few. The subject, from its very nature, is one that should be approached with a full sense of responsibility, and in a devotional spirit. It is evidently in this mental attitude that Mr. J. H. Maunder has composed his sacred cantata, 'Olivet to Calvary,' which Messrs. Novello have recently issued. The words have been written and arranged by Mr. Shapcott Wensley, an experienced librettist, who, in addition to his own verses, has very properly introduced appropriate scriptural texts and two hymns that are familiar in all the churches. The work is laid out thus: 'On the way to, and before, Jerusalem'; 'In the Temple'; 'The Mount of Olives,' followed by Charlotte Elliott's penitential hymn, 'Just as I am, without one plea,' which is to be sung by the congregation and choir. Part 2 opens with a section entitled 'A new commandment'; to this succeeds 'Gethsemane,' 'Betrayed and forsaken,' 'Before Pilate,' and 'Calvary,' the whole concluding with Toplady's well-known lines, 'Rock of Ages, cleft for me.'

The music is assigned to two solo voices (tenor and baritone) and chorus, and is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated; and although his strains are distinctly vocal and free from interpretative difficulty, they never degenerate into a mere striving after effect through inartistic methods. There is no veneer about the music, it is true to itself and its composer's ideals of devotional simplicity. The choruses are for the most part written in solid four-part harmony, and the organ accompaniment, as might be expected from so experienced a player as Mr. Maunder, is well within the capacities of most organists. The composer has wisely given as an alternative Redhead's well-known tune to 'Rock of Ages,' not that his own setting is by any means to be despised, but a congregation enjoy singing a melody with which they are perfectly familiar. In the new tune composed to 'Just as I am,' Mr. Maunder has introduced a refrain to each verse by the repetition of the words 'Just as I am, I come,' in which the treatment of the tenor part adds to its effectiveness. The cantata is one that may be welcomed not only for its appropriateness at this season of the Church's year, but upon its own merits.

THE ORGAN IN ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

A scheme has been set on foot for the thorough rebuilding of the organ in Rochester Cathedral. An estimate, prepared by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, shows that the reconstruction of the instrument will involve an expenditure of about £1,800. Towards this amount a generous benefactor, Mr. Thomas H. Foord, has promised to give 500 guineas on condition that the sum of £1,000 is raised by public subscription. As promises to the extent of some £620 have already been received, there should be no difficulty in securing the balance of £650 in order to carry out a proposal that is so necessary to the proper interpretation of the service-music in Rochester Cathedral. Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Hon. Treasurer of the Fund, the Rev. A. J. Pearman, The Precinct, Rochester.

THE ORGANISTSHIP OF DONCASTER PARISH CHURCH.

Mr. Wilfrid E. Sanderson, organist of St. James's Church, West Hampstead, has been appointed organist of Doncaster Parish Church, vacant by the resignation of Mr. R. M. Rogers. As Mr. Rogers succeeded to the post on the death of his father, the celebrated Mr. Jeremiah Rogers, in 1879, the Doncaster organistship has been held by father and son for the long period of sixty-nine years. Jeremiah Rogers—'Jerry Rogers' as Dr. Hopkins used to speak of him—was the last organist of Doncaster Parish Church to hold his appointment direct from the Corporation of Doncaster; in an obituary notice of him he is referred to as 'a servant of the Corporation.' It must not be forgotten that Dr. Edward Miller, the composer of the tune 'Rockingham,' was a former organist of Doncaster Church, and that Schulze erected in 1862 a magnificent five-manual organ in the church. In entering upon the duties of this important appointment, Mr. Sanderson not only goes to a noble instrument, but to interesting traditions, and there is little doubt that he will rise to the great opportunities of his office at Doncaster Parish Church.

A CATHEDRAL CHOIR CONCERT.

Two very enjoyable choral concerts were given by the Bangor Cathedral Choir in the Penrhyn Hall, Bangor, on the afternoon and evening of the 11th ult. The madrigals and part-songs performed on this occasion ranged from John Wilbye to Hubert Parry, and thus covered a period of three hundred years of British vocal music. The singing of the Bangor choir at these concerts is described as 'pure, refined, and restrained,' the result of most painstaking preparation on the part of all concerned; moreover, the financial result vied with the artistic attainment in a highly satisfactory manner. The concert was a great success, and Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, his choristers, and lay-clerks are to be congratulated upon the results of their labours. A pleasant feature of one of the concerts was the hearty reception given by the conductor and all the performers to Dr. Roland Rogers, the former organist of Bangor Cathedral, on his entrance into the hall at one of these pleasant music-makings.

The new three-manual organ built by Messrs. Henry Willis and Sons for the King's Weigh House Church, was opened by Dr. A. L. Peace on the 12th ult. The following is a specification of the instrument:—

Mr. Wm. H. Grattan Flood, of Enniscorthy, writes in reference to the hymn tune, 'Howard':—

'In such a recent book as "The Music of the Church Hymnary," by Messrs. Cowan and Love,—a really excellent little volume of its class—the statement is made that the tune known as "Howard" was published anonymously in the Edinburgh Psalm Book of 1825, but that "in books published in 1849 and in 1854 it is ascribed to Sir John Stevenson." A reference to Major Crawford's notes makes it certain that the tune was composed by Miss Elizabeth Howard, of Dublin, who, in 1809, married William Cuthbert, also of Dublin. My own notes confirm this. Miss Howard composed the tune in 1807, the very first year of her appointment as organist of the Bethesda Chapel, Dublin, and it was called after herself. It was not until 1824 that her name appeared as the composer, and in 1841 a harmonized version of it was published by Bussell, with the composer's name "Mrs. Cuthbert." Her name (Mrs. Cuthbert) also appears as the composer in 1843, in Weyman's "Melodia Sacra." Mrs. Cuthbert died at her residence, 9, Blessington Street, Dublin, on June 17, 1857.

At the Dedication Festival Service held in St. Paul's Cathedral on St. Paul's Day, a selection from Mendelssohn's oratorio 'St. Paul' was sung, with full orchestral accompaniment, under the experienced direction of Sir George Martin.

Bach's 'Passion Music' (St. John) is being performed at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on Friday evenings during Lent, at 8 p.m. The great Cantor's solemn music will be sung to the accompaniment of full orchestra and organ under the reverent direction of Mr. E. H. Thorne.

Mr. John S. Bumpus has compiled an exhaustive history of 'The Choristers' School of St. Paul's Cathedral' in a series of articles he recently contributed to Musical News. We hope that Mr. Bumpus will be induced to reprint the results of his patient and interesting researches in the form of a pamphlet.

Mr. H. London Pope, organist of St. George-the-Martyr, Southwark, writes:—"I notice in the reports of Organ Recitals in your January number that Mr. Walter Fitton claims to have given the first performance in England of Guilman's Sonata No. 7, in F minor (Op. 89). I beg to state that the first three movements of that Sonata were played by me at St. George-the-Martyr, Southwark, on June 14th of last year."

Mr. Andrew Ashcroft, who died on January 28, aged seventy-three, was an amateur musician who had great influence in the early days of the Tonic Sol-fa movement, and whose counsel was constantly sought in this connection. He was a sturdy admirer of Bach's choral music at a time when the great composer's compositions were little known in this country.

Mr. Emanuel Abraham Aguilar, a well-known London musician, died on the 18th ult. aged seventy-nine.

BRITISH FOLK-SONG.

The first two of Mr. Fuller Maitland's lectures on British Folk-Song, delivered at the Royal Institution on January 16 and 23, were noticed in the February issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. At the third and final lecture given on January 30, Mr. Maitland discoursed rather fully on the characteristics of modal tunes as distinguished from tunes governed by the idiom of modern major and minor scales. In the former we find vague tonality and in the latter unconscious references to a key note, a feeling for definite tonality associated with a differentiation of the effect of the various degrees of the scale in relation to the key note—a point which it is one of the chief merits of the tonic sol-fa system to bring out. Thus the leading note suggests the tonic, and the third of the scale (major) has a beautiful but quickly cloying effect. The well-known melody 'Once I loved a maiden fair' was performed to illustrate a fair use of the effect of the mediant. Its excessive use was to be found in many of the melodies of Donizetti and Bellini. The style of the latter school was amusingly caricatured by Mr. Maitland playing a 'melody' entirely made up of rhythmic repetitions of the mediant with varied harmonies. In contrast to all this, a song with a strong modal character, 'Little Sir William' ('Hugh of Lincoln' in Chaucer's Prioress Tale) was sung. Further characteristics of modern tunes were the chordal basis of their construction ('Good morning, Gossip Joan' was sung as an example), and repetitions of phrases exactly as they first occurred and in various parts of the scale (as in 'God save the King'). Such repetitions are not found in songs composed prior to the 17th century. In fact, if all the distinctions described are grasped there is no difficulty in deciding whether a tune was composed before or after the year 1600—that most important date in this connection. The date of 1468 had been confidently assigned to 'Men of Harlech,' but, Mr. Maitland said, 'though he did not like to think that anything which appeared in print could be untrue,' he was convinced from internal evidences that the song must have been composed at a much later date. The old words known as 'The Sprig of Thyme,' or 'The Seeds of Love,' was an example of the use of one set of words for many tunes. Thirteen settings of these words were sung by Mr. J. C. McInnes, a singer whose exceptional aptitude in performing numerous illustrations throughout the course of lectures was marked and much appreciated. Some of the tunes were modal, some pentatonic. A song with extraordinary and amusing words, 'The undaunted Female,' was also performed as an illustration of the long narrative songs formerly so popular.

Mr. Maitland closed his remarks by some references to the collecting of folk-songs. It was an occupation, not to say a sport, of the greatest fascination. The custom of singing these old songs was almost extinct. Country people were shy of singing for fear of the derision of their children, 'fresh from singing insipid part-songs in the schools.' So far, prizes offered in musical competitions for the best unpublished folk-songs had not produced anything remarkable. The Folk-Song Society had published four volumes, and a fifth was in preparation. It should be remembered that this Society never printed a tune that had been published before unless some important variant was discovered. The work done by M. Bourgault-Ducoudray, Mr. Petrie, Miss Broadwood, Miss Mason, Mr. Cecil Sharp and others was an example of the right method of dealing with these songs. They were taken down exactly as they were sung. Many collectors fall victims to the desire to make clever arrangements or venture to alter the tunes to make them sound pretty. Brahms's arrangements of German folk-songs were models, but it would be absurd to say that old tunes should not be introduced in art works with modern harmonies. Both Sir Charles Stanford and Sir Alexander Mackenzie had so used old songs with conspicuous success.

Miss Florence Bullard besides Mr. McInnes assisted by singing illustrations.

In the notice of Mr. Maitland's previous lectures it was said that the pentatonic scale as given might conceivably belong, more or less definitely, to modes of the keys of G flat, C flat, or D flat. But Mr. Maitland did not state that the series belonged in any way to the key of C flat: that was our rough illustration. What Mr. Maitland did say was that any of the five notes might be taken as the key-note, and that most of them have been so taken in different tunes. The following presentment may make this clear:—

It was a curious coincidence that concurrently with Mr. Maitland's lecture a full discussion on folk-songs was carried on almost daily in The Morning Post. The discussion originated from an interview with Mr. Cecil T. Sharp which appeared in that journal (on January 18), wherein that industrious collector gave an interesting account of his experiences in Somersetshire and Devonshire during the Christmas vacation in quest of his favourite quarry. On this occasion Mr. Sharp wrote down some scores of songs sung by the country folk, and he claims to have rescued some excellent specimens from possible oblivion. The obvious fact that unless some steps are taken immediately to collect from all parts of the country what remains of the traditions of these songs they will be gone for ever, tempted many interested correspondents to comment and to make suggestions. As a Folk-Song Society is in existence it would seem natural to assume that the business of arranging for a systematic search was peculiarly its affair. But Mr. Sharp and others stated that this Society was moving far too slowly, if at all, an obiter dictum which elicited from Mrs. Kate Lee, the Secretary of the Society, the announcement that the fifth volume of songs collected by members was in the press, and the remark that the work of the Society was limited by the funds at its command. Miss Mason, whose collection 'Nursery Rhymes and Country Songs' is a valuable one, contributed a sensible letter, in which she remarks that 'it is necessary to obtain an enormous, almost an exhaustive knowledge of what has been written before venturing to publish anything as purely traditional.' And she adds that 'the beautiful air "See-saw, Marjory Daw," supposed to be traditional, is really "Rousseau's Dream."' Miss Lucy Broadwood, whose title to be heard in this connection is indisputable, supported Miss Mason, and adds her opinion that collectors need to have 'a certain inborn gift or instinct for "folk melody" which cannot be taught, an instinct which may be entirely present or entirely absent in the musician, be he great or humble.' Mr. A. P. Graves, one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools, looked forward to the use of folk-songs in all our elementary schools, and Mr. J. S. Curwen found fault not only with such songs for school use on the ground of the unsuitability of the words and the wide compass they often demand, but as music generally. He thought that folk-song melodies 'are seldom of much value,' and it is seldom that, 'sentiment apart, a melody of this class can be said to have an English character.'

The conclusion of the whole matter is that, waiving all criticism of musical value or suitability of words for a purpose, it is eminently desirable that traditional songs, and songs that are assumed to be traditional, should be collected as quickly as possible. When they are collected it will be soon enough to criticise their merit and consider to what use they can be put. Among the suggestions made in reference to the means of collecting the tunes in rural districts was the exceedingly naive one that the 12,000 parochial clergy, aided by the schoolmasters, should take down the tunes. It is, we fear, a too flattering testimonial to the musical skill of the clergy generally to assume that they are able to write down the notation of what they hear. Why, a great many—but never mind! The really practical and dead certain plan would be to supply collectors with a good recording phonograph. Mr. Southgate claims that the Musical Association is a fit and proper body to undertake the task and there is a good deal to be said for this view.

Hector Berlioz et la société de son temps. Par Julien Tiersot.
[Paris: Librairie Hachette et Cie.]

It is impossible properly to appreciate the life and work of a great man apart from his surroundings. Man is the creature of circumstances; they mould, if they do not make his character. Berlioz was of most impressionable nature, and the author of this interesting volume shows us how strong were the influences from without. So much has been written within the last few months about the composer that there is no need to tell the romantic story of his life, neither will space allow of comment such as the book deserves. M. Tiersot believes that Berlioz was thoroughly sincere—in his enthusiasms, his ironies, his loves, his hatreds; also that he has revealed himself fully in his scores, his books, and his letters. The writer frankly recognizes more than one 'semi-sincere' expression in the writings of the master; in the main, however, his statement appears to us correct.

Pasdeloup is generally regarded as the originator of popular concerts; as the man who paved the way for the successes of Colonne, Lamoureux, and now Chevillard. But M. Tiersot reminds us that the real initiator of such concerts was Berlioz. He sowed, but other men reaped. 'As a rule,' we read, 'Berlioz seems to have covered his expenses; perhaps he may occasionally have made a slight profit, but nothing more.' With regard to the 20,000 francs given by Paganini to the composer, some very plain facts are quoted to demolish Liszt's account of the matter; yet M. Tiersot says nothing about Sir Charles Hallé's statement that the money came ostensibly from Paganini, but that the gift was really Jules Janin's.

In the art-work of the composer our author distinguishes four periods. The first one of incubation—i.e., the early attempts at writing before he left home; the second (1827-1842), the period of 'romantic effervescences'—Harriet Smithson, Shakespeare, Beethoven; the third (1842-1854), one of transition; and the fourth, similar to the second, though with different influences—Estelle, his first and his latest love, Virgil and Gluck. The works produced during the second period are 'les plus vibrants.' The chapter on the contemporary composers of Berlioz is a very interesting one. Between Cherubini and our master friendship was impossible; 'they belonged to a different generation, to a different school, and the one in his own way was as bad-tempered as the other.' M. Tiersot fully endorses Wagner's opinion that Meyerbeer's conception of an opera was the mise en scène of Berlioz's orchestra. From among many distinguished contemporaries Wagner and Liszt of course stand out prominently. The relations between them and Berlioz are described at some length. M. Tiersot agrees with many criticisms of the art-work of Berlioz by Wagner, but endeavours to show, and not unsuccessfully, that at times the latter was prejudiced. He recognizes the services which Liszt rendered to Berlioz in earlier days, but later on when the latter could not admire the great pianist's compositions the friendship practically ceased.

Bunte Blätter: Twelve Easy Pieces for Violin (in the first position) and Pianoforte. By Hans Sitt (Op. 84). In Four Books.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Hans Sitt may well be termed the friend of the young violinist, for no composer knows better how to write successfully for the initial stages of violin technique. Many essentials are required for perfect success in this direction—an intimate knowledge of the possible capabilities of the average young player, an easy flow of pleasing melody with appropriate and not too difficult accompaniment, and withal the occult skill, possessed but by the few, of imperceptibly, as it were, gradually guiding and leading a student to higher attainments. All these characteristics are remarkably demonstrated in Herr Sitt's latest opus, 'Bunte Blätter,' for violin with pianoforte accompaniment. These 'variegated leaves' consist of twelve short pieces (conveniently published in four books of three numbers each) specially written for performing within the first position.

The composer, wisely we think, adopts simple and suitably descriptive titles instead of the namby-pamby meaningless headings too often given to pieces for the young. Thus we find a Canzone, Minuet, and Gondoliera in the first book, followed by a Capriccio, Elegy, and Tarantelle in the second; a Romance, Gavotte, and Arietta in the third, and a Walzer, Berceuse, and Mazurka in the fourth. The pieces are slightly progressive in their degree of difficulty, but they are essentially simple and, we may add, instructive bagatelles, and as such cannot be too highly recommended to teachers. We quote the opening bars of the first and last numbers as specimens of Herr Sitt's melodic gifts:—

[Adam and Charles Black.]

It is hardly necessary to say that these three books of reference for the year 1904 are useful—they are invaluable. 'Who's Who?' has now been expanded to 1700 closely-printed pages containing biographies of living celebrities, including Colonials, Indians and Americans. The amount of information—some of it rather trivial—in this book is really amazing. The difficulties attending its production must be immense, and this may account for the inclusion of a biography of the late William Nicholl, the singer, who died so far back as April, 1902. We notice an important omission in the list of literary works produced by Sir Hubert Parry in not mentioning the 'Music of the XVIIth Century,' contributed by him to the 'Oxford History of Music.' The editor of 'Who's Who?'—like other editors—doubtless suffers much tribulation by the non-copperplate writing of some of his correspondents. To such cabalistic calligraphy may be traced (on p. 729) 'Rindberger' instead of Rheinberger. In the 'Englishwoman's Year-Book,' edited by Miss Emily Janes, the information given under the heading 'Music' is quite encyclopædic and yet concisely set forth, while the 112 pages of the 'Who's Who Year-Book' are full of varied information very concisely tabulated and set forth.

NEW EASTER ANTHEMS.

Worthy is the Lamb. By E. H. Thorne.If ye then be risen with Christ. By Ivor Atkins.Jesus Christ is risen to-day. By Alfred R. Gaul.Christ the Lord is risen again. By E. Vine Hall.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

There is a solidity and Bach-like strength in Mr. Thorne's anthem that should cause its wide acceptance. It imperatively demands a well-trained choir of capable singers to do it justice, but to such it will not present exceptional difficulties. The work opens in an original manner with an organ unisonal passage which gives out the fugal subject, followed by its counter subject, with which is built up the first chorus of the work. It is a subject admirably constructed, not only with reference to technical requirements, but from an expressive point of view, the theme emphasising the statement, 'Worthy is the Lamb that was slain.' The second section of the anthem is also fugal. The subject extends over ten bars, very dignified in design, and one that happily echoes the spirit of the text. The organ part, possessing considerable independence, is not the least effective portion of this sterling composition.

The clever organist of Worcester Cathedral has written an anthem ('If ye then be risen with Christ') which, while preserving the dignity of the best church music, is sufficiently modern in character to meet present-day requirements. As Mr. Atkins has selected only few words for his setting, these are frequently repeated; but he has sought to express the varied meanings which the weighty lines will bear, and in this way has avoided some of the objectionable results of 'vain repetition.' There can be no doubt about the composer's earnestness; it proclaims itself in the first section, in the theme to which the tenors and basses in unison deliver the postulate which gives the title to the anthem. This theme is well contrasted with the persuasiveness of the music of the succeeding Andante, 'Set your affections on things above.' Some effects of a dramatic character are secured at the entrance of all the voices, and the subsequent parts are impressive. The Finale, Allegro, is opened in vigorous fashion by a phrase sung by the tenors and basses, answered by the sopranos. After this the music is written in solid four-part harmony of diatonic character, and the anthem is brought to an imposing conclusion.

Mr. Gaul's setting of 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day' may be commended to choirs of limited capacities, inasmuch as it makes no serious demands on executive ability. The first two bars, assigned to the tenors, consist of the opening strain of the old hymn-tune (from the Lyra Davidica of 1708) associated with the title of the anthem, and although Mr. Gaul makes no further use of this quotation the sense of familiarity thus engendered is not disturbed in what follows. The opening chorus is succeeded by an Easter carol containing solo passages for a soprano voice. The most distinctive section of the music is found in a long and gradual crescendo which leads up to a jubilant conclusion.

Mr. Vine Hall has evidently had in mind the capacities of village choirs in the composition of his Easter anthem. He has selected for his text the words of the well-known hymn, 'Christ the Lord is risen again,' translated by Miss Catherine Winkworth from the German. The music is presented in simple chordal progressions set forth in stately minim array, and two soprano solos afford pleasant relief. The organ accompaniment is in keeping with the facilities of the vocal portion of an anthem that will undoubtedly serve its purpose.

Songs of the Church with stories of their writers. By Lady M'Dougall.

[Charles H. Kelly.]

The 'Songs of the Church' upon which Lady M'Dougall so pleasantly discourses in this interesting volume from her pen, are the various hymns that are sung from time to time in church and home. In her introduction she says: 'The literature of hymnology is particularly rich. Every age since the Christian era has produced some fine outburst of song. The Latin Fathers, the devout King Robert of France in the midst of the darkest days of the dark ages, monks such as the Bernards of Clairvaux and Cluny, the German singers in the midst of the horrors of civil war, George Herbert fresh from the Court of Charles I., the Wesleys and their contemporaries, and the many writers of the 19th century, all contribute the best thoughts of their lives in the best words.' This is not only well put, but the statement is perfectly true. Moreover, the songs (hymns) of the church are catholic in the fullest sense of the word. The heart-promptings of Ken, Keble, Charles Wesley, Watts, Newman, Doddridge, Cowper, and a host of others are sung in all the churches, irrespective of and without a thought of denominational differences; surely this is a fact which should rejoice the hearts of those who are responsible for the music of the sanctuary.

Lady M'Dougall has primarily written for the edification of children, but children of older growth may learn much from her interesting pages; and organists, choirmasters and members of church choirs will gain not a little inspiration in the discharge of their duties from the perusal of this very readable book.

MRS. NEWMARCH ON TCHAIKOVSKY'S OPERAS.

At the Musical Association, on the 9th ult., Dr. Charles Maclean in the chair, Mrs. Newmarch read the fourth of a series of papers upon National Opera in Russia. On this occasion she dealt with the operas of Tchaikovsky.

The lecturer in her opening remarks said that Tchaikovsky's musical tastes developed earlier on the dramatic than on the symphonic side. He knew and loved the masterpieces of Italian and French opera long before he had made acquaintance with the works of Beethoven or Schumann. His loyal affection for Italian opera dated from early childhood, when he listened with delight to selections from Bellini, Donizetti and, above all, Mozart, played by an orchestration—an instrument dear to Russian hearts. But although Tchaikovsky was so strongly attracted towards operatic music, of the eight works he composed for the stage only two had retained a strong grip on the popular taste: 'Eugene Onegin' and 'Pique-Dame' (The Queen of Spades).

Seeking a reason for this comparative failure of his dramatic music, Mrs. Newmarch said it did not lie so much in the poverty of the subjects he treated as in the fact that he frequently chose them without reference to his particular cast of mind. Opera was the one musical form to which the objective outlook was essential; but Tchaikovsky saw everything from a subjective and temperamental point of view. Consequently he was only at his best in those operas in which, by reason of their literary contents, he was able to infuse most of his own individuality and lyrical inspiration.

Several of Tchaikovsky's operas were commented upon in detail, and Mrs. Newmarch warmly commended 'Pique-Dame' to English attention. Less national in style than 'Eugene Oniegin,' its psychological problem was stronger and its dramatic appeal was direct, therefore she believed it would have a greater chance of success with the public. The history of Tchaikovsky's operas repeated itself: a passion for some particular subject, feverish haste to embody his ideas, certainty of success; then disenchantment, self-criticism, and that hankering to re-make and re-model which pursued him through life.

Tchaikovsky's operatic development was summed up as follows: Beginning with conventional Italian forms in 'The Oprichnik' (1872), he passed in 'Cherevichek' (Les Caprices d'Oxane, 1872) to more modern methods, making use of melodic recitative and arioso. 'Eugene Oniegin' (1879) shows a combination of both these styles. This first operatic period was purely lyrical. Afterwards, in 'The Maid of Orleans' (1879), 'Mazeppa' (1883), and 'Charodeika' or 'The Enchantress' (1887), he passed through a period of dramatic tendency. With 'Pique-Dame' (1889) he reached the zenith of his operatic development; but this is the solitary example of a style which may be characterized as lyrico-dramatic. In his last opera, 'Iolanthe' (1893), he showed a disposition to return to simple lyrical forms.

In conclusion the lecturer said that, interesting as are Tchaikovsky's operas, she did not think they had the vitality of his symphonic works. His nature was too emotional and self-centred for broad, dramatic uses. But the orchestral works bore the strong impress of his own intense personality. These held the cry of all baffled and disenchanted spirits, and would live so long as there were natures made for suffering in the world.

The lecture was admirably illustrated by Miss Grainger Kerr, who sang the Slumber Song from 'Mazeppa' and Pauline's air (Russian style) from 'Pique-Dame'; and by Mr. Robert Maitland, who gave dramatic renderings of Eugene Oniegin's chief aria and Kochubey's monologue from 'Mazeppa.'

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The committee of the Royal Choral Society can no longer be reproached for a stereotyped selection of works, for on January 28 was presented Sir Hubert Parry's symphonic ode 'War and Peace' with Sir Frederick Bridge's dramatic cantata 'Callirhoe,' while on Ash Wednesday was given the first performance in London of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's sacred cantata 'The Atonement.' The opinions expressed in these columns on Sir Hubert Parry's ode were fully confirmed on the second hearing of the work. It is indeed one of the most noble and sustained utterances of the greatly-esteemed composer, and there can be little doubt that with passing years there will be increasing recognition of its value, for do not the words and music pulsate with the highest form of patriotism? The choir sang superbly, and the fullest advantage was taken of the many opportunities the music offers for expressive and improving choral effects. Miss Agnes Nicholls distinguished herself in the rendering of the soprano solos, and the singing by Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Andrew Black was equally praiseworthy. The composer conducted, and received quite an ovation at the close of the performance. Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Callirhoe,' originally produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1888, is too well known to require description or criticism. It is sufficient to say that full justice was done, under the composer's direction, to the romantic music and picturesque scoring, and that the work appeared to give pleasure to a large audience.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The choral and orchestral concert by the students at the Royal College of Music on the 15th ult. was as usual most praiseworthy and reflected great credit on both pupils and professors. The orchestral works were the Overture to Weber's 'Oberon' and Dvorák's Symphony in G, No. 4, which were rendered with the verve and intelligence which distinguish the student orchestra under Sir Charles V. Stanford's direction. The programme also included Schumann's Introduction and Allegro Appassionato in G (Op. 92), for pianoforte, entrusted to Miss Mildred McCheane, and Dr. Max Bruch's Cantata for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra entitled 'Damajanti' (Op. 78), which had not previously been performed in England. Damajanti is the name of the Indian Princess who, having been deserted by her husband in a forest, bewails her lot and is comforted by some worshippers and geni of the forest. The work opens with a long and expressive solo for Damajanti. This is succeeded by an impressive chorus, to which follows the strongest number of the work, Damajanti's appeal for help, a passionate and dramatic section which relieves the somewhat too prevalent serious character of the music. If 'Damajanti' is not a strong example of the German composer, it is a musicianly and earnest production. The solo part was rendered with notable dramatic perception by Miss Nannie Tout, but the choristers sang rather tamely.

THE BACH CHOIR.

The reorganized choir of this now comparatively old Society—it was established in 1876—gave a private concert at the Portman Rooms on January 26. Although the performance was said to be private, we hope we are violating no secrets in saying that it was on the whole a remarkably creditable one. The chief item of the programme was the trying motet 'Jesu, priceless treasure' (Bach). This work was performed without accompaniment and generally with spirit,—some of it was too quick for our old-fashioned taste—and moreover the pitch was remarkably well-maintained. The fine anthems 'O Lord, look down from heaven' (Battishill) and 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace' (S. S. Wesley) were also impressively performed. Four (Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6) of Brahms's 'Lieder und Romanza' (Op. 44) for female voices were attractive features of the programme. Mr. Gregory Hast sang several songs, and Madame Marie Soldat played Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor. Dr. H. Walford Davies conducted. He deserves much congratulation on the progress he is making with his resources.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

It is a remarkable fact that Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' a work which has excited more attention all over the musical world, including the Continent and the United States, than any other recent composition, has until recently been heard only once in London—at the Westminster Cathedral last year, and then the chorists were imported from Hanley. This is not the place to discuss the why and wherefore of this neglect. We need only dwell upon the gratifying circumstance that the new London Choral Society had the courage, and what is more, the ability, to produce the work at its third concert given at the Queen's Hall on the 15th ult.

The choir of the London Choral Society consists of about 300 singers. The quality of tone they produce has a fine musical ring, not remarkably full or so resonant as we hear 'up North,' but always musical and well in tune. The choir is now (more so than when we last heard it) agreeably responsive to the conductor, and it often displays very high qualities. Sometimes the pianos were not delicate enough (was it the fear that restraint might lead to loss of pitch?), and several important passages therefore failed in effect. The difficult opening was remarkably well sung, and some of the climaxes in 'Praise to the Holiest' were thrilling. The extraordinary and difficult Demons' chorus was sung with some, if not sufficient, dramatic intensity. There was no attempt at the realism heard at some previous performances, notably that at Sheffield. But as it is so easy to overstep the sublime in this matter the abstinence was perhaps discreet. When all is said it must be recorded that the performance of the choir as a whole was a very fine one, and that it fairly established the reputation of the Society and of its conductor, Mr. Arthur Fagge, as a choral trainer.

The band was competent in every department. It consisted of seventy performers, but was hardly strong enough to form a good balance to the choir. Mr. Fagge does not appear to be quite so happy with his band as he undoubtedly is with his choir. We venture to suggest that his beat unit is often too small. Experienced orchestral players do not need so much nursing. But we are measuring the result by very strict standards, and are glad to be able to congratulate Mr. Fagge upon the progress he and his Society are making. The soloists were Miss Marie Breina, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and it is needless to add that the performance of such experienced artists was deeply impressive. The band was led by Mr. H. Lewis. The overwhelming audience that was attracted testified to the eagerness of London amateurs to make the acquaintance of the work.

RICHTER CONCERT.

A NEW PIANIST.

To the long list of first-rate artists who were introduced to the London public by Dr. Hans Richter—a list which includes Gabrilowitch, Dohnányi, Kubelik, Kocian, and Kreisler—must now be added another who, to judge from his first appearance at the Richter Concert given at Queen's Hall on the 16th ult., is likely to create considerable stir in musical circles. This is Herr Artur Schnabel, a young pianist who deserves thanks for introducing himself through the medium of Brahms's rarely-heard Pianoforte Concerto in B flat (Op. 83). He not only played the beautiful work with consummate technical mastery, but with the rarest insight into the master mind that conceived it, and thus he proves himself an artist of exceptional worth. The greatest pianoforte concerto of modern times, it is also the most difficult, but Herr Schnabel might have been playing a simple sonatina, his demeanour at the instrument was so unaffected and natural, and his superb pianoforte-playing so different from the pianoforte-poundings of certain long-maned pianoforte-lions who might be mentioned. Ars celare artem indeed! This was a case of mastering a task of immense difficulty as if it were child's play and could be as easily mastered by any amateur in the audience. More legitimate pianoforte-playing we have rarely heard in recent years; no wonder that he was recalled many times! The orchestral accompaniments were rendered with due appreciation of their symphonic grandeur; the beautiful work was in fact a true delight throughout its four movements.

Dr. Richter's conducting of the rest of the long programme was equal to the best he has ever given us. The 'Leonora' Overture No. 2, Venusberg music from 'Tannhäuser' (Paris version), 'Parsifal' Prelude, and Schubert's C major Symphony—as Schubert wrote it, not partly re-scored, as some German iconoclasts present it to us—displayed the fine Manchester Orchestra to splendid advantage. We have never heard them play so finely. Her Majesty the Queen again honoured a Richter Concert with her presence, and stayed to the end of a long programme.

THE WELSH EISTEDDFOD AT QUEEN'S HALL.

There are numerous Welsh natives in London and consequently a local Eisteddfod is indispensable to their yearnings if not to their existence. The promoters of the gathering held in the Queen's Hall on the 18th ult. knew well how to cater for their patrons. In the afternoon there was a brass band competition, the prize in which was gained by the Rushden Temperance Band under Mr. A. Owen. In the evening there were two choral competitions, one for mixed voices and another for male voices. In the former class five choirs competed. The test-piece was Elgar's part-song 'Weary Wind of the West.' Mr. Fletcher's Select Choir from Folkestone carried off the prize. Of this choir's performance, Dr. Turpin who, with Mr. David Jenkins, adjudicated, says: 'It was quite a revelation, the voices are fresh, and they show refined taste and skilful training.' The male-voice section attracted nine choirs, seven of which travelled from Wales to take part in the contest. The test-piece was an accompanied chorus, 'The Son of God goes forth to War,' a thoughtful and musicianly composition by Mr. Jenkins. The Rhos Choir, led by Mr. Wilfrid Jones, was unquestionably the best. Its tone was rich and not so generally pervaded by the 'oo' quality as is usual with Welsh choirs. They secured real pathos and dignity in the expression and displayed many excellent technical points. The London Welsh under Mr. Morgan and the Beaufort Choir under Mr. Joseph Price ran the Rhos Choir very close. The audience was numerous and enthusiastic. Mr. David Hughes, the exceedingly hard-worked Secretary, may congratulate himself on the results of his arduous labours.

London Concerts.

THE WESSELY QUARTET.

The Wessely Quartet (Messrs. Wessely, Dyke, Tomlinson, and Parker) gave its second of this season's concerts at Bechstein Hall on the 10th ult. The programme contained Mozart's G minor String Quintet (Mr. John Ansell as second viola), Beethoven's last Quartet (in F, Op. 135), and Mr. John B. McEwen's String Quartet in A minor, which was lately played at the Broadwood Concerts. The performances served to show that the four players have nothing to fear from comparison with the best quartet players to be heard in London. Their performances are beautifully finished; tone-quality, balance, ensemble, and interpretative powers are admirable, and produce wholly delightful results. Mr. McEwen's Quartet had to submit to the severest of tests by being placed in juxtaposition with masterpieces by the two greatest composers of chamber music. It came out of the ordeal triumphantly; in fact after the slow movement there was quite a remarkable display of enthusiasm. If a work of this class stands or falls by its slow movement, as is sometimes asserted, then Mr. McEwen's Quartet bids fair to stay; for since Brahms died no slow movement has come under our notice in chamber music which can compare with Mr. McEwen's Andante for sustained beauty and emotional impressiveness. The work has now been played six times in London, and never without complete success. The young Scot's career will be watched with more than average interest after this remarkable achievement.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS AT QUEEN'S HALL.

The performance on January 30 does not call for detailed notice. The Symphony was Brahms in F, and Mr. Eugen D'Albert was heard in Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. On the 13th ult. were performed for the first time Nos. 1, 2, 4 and 5 of 'Poems for mezzo-soprano and orchestra' (Op. 19), composed by Mr. Percy Pitt. These songs are severally entitled 'Chanson de Bilitis,' prose words by Pierre Louÿs, 'Silence' and 'Mandoline,' poems by Paul Verlaine, and 'Souvenir' by Albert Samain. The first and third of these are the most attractive on a first hearing, but each composition testifies to originality and independence of thought and masterly craftsmanship. The music is essentially modern in character, and the orchestral portion is rather more important than the voice part, which, however, is not without interest. The vocalist was Madame Kirkby Lunn, and the instrumental parts were beautifully rendered by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, who secured a superb performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAS.

The Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, under the able direction of Mr. Ernest Ford, gave an exceptionally brilliant smoking concert at the Queen's Hall on the 3rd ult., the King and the Prince of Wales and several notabilities being present. Such an audience, it need scarcely be said, inspired the players to do their very best, and Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture was rendered with thrilling verve, while the Military March in D of Dr. Elgar, conducted by the composer, was encored. The vocalists were Miss Parkina and Mr. and Mrs. Kennerley Rumford, and the enjoyment of the evening was further enhanced by the finished violin playing of Herr Kreisler.

The Strolling Players gave a very successful Ladies' Night on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. William Shakespeare. The programme was for the most part of light character, but it had its solemn moments in Beethoven's Violin Concerto, the solo part of which was intelligently played by Mr. John Saunders. The vocalists were Mr. F. E. Wright and Miss L. De Berna.

Mr. Achille Rivarde, after several years' absence from our concert rooms, made a successful reappearance at an orchestral concert, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, on the 18th ult., at St. James's Hall. Mr. Rivarde was heard in Dr. Max Bruch's Second Violin Concerto, and those by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, showing in all that he had made decided progress as an interpreter and merits an esteemed position amongst contemporary violinists.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert's String Quartet in A, introduced on the 1st ult., left a mixed impression. The work shows the influence of Brahms, and the slow movement is one to linger over pleasurably; but the other sections, broadly speaking, are more clever than pleasing, and while exciting esteem for their musicianship, they sometimes fail to hold the attention. The executants were the Kruse Quartet.

On the 13th ult. the programme included a Sonata in G minor (Op. 5) for violin and pianoforte by Professor Robert Kahn. This work proved to be interesting and clever. The first movement is built up with melodious and vigorously-treated themes, the Adagio is expressive and serious, and effective use is made of rhythmic devices in the finale. Full justice was done to the work by Professor Kruse and the composer.

On the following Monday (the 15th ult.) Professor Kahn brought forward a new Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 41), in the performance of which the composer was assisted by Messrs. Kruse, Hobday, and Mason. The work is gloomy in character, but compensation is found in a decided strength of utterance, attributes which are most prominent in the Andante sostenuto, a movement suggestive of a dirge.

The Barns-Phillips Chamber Concerts at Bechstein Hall always merit attention. On the 2nd ult. the programme included a Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 59) by Gustav Holländer, the Director of the Stein Conservatoire, Berlin. The work, new to Londoners, possesses four genial and well-knit movements, the first and third being particularly attractive. The Sonata received an excellent interpretation at the hands of Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. R. St. Quintin Downer, and was much applauded. Another pleasing novelty was a set of 'Four Musical Sketches' for voice and pianoforte by Signor Vittoria Ricci, who played the accompaniments. The songs are respectively entitled 'Noon,' 'Twilight,' 'Midnight,' and 'Dawn in the Forest.' The second of these is delightfully quaint, and the fourth, of dramatic character, afforded Mr. Charles Phillips an admirable opportunity to show his skill in declamatory singing. Miss Irene Yates, a young soprano, made her debut on this occasion.

Madame Susanne Dessoir—who made a favourable debut in London at the St. James's Hall Popular Concert on January 30—gave a vocal recital on the 9th ult. at Bechstein Hall, when, by her interpretations of a comprehensive selection of songs by the most esteemed composers she proved herself to be an accomplished artist. An interesting feature of the afternoon was the performance by Herr Bruno Hinze-Reinhold of an arrangement by himself for the pianoforte of a Sonata in C minor for violin with figured bass ascribed to J. S. Bach. The illustrious composer's name is not, however, on the manuscript, which was found in the private library of the King of Saxony; but authorities are agreed upon its penmanship, and the music is certainly in the style of the famous Leipzig Cantor whose reputation it sustains.

Herr Artur Schnabel gave a pianoforte recital at Bechstein Hall on the 20th ult., when his various interpretations—beginning with Schubert's posthumous Sonata in A—fully confirmed the good impression he had made at the Richter concert a few days previously. Well equipped with a fluent finger and delicate touch, the new pianist exercises an artistic restraint quite refreshing in these days of ultra-virtuosity. Herr Schnabel is young, and if there was just a semblance of coldness in his playing, this drawback will doubtless soon disappear under the sunshine of experience, and thus in due time he will ripen into an artist of the highest rank.

Reliance has been placed more on accepted masterpieces than on novelties at the recent chamber concerts given by Messrs. Broadwood at St. James's Hall, but on the 4th ult. four new songs by Mr. Roger Quilter were sung for the first time by Miss Gwendolen Maude. The most attractive of these are named 'Now sleeps the crimson petal' and 'Passing Dreams,' but they all bear witness to Mr. Quilter's earnestness and musicianship.

Herren Hegedüs and Backhaus gave an interesting concert on the 19th ult. at St. James's Hall, when both young artists fully maintained the reputation they have acquired as being exceptionally gifted. They were assisted by Mr. John Prouse, a New Zealand baritone, who made his first appearance in London at Madame Kalliwoode's concert at the Queen's Hall on January 28. Mr. Prouse has musical perceptions and an excellent baritone voice.

Miss Ethel Hirschbein, the possessor of a rich contralto voice, gave a recital on the 11th ult. at Bechstein Hall. The young artist made a favourable impression, but showed that further study is necessary to fully develop her capabilities. She was assisted by Mr. Mense and Mr. Hans Wessely.

Miss Muriel Foster gave a vocal recital, assisted by M. Jean Gérardy (violoncello), in St. James's Hall, on the 9th ult., previous to her departure to America and Canada. Special reference to this recital will be found in the Biographical Sketch of Miss Foster on page 153.

Suburban Concerts.

The East Ham Vocal and Orchestral Society gave an admirable performance of 'Elijah' at the Town Hall on the 4th ult., and it is matter for regret that the public in this locality were not present in larger numbers to support so praiseworthy an effort. Every credit is due to the conductor, Mr. F. W. Long, for his excellent training of the choir and orchestra, and the principal solo music received a more than capable interpretation from Madame Medora Henson, Miss Frederica Richardson, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. It is to be hoped that the dwellers in East Ham will on future occasions be more ready to appreciate the good fare placed before them.

The Crystal Palace Amateur Orchestral Society gave a successful concert on the 6th ult. in the Crystal Palace Concert Room, under the able direction of Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock, when the orchestra numbered about seventy-five performers, and the Crystal Palace Choir, which assisted, some 250 voices. The programme included Sullivan's 'Overture di Ballo,' and three movements from Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor. Stanford's three vigorous Cavalier songs were well sung by Mr. Dalton Baker, the tenors and basses of the choir singing the choruses with enthusiasm, and Schubert's setting of Psalm 23 was sung with much beauty of tone by the sopranos and altos of the choir to an orchestral version by Sir August Manns of the original pianoforte accompaniment. Excellent singing marked the performance of Wilbye's old madrigal 'Sweet honey-sucking bees,' and the concert concluded with the dainty and rarely-performed Ballet Pantomime Suite of Thomé's, 'Les Noces d'Arlequin.' Miss Dorothy Maggs was the solo pianist.

The Finsbury Choral Association gave an excellent performance of Parry's 'Judith' at the Northern Polytechnic Hall on the 18th ult. The choir was exceptionally good, singing with admirable precision, attack, and intonation, and the orchestra, as usual, was admirable. The solo music was ably interpreted by Miss Agnes Nicholls (who sang with much fervour), Mr. W. Maxwell, and Mr. Charles Knowles. Mr. Allen Gill, who had evidently bestowed great care in the production, conducted with his accustomed spirit and power.

The Walthamstow Choral Union gave its second concert this season at the Public Baths on the 18th ult., when the programme consisted of Mackenzie's cantata 'The Bride' and the first and second sections of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha.' Choir and orchestra, numbering about 200, were alike fully efficient, giving a spirited rendering of their important share in each work. Mr. Whitworth Mitton sang the solo 'Onaway, awake!', Miss Maggie Purvis and Mr. Frank Caron being responsible for the solos in the 'Death of Minnehaha.' Mr. John Evans conducted with much care and success.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, February 15.

The Wagner Societies go in for propagandism, and the Hugo Wolf Society has for many years followed their example and sought to popularize the songs of this composer who now enjoys widespread fame. We have an 'Ansorge' Society, also a 'Josef Reiter.' The former is not only occupied with the works, mostly songs, of the composer Ansorge, who lives in Berlin, but also with those of other young creative musicians whose merits are not sufficiently recognised, especially Viennese composers, such as Zemlinsky and Streicher—the one hitherto known principally by his dramatic and instrumental works, the other by his songs. The second-named Society is concerned with Reiter, a Viennese schoolmaster whose male-voice compositions have long ago made his reputation; he has also written chamber and pianoforte works, songs, operas and sacred music. His opera 'Klopstock in Zurich' was produced at Linz, and another, 'Der Bundschuh,' at Vienna, but their success was not lasting.

At the instigation of the Josef Reiter Society the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde recently performed a Requiem by Reiter, with great success. The work displays much talent, but it is not strong in invention, neither is the style very mature. Another novelty, 'The Castle of Steel,' by Richard von Perger, Director of the Conservatorium, has also met with favour. It shows the hand of a cultivated musician; of power of characterization and individuality, however, there are few traces.

Year by year the appreciation of Bruckner's works increases. Within a short space of time the Third (in D minor) and Seventh (in E) Symphonies were performed, the former at the Philharmonic under Muck from Berlin, the latter at the Concert Society under Löwe, who, as the pupil and friend of the late composer, conducts his symphonies with all possible care and zeal.

The Rosé Quartet has produced by way of novelty an 'Italian Serenade' for strings by Hugo Wolf, a piquant piece which makes an immediate though not deep impression; it is undoubtedly a youthful work. The composer's opera, 'Der Corregidor,' given some years back at Prague and other cities without gaining any firm hold, is now in rehearsal here, and it will very soon be performed.

The Evangelical Choral Society, in affectionate remembrance of Anton Rückauf, its conductor, who died about a year ago, gave a festival concert at which were performed his Pianoforte Quintet in F minor, part-songs (with and without accompaniment), and various songs. The refined, tender music thoroughly reflects the quiet, modest character of the lamented composer.

At the Opera a gifted young vocalist, Fräulein Bella Alten, has appeared as 'guest.' She has a fine, high soprano voice, and we shall no doubt hear of her again.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third subscription concert (miscellaneous) of the Philharmonic took place in the Ulster Hall on the 5th ult., the vocal artists being Mlle. Lydia Nervil, Miss Beatrice McCready, and Mr. Charles Bennett; and the instrumental, Mr. Monnier Harper,—a native of Belfast and a talented pupil of Mons. Ysaye—Mr. Mark Hambourg (pianist), and Mr. Hamilton Harty (accompanist). The only novel feature was a Violin Concerto by Vieuxtemps (No. 4), with accompaniment of organ, pianoforte, and harp, and it could hardly be considered wholly successful on account of the change of pitch of the organ in the heated hall.

Another of the Queen's College Musical Society's chamber concerts was given on the 13th ult., the principal attraction being a quintet of excellent wind instruments from the Hallé Orchestra. Four of them and Dr. Walker (pianoforte) played a Quintet of Mozart in E flat, and the whole five (also with Dr. Walker) played a Sextet in B flat (Op. 6) by Ludwig Thuille. The Sextet is a very sound, well-written work, of which the Gavotte is much the most interesting movement.

An excellent promenade concert (6d. admission), given in the Ulster Hall on the 15th ult., began what it is hoped will be a successful series of such entertainments, and a crowded house was well satisfied with a selection of songs by two local favourites, Madame Daisy Creasey and Mr. R. M. Patterson, and with selections by the fine band of the Royal Irish Fusiliers.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third Harrison concert, which took place in the Town Hall on the 1st ult., was of exceptional interest artistically. The Queen's Hall Orchestra, directed by Mr. Henry J. Wood, gave a remarkable performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang with fine expression, if with limited power, Elizabeth's 'Greeting to the Hall of Song' from 'Tannhäuser,' and Miss Marie Hall played the solo part in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto in a way that enraptured the audience.—The sixth Halford concert was held the next evening, when Mr. Fritz Kreisler gave a magnificent performance of Spohr's 'Dramatic' Concerto, and exhibited his wonderful technique in Paganini's 'Nar più Mesta' Variations (given with orchestral accompaniment). The programme included J. D. Davis's Ballade, 'The Cenci,' given for the third time; Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings (Op. 48), brilliantly played, and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor. At the seventh concert, on the 16th ult., the Tone-poem 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss was produced for the first time here. It was splendidly played and made a great impression. The Symphonic Variations in D minor by Harry A. Keyser, performed at the orchestral concert of the Incorporated Society of Musicians' Conference in London, 1901-2, met with a cordial reception, and the young composer, who was present, was honoured with a call. Mr. Halford conducted a fine performance of the work. Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony was well rendered, and Miss Annie Cantelo was enthusiastically recalled after a most artistic reading of the solo part in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto.

The Festival Choral Society resumed its concerts on the 4th ult. with a selection from 'Israel in Egypt,' grandly given on the part of the chorus. The principals were Madame Carrie Siviter, Miss Muriel Foster, and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, W. J. Ineson, and Lane Wilson. Miss Foster was at her best in the solo part in the alto Rhapsody of Brahms. A Wagnerian selection closed the concert. Dr. Sinclair conducted, and Mr. C. W. Perkins was organist.

The City Choral Society performed on the 18th ult. Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles.' The occasion excited great interest, and the Town Hall was literally packed from end to end. Chorally the work was superbly given, both in tone and interpretation. Of the principals Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies and Madame Kirkby Lunn were very fine, and Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Webster Millar, Mr. Francis Harford, and Mr. Daniel Price were painstaking in their respective parts. The band was good, and Mr. F. W. Beard conducted with care and no little skill.

On January 28 Madame M. Milward gave a vocal recital in the Temperance Hall, when she introduced Mackenzie's Cycle of Spring Songs. Miss Hannah Bryant played several pianoforte pieces by Glazounow, and a Russian violoncellist, M. Kolni Balozky, made a successful first appearance here.—Mr. Max Mossel's third drawing-room concert was held in the Grosvenor Rooms on the 11th ult. The artists were M. Ernesto Consolo (pianoforte), Professor Ivan Mossel, from Amsterdam (violoncello), and Miss Lillie Wormald (vocalist). The Violoncello Sonatas of Beethoven (Op. 69) and Rubinstein (Op. 18) were the chief features of the programme.

—The Messrs. Broadwood initiated a series of Saturday afternoon concerts in the Temperance Hall on the 13th ult. The pianists have been M. Dohnányi and Miss Frida Kindler; Mr. Max Mossel (violin) and Mr. J. C. Hock (violoncello) have also taken part in the concerts, and Miss Gleeson-White and Miss Edith Kirkwood have appeared as vocalists.—A Welsh concert was given in the New Central Hall on the 17th ult. The Suffolk Street Welsh Choir, conducted by Mr. William Morris, sang an anthem in Welsh by J. Ambrose Lloyd, some Welsh part-songs, and Leslie's 'Lullaby of Life.' Songs were contributed by Miss May John, Miss Laura Evans, and Mr. David Hughes. Our local harpist, Mr. Charles Collier, won much applause by his solo playing.

The Saturday Popular Concerts in the Town Hall deserving mention were the performance of 'Elijah' by the Midland Musical Society on the 13th ult., with Miss Laura Taylor, Miss Minnie Haskett, Mr. Eliot Sharp and Mr. William Evans as soloists, and Mr. A. J. Cotton, conductor; and a miscellaneous Mendelssohn night on the 20th ult., under the direction of Mr. Thomas Facer.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Bristol Royal Orpheus Society celebrated its diamond jubilee upon the 11th ult., and the ladies' night brought together a large audience at Colston Hall. There are at present ninety-five members of the choir, and in addition Mr. E. J. Way (alto) and Mr. Charles Saunders (tenor) were engaged. The choir gave the following pieces for the first time: William Beale's 'The Evening Walk,' Horsley's 'Lo! on yon long resounding shore,' and 'When the soft spring-time,' by F. von Suppé. These were all well received, the composition by Horsley being especially admired. Among the other features were some compositions specially written for the Society, Mr. C. Lee Williams's 'Tally Ho!' and Dr. Horatio Parker's 'The Lamp in the West' being the principal of these contributions. On the present occasion G. W. Martin's 'All hail! thou Queen of night' was the opening glee. Since September, 1878, when Mr. George Riseley was elected musical director, the opening piece on a ladies' night, with only one exception, has been Cooke's 'Strike the lyre.' Mr. Riseley conducted with his accustomed ability, and the performance was highly successful.

The third concert of the season given by the Clifton Quintet at the Victoria Rooms upon the 11th ult. was of a gratifying character. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C minor (Op. 101) and Beethoven's String Quartet in F (Op. 135) were excellently performed. Mrs. Tobias Matthay recited effectively Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden,' Mr. Parsons playing on the pianoforte Richard Strauss's music to the poem.

A concert arranged by the Duchess of Beaufort on behalf of the Lifeboat Saturday Fund was given on the afternoon of the 13th ult. at Colston Hall. A male-voice choir under the direction of Mr. Riseley sang admirably Mendelssohn's chorus, 'Thou comest here to the land,' 'The Storm,' by Dürner, and the familiar 'O Sanctissima.' There were songs by Madame Ella Russell, Lady Maud Warrender, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies; Signor Rubio played some solos on the violoncello, and an orchestra under the direction of Mr. Riseley performed among other compositions Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture, in which the Besses o' th' Barn Band was united.

There was a large attendance on the 15th ult. at the Victoria Rooms, where the annual concert in connection with the Bristol Post Office was held. The vocalists were Miss Margaret Lewis, Miss Maud Waite, and Mr. Dan Thomas. Mr. W. E. Fowler at the organ, Mr. Hubert Hunt as violinist, and Mr. Percy Lewis as violoncellist lent agreeable instrumental aid.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Royal Dublin Society, on the 8th ult., Signor Esposito gave his second pianoforte recital for the season, when he delighted a large audience with a group of early Italian pieces by Frescobaldi, Marcello and Scarlatti, in addition to playing Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 39, No. 2) and Schumann's 'Carneval.' At the same place on the 15th ult. a programme of chamber music included a String Quartet in D (Haydn), the Kreutzer Sonata (Beethoven), and Pianoforte Quintet of Schumann. The performers were Mr. Sigmund Beel, Mr. P. Delany, M. Grisard and Herr Bast.

On the 13th ult., at the Pavilion, Kingstown, Madame Cosslett-Heller's 'Irish Ladies' Choir' made its first concert appearance this season. The choir sang very well some arrangements of Irish melodies by Dr. Jozé, Elgar's 'The Snow' (with accompaniment of ten violins) and Macfarren's 'You stole my love.' Solos were given by Madame Cosslett-Heller, Miss Tenison Collins, Miss Ailyce Linde, Miss Kitty Hickey, Miss Madelaine Macken, Miss M. Moriarty, Miss Sophie Allen (pianoforte) and Miss Esther Corless (Irish harp).

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The eighth orchestral concert of the Paterson series, given in McEwan Hall, was made memorable by a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's First Symphony in C minor and the 'Otello' Overture of Dvorák. The soloist was M. Zacharewitsch, a violinist of rare gifts, who played Wieniawski's F sharp minor Concerto in excellent style. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted the ninth concert on January 25. The eminent London conductor, loyally supported by the Scottish Orchestra, gave a delightful performance of a most interesting programme, which included the C minor Symphony of Beethoven. The tenth concert, on the 1st ult., brought forth, for the first time here, Dr. Elgar's 'Froissart' Overture and the 'Prayer' from Tchaikovsky's 'Mozartiana' Suite. The Portuguese pianist, M. da Motta, played the E flat Pianoforte Concerto of Beethoven. The eleventh concert, on the 8th ult., was choral, Mr. Kirkhope's choir uniting with the orchestra in a fine performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' and Dr. Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions.' The latter is a work of rare beauty and interest, and on this, the first performance in Edinburgh, it received a friendly and enthusiastic reception. A well-written and admirably scored song-cycle by Signor Ricci, entitled 'Forest Scenes,' was splendidly sung by Mr. Robert Burnett. The twelfth and last concert, on the 15th ult., was devoted entirely to Wagner, and included the great duet-scene from the third act of 'Siegfried,' splendidly sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. E. C. Hedmont. Dr. Cowen conducted a really grand concert in superb style, and at its conclusion he and his fellow-artists of the orchestra received a well-merited ovation.

On the 10th ult., in the Music Hall, Mr. Albert B. Bach lectured before the Philosophical Institution on Richard Strauss and Hugo Wolf. In illustration of his discourse, Mr. Bach sang fifteen songs—two by Strauss and thirteen by Wolf. He had the able co-operation of Mrs. Bach at the pianoforte.

The first visit of Mr. Henry J. Wood's Queen's Hall Orchestra to Edinburgh, on the 6th ult., excited considerable interest, and the Music Hall was filled to overflowing.

The Sunday Society, having done much to popularize performances of good music on Sundays in Edinburgh, has decided to extend the sphere of its operations to Leith. The Society announces a series of concerts, under the patronage of the magistrates, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to local charities in Leith.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mr. Henry J. Wood directed the twelfth classical concert on January 26, and, in a programme of more or less well-known pieces, justified his high reputation as a conductor and demonstrated the heights to which the playing of the Scottish Orchestra can reach.

Herr Denhof's second chamber concert on January 28 was in all respects a complete success. Associated with the concert-giver were Lady Hallé and Herr Hugo Becker, and the three artists gave a wonderfully fine performance of Schumann's Trio in G minor for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and Beethoven's Trio in D major (Op. 70). Lady Hallé also played Tartini's well-known Sonata 'Il trillo del diavolo,' and Herr Becker exhibited extremely fine tone and true musicianship in Haydn's Sonata in C major. Miss Gordon Pillans contributed some vocal numbers.

Miss Adela Verne appeared as soloist at the thirteenth classical concert on the 2nd ult., giving a capital reading of the difficult solo part in Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto No. 2. In this, as well as in some shorter pieces, Miss Verne displayed excellent technique and considerable musical insight. Two orchestral novelties were included in the programme, viz., Handel's Concerto Grosso in G, for strings, and Tchaikovsky's Suite in D minor (Op. 43). On the whole the Handel number was best received.

On the 9th ult. the Choral Union gave Brahms's 'Requiem' and Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night.' An otherwise excellent performance was unfortunately marred by the very frequent faulty intonation of the tenor section of the choir. Mr. Charles Knowles made a distinguished appearance in the solo music, and Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted the performance with his customary skill.

The last classical concert of the present series, on the 16th ult., was notable for the first performance here of two important works by Dvorák—his Violoncello Concerto in B minor (Op. 104) and his Symphonic Variations for Orchestra. The interpretation by the Scottish Orchestra was remarkably good. In the Concerto, Professor Robert Hausmann played the solo part with great power, and the work, especially the last movement, was deservedly well received.

The plebiscite concert on the 20th ult. brought the Choral and Orchestral Union's series to a close. The programme on this occasion included such hardy annuals as Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony, Beethoven's Overture 'Leonora' No. 3, and the Overture to 'Tannhäuser.'

The Saint Mungo Choir, a new society ably conducted by Mr. Golan E. Hoole, made its first public appearance on the 19th ult. The Choir is not numerically very strong as yet, but the parts are well balanced with a particularly good alto section. The works chosen for the initial concert were Dr. Harford Lloyd's 'Hero and Leander,' Stanford's 'Revenge,' and two of Elgar's beautiful trios for female voices. The performance was in all respects very satisfactory, and the new Choir gives promise of taking a good place among local choral societies. The Choir had the advantage of being accompanied by a band of fifty members of the Scottish Orchestra.

The Senate of Glasgow University has decided to replace the worn-out organ at present standing in the Bute Hall by a fine four-manual instrument from Messrs. Lewis and Co.'s factory.

The fourth chamber concert organized by Miss Ellicott and Miss Hirschfeld was given in the Rotunda, Cheltenham, on the 16th ult. Miss E. Reynolds, Miss Clench, and Mr. Paul Ludwig played Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor and Saint-Saëns's Trio in F major; Miss Reynolds and Mr. Ludwig performed Beethoven's Sonata in C major for pianoforte and violoncello; and Mr. Edmund Paul sang acceptably a number of songs.

The concert given by the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society on January 28 is specially noticed on page 165.

The sixth annual concert of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, held in the Guildhall on January 27, was a great success from every point of view. The programme included two novelties: a humorous part-song written and composed by the President of the Society (Sir Hubert Parry), entitled 'Orpheus,' and a pretty setting to words of an old poem beginning 'Weep you no more,' by Dr. G. Hathaway, also written for and dedicated to the Society. Sir Hubert Parry was to have conducted his part-song, but was detained in London, but both 'Orpheus' and Dr. Hathaway's charming piece received excellent renderings under the able direction of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer. Mr. C. Lee-Williams's part-song 'Tally-ho,' heard for the first time in Gloucester on this occasion, had to be repeated, and indeed encores were more the rule than the exception. Other part-songs were by Beale, Horsley, Mackenzie, and Brewer. Madame Sobrino and Mr. Dalton Baker were the soloists. A note on the history and operations of this Society will be found on page 168.

The second concert given by the Gloucester Choral Society was held at the Shire Hall on the 9th ult., when Mackenzie's cantata 'The Bride,' and Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore' were the works given. Miss Chetham and Mr. Walter Hyde were the soloists. The choru-singing was distinctly good. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer conducted.

Mr. E. G. Woodward is once more to be congratulated on the success of his annual concert given on the 15th ult. by the Instrumental Society, of which he has been director for many years. The several orchestral pieces were played with admirable effect, and Mr. W. Henley gave a display of remarkable virtuosity in his violin solos. The vocalist was Miss Smy Wulff, whose singing made a very favourable impression.

We note an interesting revival in the Madrigal concert given by the members of the Gloucester Cathedral choir in the Chapter Room on the 16th ult. Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, organist of the Cathedral and master of the choristers, conducted, and the attendance was gratifying.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The ninth concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 9th ult., when chief interest centred in the performance of a very meritorious rendering of Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' with Madame Conly (who made her first appearance in Liverpool), Mr. William Green and Mr. Robert Radford as principals. The first performance in this city of Dr. Cowen's 'Indian Rhapsody' (which saw the light at the Hereford Festival of last year), under the direction of the composer, provoked a great deal of interest, and the Philharmonic Orchestra gave the work with all possible effect. Bizet's seldom-heard Overture 'Patria' was also in the scheme.

The last concert of Mr. Schiever's brief season on the 13th ult. provided for the appearance of Mr. Charles Ross who, as soloist in the Pianoforte Quintet in F minor of César Franck, achieved a notable success and materially added to the good opinion in which he is held in Liverpool.

The second and penultimate Richter concert was given on the 3rd ult., when the programme included the 'Carnaval Romain' Overture of Berlioz, the Venusberg music from 'Tannhäuser,' Strauss's Symphonic Poem 'Till Eulenspiegel,' and Brahms's Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

That which may be fitly described as an immense impression was made on an enormous audience at the Philharmonic Hall by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, which appeared on the 11th ult., when one of the finest performances of Tchaikovsky's Symphony in E was given on that occasion. Miss Marie Hall was the violinist, and Mrs. Henry J. Wood appeared as the vocalist.

Announced as the 'King of Violinists,' Mr. Fritz Kreisler gave a recital in the Philharmonic Hall on the 20th ult., when he was assisted by Mr. Pedro de Zulueta (vocalist) and Mr. Hamilton Harty.

Mr. Granville Bantock made a welcome reappearance in Liverpool on the 6th ult., when he directed the second Ladies' Concert of the Orchestral Society's Season. Strauss's 'Ein Heldenleben' was given with full appreciation of its effect, and the programme also included the Overture to 'Die Meistersinger,' the 'Pomp and Circumstance' marches of Elgar, and Saint-Saëns's Violin Concerto, in which Mr. Alfred Ross played the solo part with real brilliancy. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

An interesting feature of the 'St. Matthew Passion' performance, given at the twelfth Hallé Concert on January 21, was the rendering of the very long and arduous tenor solo part by Mr. Webster Millar, a young artist trained in Manchester, who acquitted himself with great credit. Mr. Frederic Austin delivered the Redeemer's words very impressively, and the Hallé Choir, which since the last performance of the 'Passion' music has made the acquaintance of the great B minor Mass, sang expressively and well, being particularly good in the seven chorales, which were all sung a capella. The concert of the following week brought the first performance in Manchester of Strauss's 'Zarathustra,' and, strange to say, that enigmatic work was better received by the audience than the much simpler and more generally intelligible 'Tod und Verklärung.' 'Also sprach Zarathustra' is to be repeated before the end of the season. On the same occasion Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus took the solo part in a quite masterly rendering of Brahms's Second Pianoforte Concerto, and the orchestra played exquisitely in Beethoven's Eighth Symphony. The operatic evening at the fourteenth Hallé concert on the 4th ult. brought together an enormous audience.

The first act of the 'Flying Dutchman' and the last act of the strikingly original comic opera by Cornelius, 'The Barber of Bagdad,' were the principal works in the programme, and between the two operatic selections Miss Agnes Nicholls gave a most eloquent rendering of Beethoven's scena 'Abschenlicher.' Miss Nicholls was in particularly good voice; she also sang magnificently in Senta's Ballad. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies gave the parts first of the Dutchman and then of the Barber. The secondary solo parts, of which there were six, were all remarkably well sustained by young singers trained at the Royal Manchester College of Music. The 'Arabian Nights' atmosphere of the 'Barber of Bagdad' seemed to appeal to the audience, the selection being better received than any other first-time performance of recent years, nothing having occurred, fortunately, to prejudice the rather conservative audience against Cornelius. The Bruckner Symphony given on the 11th ult. was condemned before being heard, as sometimes happens here. The Second Pianoforte Concerto by Liszt was played by Mr. Friedheim with technical competence, but in a somewhat dry manner, and Miss Muriel Foster sang most artistically, showing her usual indifference to popular tastes in her selections. The 'Coral' song by Elgar was the only one of the vocal solos that seemed to appeal to the sympathies of the audience. The bulk of the Hallé audience cared for nothing in the sixteenth concert except the 'Unfinished' Symphony, which was poetically and faultlessly rendered. Those who waited for the Dvůřák Suite at the end no doubt accepted it as fairly satisfactory music; but the intervening pieces were all of a kind which the Manchester public does not like. The middle place in the programme was occupied by a Symphonic Poem called 'Kossuth,' by a youthful Hungarian disciple of Richard Strauss. The composition showed grasp of orchestral resource that is remarkable enough in a composer of Mr. Béla Bartók's youth. It contains no element derived from the rich treasury of Hungarian folk-music, and is closely modelled on Strauss's 'Heldenleben.' The presence of the composer, and his excellent pianoforte playing in Liszt's 'Spanish Rhapsody,' with Busoni's orchestration, and other pieces, caused the Symphonic Poem to be received in a tolerably cordial manner.

The Ladies' Concerts at the Midland Hall have recently brought opportunities of hearing some interesting performers. Mr. Dohnányi gave a recital on January 19. Mr. Ernesto Consolo played twice, first taking the pianoforte part in a really admirable rendering of the Dvůřák Quintet, and afterwards giving pieces by Chopin and others in a manner indicating a special gift for the interpretation of delicate romance. Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Plunket Greene have been the best of the singers. At Mr. Brand Lane's fifth concert on January 30 the Philharmonic Choir sang with fine precision in a madrigal by Weelkes and in part-songs by Elgar, Stanford, and others. The best of the soloists was Mr. Denis O'Sullivan, who gave two of Weingartner's 'trade songs' and some racy Irish stuff. At Mr. Max Mayer's second chamber concert on the 1st ult., that admirable violinist Madame Marie Soldat, of Vienna, was heard, and a remarkable setting for mezzo-soprano of Meredith's 'Forest Dirge' ('Dirge in Woods' is the awkward title which the song actually bears) was introduced.—At the sixth Gentlemen's Concert on the 10th ult. Mr. Pachmann played various small pieces in his dexterous manner, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies sang admirably in Loewe's most graphic ballad 'Edward,' and other songs.—Of concerts by touring parties there have been two during the weeks covered by these notes—namely, Madame Clara Butt's and Mr. Kennerley Rumford's on January 25, and the third Harrison concert, with Mr. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra, on the 10th ult.

At the third Brodsky Quartet concert on January 20 a String Quartet by Tanéieff was heard for the first time. A Scherzo, described as Divertimento, proved to be the most attractive movement, the rest being somewhat tormented music. At the fourth Brodsky concert on the 17th ult. Mr. Backhaus played admirably in the Brahms Quintet (Op. 34), and a remarkably finished rendering was given by Dr. Brodsky and his regular associates of Beethoven's Quartet No. 5 in A major and of Tchaikovsky's Second Quartet, a work which enjoys considerable favour with this audience.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 8th ult. the Queen's Hall Orchestra and Miss Marie Hall made their second appearance this season in Newcastle. Their renderings of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and Paganini's Concerto in D respectively were, of course, beyond criticism.

A local string quartet, consisting of Mr. A. Wall, Miss F. Davis, Mr. J. Perry, and Miss H. Page, performed Schumann in A minor and Beethoven in G, Op. 18, at a concert of the Newcastle Musical Society.

A very creditable performance of 'Judas Maccabæus' was given on the 13th ult., in the Miners' Theatre, Ashington, by the Ashington and Hirst Philharmonic Society—a young Institution in one of the populous mining districts of Northumberland—and the Ashington Amateur Orchestral Society. The soloists were Miss M. Grime, Miss M. Hogarth, Mr. H. Beaumont, and Mr. W. Miller, who is one of the Society's officials. Mr. J. Firth conducted.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The principal events in the district since the last notice have been the concert given by the Norwich Philharmonic Society and that given by Mr. Arthur Bent's orchestra. The former concert took place in St. Andrew's Hall on January 29, and was signalized by the first appearance in Norwich of Miss Marie Hall, who played Paganini's Violin Concerto in D, as abridged by Wilhelmj, the great difficulties of which were surmounted by Miss Marie Hall with the greatest ease; in fact, the whole performance was a marvellous display of violin technique. In the second part, Miss Hall contributed the Adagio from the Fifth Concerto of Vieuxtemps, and a Bohemian Fantaisie by Sevcik. The band of the Society, under the conductorship of Dr. Bates, which had been slightly augmented by London players in certain departments, played Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony, three Bavarian Dances by Elgar, and Smetana's overture to his opera 'The Bartered Bride,' the latter being heard for the first time at a local concert. The Hon. Norah Dawnay was the vocalist.

The second concert, Mr. Arthur Bent's, took place on the 16th ult., and met with a great and deserved success, being far in advance of any previous concert given by Mr. Bent's orchestra. The programme included Nicolai's Overture 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat,—Mrs. Norman O'Neill being the solo performer—and Tchaikovsky's 'Symphonie Pathétique,' the excellent playing of the last-named work especially evoking great enthusiasm. The concert concluded with the 'Danse des Bacchantes' from Gounod's 'Philemon et Baucis.' Mr. Ben Ivor sang 'God breaketh the battle' from 'Judith,' and 'Il mio tesoro' from 'Don Giovanni.'

MUSIC IN IPSWICH AND LOWESTOFT.

(From Correspondents.)

The Ipswich Choral Society gave a concert of special interest in the Public Hall on the 4th ult., the programme being devoted to compositions by Sir Hubert Parry, notably his cantata 'War and Peace' and the 'Lady Radnor' Suite. The interest of the occasion was increased by the distinguished composer's presence as conductor, and under his experienced guidance the choir was inspired to excel its previous efforts, and the orchestra, led by Mr. Edward O'Brien, gave an eminently satisfactory rendering of the Suite. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice May, Miss Maria Velland, Mr. Ben Ivor, and Mr. Plunket Greene, the last-named, it need hardly be said, specially distinguishing himself. Sir Hubert Parry accompanied the songs in the miscellaneous second part. Both Mr. Bunnell Burton, who trained the choir, and Dr. Sinclair, who rehearsed the orchestra, are to be congratulated on the result of their efforts, the former more particularly for his enterprise in organizing so exceptional and interesting a concert.

Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was successfully performed by the Lowestoft Harmonic and Orchestral Society on the 4th ult. in the Marina Theatre. The chorus and orchestra, numbering about 200, acquitted themselves with much credit, the former especially so in 'Stone him to death,' 'Sleepers, wake,' and 'O great is the depth.' The solo music was excellently sung by Madame Emily Squire, Miss Bertha Richards, Mr. Philip Newbury and Mr. Andrew Black. Mr. R. C. Luxton conducted with ability and care. The Society was founded about two years ago by Mr. Luxton, and has already firmly established itself in popular favour. During its brief existence it has placed to its credit two renderings of the 'Messiah' and one of 'Elijah,' besides a number of smaller works.

The Sacred Harmonic Society are to be congratulated on the success of their performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on the 11th ult. The concert was certainly one of the most successful the Society has given. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Ivor Foster, all of whom sang their parts with great care and appreciation. The choir did excellently, maintaining their pitch well in the unaccompanied music and responding to Mr. Allen Gill's reliable and inspiring beat with great precision.

The Kirton and District (Lincolnshire) Choral Society gave a very satisfactory performance of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' on the 11th ult. The solos were ably sung by Miss Gregory, Miss Sellers, Mr. Gregory and Mr. Appleby. Mr. Gregory conducted the performance, and Mrs. White was an efficient accompanist.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Before dealing with the events of last month allusion must be made to two concerts given late in January, which claim attention. At Doncaster, on January 21, Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' was given on a scale never previously attempted in that town. By the amalgamation of the Doncaster and Rotherham Musical Societies—both of which are conducted by Mr. Thomas Brameld—a fine chorus of about 400 voices became available, and, with the other constituents of the musical force—band and principals—made up a combination which almost reached festival scale. Nor was the result less satisfactory than the promise. The chorus-singing was memorable, and while full of the stirring vigour and precision always associated with Mr. Brameld's choralists, was further marked by expressiveness and intelligence. The band, largely recruited from Manchester, and the soloists, Miss Evangeline Florence, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Charles Knowles, maintained the same high scale of excellence.

The other January concert was that given by the Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society in the Albert Hall on the 25th of the initial month of the year. Unaccompanied male-voice music is strangely neglected in South Yorkshire, and this Society, which does so much to foster it, never lacks support, as was proved by the large audience present. S. S. Wesley's 'When fierce conflicting passions' and Mendelssohn's 'To the Sons of Art' were the chief choral items; shorter works by Elgar, Spofforth, Kücken, Rutenber and others being also sung. The Society was assisted by Dr. A. L. Peace (organist) of Liverpool and Miss Eva Rich (vocalist). Mr. J. A. Rodgers was solo pianist and conductor.

On the 6th and 8th ult. the Albert Hall was the scene of the Sheffield Sunday School Union's Children's Festival. The beneficial effects of this well-managed musical event are incalculable. A juvenile choir of 500 voices, conducted by Dr. Coward, with Mr. J. W. Phillips at the organ, sang with commendable precision and a due regard to light and shade an excellent programme of part-songs, &c., by Sterndale Bennett (selection from 'May Queen'), Mendelssohn, Elgar ('As torrents in summer' from 'King Olaf'), Caldicott, Edward German and others.

The Chapeltown and District Harmonic Society has an honourable record, and to this the performance of 'Judas Maccabeus,' on the 9th ult., contributed another notable achievement. Mr. Thomas Bool conducted a capable band and chorus. At Owlerton, on the 8th ult., the augmented choir of the parish church gave an admirable performance of Romberg's 'Lay of the Bell,' under Mr. W. Marriott's direction; while on the same date 'Elijah' was performed in St. Mary's Church, Sheffield, with a chorus of 130 voices.

At the concert of the Chamber Music Society, on the 9th ult., Messrs. Josef Holbrooke, J. Saunders, Ernest Yonge, Herbert Withers, and Geoffrey Yates appeared, playing Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet and Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio in A minor. The tone and ensemble of the party were delightful, and in spite of an unfavourable acoustic environment, the musical results of the concert were very happy.

Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra visited Sheffield for the third Harrison Concert on the 12th ult., playing to a crowded audience.

The performance by the Ecclesfield Choral Society, on the 15th ult., of Cowen's 'The Rosemaiden' and Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night,' was a complete success. Mr. T. Brameld, the conductor, had worked wonders with his choral material and the singing was creditable to all concerned.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

In the series of Municipal Concerts to which I have more than once referred as being of exceptional interest in regard to their possibilities, two more have to be chronicled. That on January 23 consisted of chamber music, which is necessarily at a disadvantage in the large and resonant Town Hall, but Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet, sympathetically played by Messrs. Fricker, Elliott, Haigh, Giessing, and Neuwirth, proved highly acceptable. None the less was it enjoyed because it was taken by instalments, half in each part of the programme. Miss Susan Cover was the vocalist. On the 6th ult. the Municipal Orchestra appeared in a very interesting programme. Mr. Percy Godfrey conducted his Gipsy Suite entitled 'Lavengro,' which had not previously been heard in the North, and made a distinctly good impression by its concise, well-wrought form and varied colouring. Mr. Holbrooke's ingenious variations on 'Three Blind Mice,' given at a previous concert, were repeated, and two movements of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony were admirably played under Mr. Fricker's direction. Mr. Elliott played Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto artistically, and the Armley Choral Society, under its conductor, Mr. Pickard, sang with spirit a part of Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite.

At the Leeds Subscription Concert on January 27, Dr. Richter conducted a fine performance of Brahms's First Symphony, which, strange as it may seem, had never before been heard at Leeds. Beethoven's Fourth Pianoforte Concerto was played by Mr. Willy Scott in a fashion which showed great facility of execution and a genuine artistic temperament, though as yet he does not seem to have attained the highest level of pianoforte technique in such matters as beauty of touch and tone. The Philharmonic Chorus sang with excellent effect Sir Charles Stanford's motet 'The Lord of Might,' under his direction, as well as Beethoven's 'Calm sea and prosperous voyage.' The Queen's Hall Orchestra, which had made so great a success on its appearance at one of the Subscription Concerts, visited Leeds on its own account on the 2nd ult., when the people showed at once their interest and their economy by crowding the cheaper seats and leaving the more expensive ones severely alone. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted the 'Pathetic' Symphony, and Mrs. Wood charmingly sang Tchaikovsky's 'Joan of Arc' scena and Somervell's 'Shepherd's Cradle Song.' Though the sum of orchestral concerts is not great at Leeds, it cannot be said that any dearth has been felt during the past month, for I have yet two others to briefly chronicle. Mr. Edgar Haddock gave one of his popular 'Penny' concerts on January 30, when three movements of the 'Scotch' Symphony were, like another work I have already referred to, played in instalments, and a young violinist, Mr. Percy Kitson, showed considerable dexterity in Max Bruch's G minor Concerto. Some light music by Jacobi furnished the orchestra with its most favourable opportunity for displaying its powers under Mr. Haddock's very inspiring beat.

The visit of the Willy Hess Quartet to Leeds was an event of more than ordinary importance. Miss Eisele, a local pianist, deserves credit for securing its help at her concert on the 13th ult., and for arranging so admirable a programme—Bach's Third Violin Sonata in E, Beethoven's Third 'Rasoumowsky' Quartet in C, Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in B (in its revised form), and Richard Strauss's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor. The bare mention of these works, all of which were most ably played,—the Beethoven especially so—will indicate the exceptional interest of the well-attended concert. On the 15th ult. the Leeds Musical Union, under the direction of Mr. Bernard Johnson, gave a good programme of glees and the like, varied by some duets for two pianofortes, very sympathetically played by Messrs. N. Bell and P. Richardson, and on the 17th ult. the Leeds Bohemian Quartet Party was heard in works by Borodin and Weingartner, together with a curious pasticcio by the four Russians, Korsakow, Liadow, Borodin, and Glazounow, in honour of a third, Balaieff, whose name suggests the theme underlying the whole. On the 19th ult. the Leeds Symphony Society made its first public appearance this season. The amateur orchestra played a Haydn Symphony, and Miss Gertrude Wortley was the soloist in Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A. Mr. A. E. Grimshaw conducted. Concertos given by Mr. T. Child, Miss M. Cowle, Miss L. Parkin,—a clever and ambitious young pianist—and Mr. Arthur Haywood must be added to an unusually heavy list of Leeds events.

OTHER TOWNS.

On January 29 the Bradford Festival Choral Society gave an adequate all-round performance of the 'Golden Legend,' in which the principal parts were sustained by Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, Mr. Alex. Bevan and Mr. W. Chippindale. Not the least interesting feature of the event was a presentation made to the conductor, Dr. Cowen, on behalf of the choir, in honour of his birthday, which happened to fall on this date. On the 9th ult. the Queen's Hall Orchestra made its first appearance at Bradford, Miss Marie Hall's very artistic playing of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto being greatly appreciated, as was Mr. Wood's reading of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony. The Willy Hess Quartet, with Mr. W. Backhaus as pianist, took part in the Subscription Concert on the 12th ult., when Beethoven's Septet was the chief thing in the programme. Miss Susan Strong's fine singing, accompanied by Mr. Korbay, was exceedingly enjoyable. The following evening the Bradford Permanent Orchestra gave its fourth concert, and, with the aid of the West Riding Military Band, gave an unusually sonorous performance of Tchaikovsky's '1812' Overture. Mr. Arthur Hervey's two 'Tone Pictures' for orchestra were also included in the programme. The vocalists were Miss Mallalieu and Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Allen Gill was the conductor.

On the 5th ult. the Harrogate Choral Society gave a concert the peculiarity of which was the exclusion of choral music! Miss Wormald, Miss Martin, Messrs. Nicol and Evans were the vocalists, and the instrumentalists were Messrs. Birkby (violin) and Oppenheim (pianoforte), whose artistic playing was very enjoyable. Mr. C. L. Naylor, the Society's able conductor, contented himself with the rôle of accompanist, which he filled most satisfactorily. On the 15th ult., Mr. John Walton, a violoncellist well known in the North of England, gave an interesting programme of chamber music, assisted by Mr. E. Elliott (violin) and Miss Gertrude Wortley (pianoforte). Tchaikovsky's A minor Pianoforte Trio was included in the programme.

At the Huddersfield Subscription Concert on the 9th ult. Mr. Willy Hess's violin playing and Mr. Alfred Hollins's performances on organ and pianoforte were the chief features, Madame Effie Thomas, Madame Bertha Moore, and Messrs. Harrison and Earle being the vocalists. The Wakefield Chamber Concert on the 11th ult. took the form of a vocal recital by Mr. Plunket Greene, who was in excellent voice and sang sixteen songs with a force and variety of expression quite remarkable, even for him. The exceptionally fine accompaniments of Mr. S. Liddle had much to do with his success. Mr. Spencer Dyke contributed violin solos. At the Scarborough Chamber Concerts on January 25 and February 15 some important works were produced, including Tchaikovsky's great Trio in A minor (Op. 50), ably played by Messrs. Cass, Hutton, and Owen Williams.

Miscellaneous.

Miss Adèle Haas gave a successful pianoforte recital at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, on the 10th ult., when she was assisted by Signor Parisotti (vocalist) and Mr. Willem Coenen. The fair pianist has studied with advantage under Mr. Coenen, and from him she has acquired much of his characteristic style and artistic enthusiasm. The programme, which ranged from Mendelssohn to Liszt, and included the 'Waldstein' Sonata, furnished Miss Haas with full opportunity for her varied powers, and Scharwenka's Scherzo for Two Pianofortes, brilliantly performed by her and Mr. Coenen, roused great enthusiasm. A temporary lapse of memory, natural to all artistically-charged natures, in her playing of the Mendelssohn Fugue in E minor by no means detracted from the technical skill and poetic insight of her enjoyable performances.

Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, gave an interesting lecture at Kendal on the 9th ult., his theme being 'British Folk-Song,' a subject upon which he is acknowledged to be one of the highest authorities. In his concluding remarks Mr. Kidson very truly said: 'Early ballads frequently threw interesting side-lights on customs, manners and trains of thought which nowadays were quite obsolete. If our dialect words, as relics of an earlier language, were to be preserved (as they most assuredly should be), if our folk-lore was to be recalled, if only to be presently laughed at as foolish superstition, if the records of minor events which had helped to make history were to be kept, if anything that bore upon the bygone history of our country was to be remembered, then so should our folk-songs.'

The Morecambe Musical Festival—now in its fourteenth year—is announced to be held from April 27 to April 30 inclusive. The syllabus is of the usual varied and interesting nature, and moreover charged with that educational ideal for the love and cultivation of music which so commendably characterizes this competitive feast of music. The conductors and adjudicators are Dr. Elgar, Dr. McNaught, and Mr. Granville Bantock. The Secretary is Mr. H. Powell, Euston Grove, Morecambe.

The 'Turneezi leaf-holder,' which Mr. J. W. Aldous, of Lancaster, sends us, is an ingenious and very useful little invention for the music-desk. As it is automatic in its action and a great improvement upon the ordinary leaf-holder, which is chronically too tight or too loose, this recent invention fully justifies its phonetic name of 'Turneezi.'

The prize offered by the Worshipful Company of Musicians for a new musical setting of a Grace has been awarded to Dr. Charles Wood, of Cambridge, and an extra prize has been awarded to Mr. Arthur Henry Brown, of Brentwood, Essex.

Foreign Notes.

AACHEN.

Paul Waldthausen, councillor of justice, has presented to this city the sum of 136,000 marks, for the establishment of chamber-music concerts at cheap prices. Four are to be given every winter. For two the artists are to be drawn from the municipal orchestra, and for the other two concerts some well-known foreign trio or quartet parties are to be engaged. The donor wishes the interest of the fund to be spent every year in making the concerts as good as possible; if the interest together with the receipts should at any time be in excess of the expenditure, the surplus is to be bestowed on a deserving member of the municipal orchestra.

COPENHAGEN.

It is stated that August Enna has completed a new opera entitled 'Heisse Liebe.'

FLORENCE.

At a recent meeting of the Italian Bibliographical Society held in the Palazzo Vecchio, it was decided to try and induce the Ministry to publish the manuscript catalogue of the National Library; also to set apart a special section for music in the monthly reports of the Library.

FRANKENHAUSEN.

The earliest musical festival in this ancient city is generally considered to be the one held in 1810, under the direction of Spohr. The centenary of the performance of Haydn's 'Creation' (though not actually styled a festival), given by Georg Friedrich Bischoff in 1804, the organizer of the 1810 and subsequent festivals, is, however, to be celebrated at Whitsuntide. A guarantee fund has been raised, and several important choral societies have promised to co-operate.

FRANKFORT.

At the great gathering of musicians (Tonkünstlerversammlung) to be held in this city next June, there will be produced a symphony in six parts with choral ending by Jean Louis Nicodé. It bears the title 'Gloria, Ein Sturm- und Sonnenlied.' The composer has already written one choral symphony, 'Das Meer,' produced in 1888.

HAMBURG.

Richard Wagner was not successful with his early operas; he tried, nevertheless, again and again until at last fickle fortune smiled on him. Whether Siegfried Wagner will finally be recognised as a genius remains to be seen; meanwhile he follows in his father's earlier footsteps. His third opera, 'Der Kobold,' was produced here on January 29. The performance appears to have been admirable, and there were many recalls, but a first night is no real criterion. The music, it is said, has good points, though it cannot claim to originality. For the present the father's influence is naturally strong, and it is only in proportion as this decreases that one will be able to know how much the son has to say on his own account.

MILAN.

The three operas by Franco de Venezia, Gabriel Dupont, and Lorenzo Filiasi, which have been selected by the jury for the Sonzogno prize, are to be performed at Milan next May, first before a jury on three successive evenings, then afterwards in the same way, the public being admitted, and once again all three on one evening. After these various trials the jury will name the fortunate winner. The prize, it may be added, is £2,000.

MONTE CARLO.

Dr. Saint-Saëns's new opera 'Hélène' was successfully produced here on the 18th ult., with Madame Melba and M. Alvarez in the chief parts.

MUNICH.

Humperdinck's 'Dornröschen' has been produced here, and although the performance was excellent, the music does not appear to have aroused much interest. Frä. Tordek displayed both charm and poetry in her impersonation of Dornröschen.—Herr Felix Weingartner will conduct 'Tristan' twice during the Wagner performances in the autumn.

PARIS.

M. Albert Carré, director of the Opéra-Comique, whose contract expires on January 1, 1905, has applied for a renewal, to date from September 1, the opening of the autumn season. He has done this in order to feel assured as to the future in making arrangements with artists or in providing new scenery. There seems no doubt that his request will be granted avec empressement. M. Alfred Bruneau has begged M. Carré to release him from his duties as conductor of the orchestra, so that his new opera 'L'Enfant roi,' libretto by Zola, may be produced during the coming season.—M. Chaumié, Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, has just formulated the conditions to be attached to the subsidies of 15,000 francs granted by Parliament to the Colonne and the Chevallard concerts. By one of the covenants they are bound every year to perform a certain number of symphonic or lyrical works by French composers, which collectively will not take less than three hours in performance.—M. Albert Carré had the idea of giving Berlioz's 'Les Troyens' at the Opéra Comique in April, but certain difficulties in arranging the cast have decided him to substitute Gluck's 'Alceste,' which, it is said, has not been performed in its entirety since 1861. Beethoven's 'Fidelio' is also to be revived, with Madame Rose Caron in the title-rôle.—The competition which takes place every five years for the Rubinstein prize of the value of £200 will take place next year at Paris. The first was held at St. Petersburg, the second at Berlin, and the third at Vienna.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BRIGHTON.—Handel's 'Jephtha' was performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society on the 4th ult. The choir displayed excellent tone and sang with much spirit, notably in 'When his loud voice,' and the orchestra was fully efficient. The solos with which this work abounds were excellently interpreted by Miss Alice Holman, Miss Palgrave Turner, Mr. Frank Tebbutt and Mr. Harry Dearth. Mr. Robert Taylor conducted with his accustomed skill and alertness.

CANTERBURY.—The second oratorio service this season took place in the Cathedral on the 11th ult. under similar conditions to those of the previous occasion. The oratorio selected was Handel's 'Samson,' which was judiciously abridged to bring it within the limit of two hours. The singing of the choir throughout was excellent, the attack being good, and the solo music was ably interpreted by Miss Lizzie Burgess, Miss Frederica Richardson, Mr. J. Pearson and Mr. F. Noakes. There was a complete and efficient orchestra (led by Mr. Cecil Gann), and Dr. Perrin, who conducted, is to be congratulated on the successful result of his efforts. Mr. W. T. Harvey presided at the organ.

FORFAR (N.B.).—The Philharmonic Society, under the baton of Mr. M. B. Kidd, gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'Caractacus' on the 1st ult. The soloists were Miss Jenny Taggart, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Robert Burnett and Mr. Alfred C. Young. Mr. W. H. Cole's string orchestra, with Miss Jean Hill and Mr. D. W. Neill at the pianoforte and harmonium respectively, supplied the accompaniments.

HARTLEBURY.—The Choral Society gave two concerts on the 5th and 6th ult. The programme on the 6th ult. consisted entirely of Dr. Elgar's music, the chief items being the 'Coronation Ode' and four choral songs from the 'Bavarian Highlands.' The music, under the able direction of Mr. R. A. Taylor, received a very good interpretation. The principal vocalists in the 'Coronation Ode' were Miss Hilda Bramwell, Miss Sheppard, Mr. Adshead and the Rev. A. Griffiths.

HOLT.—The choir of the Congregational Chapel gave a performance of Anderton's 'Norman Baron' and Waddington's 'John Gilpin' on the 3rd ult. Ably directed by Mr. E. C. Beaver, the choir sang with good attack and was well supported by the orchestra.

LLANELLY.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the Tabernacle Choral Society before a crowded audience on the 2nd ult. The soloists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Katie Davies, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys and Mr. David Brazell. Mr. Hulley led the orchestra, while Miss Blodwen Davies and Mr. Luther Owen were at the organ and pianoforte respectively. Mr. C. Mendwy Davies conducted, this being the twenty-fifth oratorio given by the Society under his direction.

MONMOUTH.—The Monmouthshire Musical Society gave its annual concerts on the 9th and 10th ult., when the programme included Haydn's 'Creation' (Parts 1 and 2), Stanford's 'Revenge,' and Schubert's 'Alphonso and Estrella' Overture. The soloists were Madame Siviter, Mr. W. Bennett, and Mr. S. Fairman. The chorus and orchestra of 100 performers did most creditable work under the skilful direction of Mr. C. H. Payne, who is to be congratulated on his successful efforts in giving concerts of a high standard in Monmouth.

MONTREAL.—The Oratorio Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' trilogy complete for the first time here at the Windsor Hall on January 28, a foretaste of the work having been given last spring at the Cycle of Musical Festivals directed by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, when the 'Death of Minnehaha' was performed under Mr. Reyner's capable guidance. The same conductor was now responsible for the complete trilogy, and a very admirable interpretation was given by both choir and orchestra. The solo vocalists were Madame Benda, Mr. E. P. Johnson and Mr. Arthur Phillips. A public rehearsal was given on the previous evening, and on both occasions the work was received with warm appreciation.

SOUTHEND.—The Choral Society performed Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' at its concert in the Victoria Hall on the 16th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Maude Willby, Miss Lillian Barnes, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Thomas Rainger. Mr. W. Whiteman conducted. The miscellaneous second part included Benedict's 'Hunting Song,' Pinsuti's 'Eldorado' and Maunder's 'Thor's War Song.'

SYDNEY (N.S.W.).—The Liedertafel gave its fifth concert this season in the Town Hall on December 16, when a varied programme was presented, the chief features of which were Schumann's Choral Ballad 'The Luck of Edenhall,' Schubert's 'Great is Jehovah'; and the part-songs 'The Spring is come,' Dudley Buck; 'The Lotus Flower,' Schumann; and Hatton's 'When Evening's Twilight.' The Liedertafel orchestra assisted, and the solo vocalists were Miss Elsie Dwyer, Mr. Ernest Mozar, Mr. Harold Hinton, and Mr. Ernest Williams. Mr. W. Arundel Orchard conducted.

WEYBRIDGE.—The Choral Society gave a concert on the 10th ult., when the programme consisted of Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. The choir sang excellently, especially in the opening choruses, and was most ably supported by Mr. Fransella's Orchestra, which was also responsible for an admirable performance of the Symphony. The soloists were Miss Ethel Lovegrove, and Messrs. Iver McKay and Graham. Mr. A. Burnell, the hon. conductor, deserves to be congratulated not only upon his training of the choir, but for his enterprise in organizing so important and successful a concert.

WORCESTER.—The Festival Choral Society performed Elgar's 'King Olaf' on the 16th ult. with much success. The choir, inspired possibly by the presence in the audience of the distinguished composer, has rarely sung with more spirit, expression, and enthusiasm. The orchestra was also equally successful. The solo vocalists were Madame Siviter, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Frederic Austin. The performance concluded with an ovation which was shared by the conductor, Mr. Ivor Atkins, and the composer.

Answers to Correspondents.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.—(1) See Dr. Iliffe's Primer entitled 'Analysis of Bach's 48 Preludes and Fugues.' (2) For a proper interpretation of the shakes in the Prelude in G minor, No. 16 (Part I.) of Bach's '48,' you cannot do better than follow the rule laid down by Mr. Dannreuther in his Primer on Ornamentation, in the chapter devoted to Bach: 'Shakes and mordents upon a prolonged note, when such note is tied on to another and shorter note of the same pitch, stop before the latter, without emphasis and without closing notes.' (3) A tonal fugue is when the answer is modified according to prescribed rules, so that it shall remain within a given compass, or within a given key; a real fugue is when the answer is at a measured interval to the subject, note for note.

MELODIST.—(1) The tune called 'True Elijah'—a curious designation—though in a different form from that which you send us, appeared in 'Sacred Harmony' (1789) without any composer's name thereto. The name 'Darlaston' was doubtless subsequently assigned to it, and Henry Purcell's name added as the composer thereof. We cannot trace from what composition (if any) of Purcell's the tune, in either of its forms, is adapted. Perhaps some of our readers can furnish the desired information. (2) Raff's Op. 15 is entitled 'Six poèmes' for pianoforte solo.

CHORISTER.—Join a good choir trained by a competent choirmaster, or obtain the privilege of attending the rehearsals. The expression you use in your letter, 'pick up all I can' is just the right spirit in which to work. 'Pick up' all the good points, and turn a deaf ear to all that offends your taste. The exercise of careful observation and attentive listening—not to one choir only, but to more, if possible—will prove to be invaluable to you in qualifying for the office of choirmaster.

EBOR.—The meaning of ♩ = ♩ at the change of rhythm in Stanford's Magnificat in B flat signifies that the speed of the preceding movement is to be retained, note for note, or crotchet for crotchet.

J. D.—Your desire to become a 'flute player' (or flautist) should certainly be encouraged, the more especially as you are young. You should be able to get good tuition in the city where you reside, and moreover you will probably have no difficulty in finding an amateur orchestra, playing under a competent conductor, which you could join upon being qualified.

SKIDDAW.—It is not necessary for any 'institution' to possess a charter in order to issue 'cap, gown and hood.' Many are unfortunately captivated and hoodwinked by such adornments, which after all may only clothe the nakedness of the musicianship of those who don such garments so easily acquired.

W. E. D.—Although your daughter is 'big and strong,' she is too young to begin a course of voice-training. You say that 'in Germany voices get spoilt in training'; true, but the fatherland has no monopoly in such misdoings. Let the girl sing naturally, without any undue strain to her voice, and the promise she shows will probably be fulfilled.

C. G.—The following numbers in the oratorio of 'Judas Maccabæus' were omitted in the performances of the work as given by the Royal Choral Society under the direction of the late Sir Joseph Barnby (the numbers refer to the Novello edition):—Nos. 16 to 19 (inclusive), 23, 24, 28, 29, 40, 47, 48, 51, 54 to 56, 61 to the end.

L. R. A. M.—(1) The curious, old-fashioned notation in the penultimate bar of the Scherzo of Hummel's Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 106) is nothing more than an ordinary arpeggio of the chord of D. (2) In Charles Mayer's Pianoforte Study in A minor, bars 21 and 25, the note F in the treble should certainly be sharpened.

ENQUIRER.—With all due respect to the composer, the time indication ♩ in Schubert's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' is misleading if taken literally. It is true that the qualification adagio appears, but the piece is adagio in style rather than in pace. A metronomic rate of 'about crotchet = 80' seems to us a natural speed.

VILLAGER.—For sacred works with stringed accompaniment of a similar character to 'The Prodigal Son,' 'The Holy City,' or 'Daughter of Jairus,' see: 'Rebekah' (Barnby), 'The Gate of Life' (Leoni), 'Emmaus' (Brewer), 'St. Mary Magdalen' (Stainer), 'The last night at Bethany' (Lee Williams), and 'Lauda Sion' (Mendelssohn).

R. J. M. M.—(1) Yes, special covers for binding each volume of THE MUSICAL TIMES can be obtained from the publishers. (2) The signs — and = placed above a note, somewhat to the left of it, indicate a backfall and a double backfall respectively, ornaments now obsolete.

RIPONIAN.—(1) 'Elizabeth's Prayer' ('Tannhäuser') is arranged for the pianoforte by Lange, Leitert, Löw, and Spindler, all of which may be obtained of Messrs. Novello. (2) Portraits of Bach, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn 'about one shilling each' can be obtained of Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel.

TENOR.—There is no reason why artificial teeth should spoil the tone of the voice if they are properly made and fitted. It is quite probable that some of the greatest singers have had to resort to artificial dentition, but of this we have no certain knowledge.

F. O.—Music to accompany the recitation of Victor Hugo's 'The trumpeter's betrothed' has been composed by F. Thomé (English version), and by Saint-Saëns, to the original French form of the poem. Both publications may be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

G. D.—For some moderately easy trios for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, see compositions for this combination of instruments by Bergmann, Brunner, Hille, Hopfe, Rosler, and Spindler.

M. M.—There is so much difference of opinion in regard to the speed-rates of the pieces you name, that you had better rely upon your own judgment as to their metronomic interpretation.

A. H. F.—Full particulars concerning the Mendelssohn Scholarship can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary to the Committee, Mr. J. Edward Street, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey. See page 146 of our advertisement columns.

H. V.—For books on the flute, see 'History of the Boehm flute' by C. Welch, and Boehm's 'Essay on the construction of flutes'; for studies, &c., for the flute, see Vivian's 'Scale exercises' and Boehm's '24 Capriccios,' published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte and Co.

A COUNTRY READER.—We regret that we cannot give portraits of 'the gentlemen who write musical criticisms in the London papers,' either singly or in a group. They may 'be taken seriously,' as you say, but not in a photograph.

PRECISE.—Pronounce 'lullaby' as written, not 'lul-a-bee,' even though some poet (?) makes it rhyme with 'baby.' There is no accounting for such things, though it would not be difficult to pronounce an opinion upon them.

A. L.—Sydney Smith, the composer of drawing-room pieces for the pianoforte, died in London on March 3, 1889, and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. His full name was Edward Sydney Smith.

ETHEL.—Thanks; but 'The Pets of Prima Donnas' is hardly a suitable subject for THE MUSICAL TIMES; moreover, it is too vast.

A. B. C.—We know not—we wish we did—of any device that will improve the acoustic properties of a building in which 'there is absolutely no resonance.'

ORTHOEPY.—As the word 'pianist' is of Italian origin, it is pronounced in accordance with that language, the first vowel as ee.

NAOMI.—The method has a reputation, but it is our rule not to pass an opinion upon any methods.

T. W. (also C. M. T.).—See page 153, column I, of the present issue.

(BASS).

Licentiate (Artist) of the Royal Academy of Music, of the Gloucester, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury Festivals, &c.

STOURBRIDGE.—"Mr. Henry Sunman, the well-known Oxford Bass, met with a most cordial reception. His songs, Elgar's 'War Song,' Schumann's 'Ich grolle nicht,' Schubert's 'Litanei,' Handel's 'Si tra i ceppi,' and Cobb's 'Cavaliers and Roundheads,' were admirably calculated to display his wonderful gifts as a vocalist. In Elgar's 'War Song,' which gives a most lurid picture of the phases of battle, and in the beautiful 'Litanei,' of Schubert, he was equally at home, singing with a power and reserve which charmed his hearers, and the ovation which he received was thoroughly well deserved."—County Express, Dec. 26, 1903.

"CREATION."—"Henry Sunman has lost none of his popularity in Deal, and his perfectly controlled musical bass, if anything altered, gained in richness since he last sang to us. His clear enunciation, and the way in which he gives the fullest effect to both words and music, make it a real pleasure to hear him."—Deal Mercury, Feb. 6, 1904.

THE WILDERNESS

AN ANTHEM

COMPOSED BY

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

Folio edition, with the Composer's original Organ Accompaniment fully set out, 4s. net.
Octavo Edition (compressed accompaniment), 8d.

A classic of "English Church Music," Wesley's setting of Isaiah xxxv, ("The Wilderness and the solitary place") takes the highest rank as an anthem in several respects: technical construction, organ accompaniment and stop registration, charm of variety, melodic beauty, and, above all, poetic inspiration. One of the finest of his anthem masterpieces, "The Wilderness" will long preserve the memory of Samuel Sebastian Wesley in "quires and places where they sing."

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls"), and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

NEW WORK.

STOOD THE MOURNFUL

MOTHER WEeping

(STABAT MATER DOLOROSA)

ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

REV. J. MONSELL

MUSIC BY

F. ROLLASON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

"We know nothing of the composer, but he must be possessed of some courage to produce an English version of the 'Stabat Mater.' The text is translated by the Rev. J. Monsell, D.D. The work is divided into the usual ten numbers, with slight modifications. The opening chorus, 'Stood the mournful mother weeping,' is in F minor, and has a striking and passionate introduction. With the entry of the voices, the treatment is severe, and in the ecclesiastical style, but the expression is modern. The first part is employed in the last chorus, 'When my mortal body, dying,' but then changing to the major at 'Take me soul to Paradise,' and concluding with a well-worked-out fugue at 'To adore Thee, my God.' No. 6, 'Holy Father, let affliction,' is one of the most elaborate numbers. It is for soprano solo and chorus. In this the influence of Dvořák seems apparent, as that of Rossini appears in No. 4, 'For the sins of each offender,' but there is no direct imitation. The composer has individuality, and is a skilled musician. No. 9, 'Make me with His stripes be stricken,' beginning with a tenor solo followed by a solo for bass, and concluding with a quartet, is a fine piece of writing; and the whole composition reveals not only a high aim, but the ability to achieve it."—Birmingham Daily Post.

Published separately:

No. 5. CHORUS (unaccompanied), "JESU, FOUNT OF LOVE," Price 1½d.

"No. 5, 'Jesu, Fount of Love,' is a chorus, anthem-like in character, the sensuous harmony of which cannot fail to touch the feelings, if it be well sung, without accompaniment, as suggested."—Coventry Herald.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS

WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Single Specimen copies sent post-free at the following prices: Hymns, with Tunes, 2s. : Hymns only, 8d.

PREFACE.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason, the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern, so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

The lack of certain well-known hymns in that book and the need of extra hymns for certain occasions are often felt. This is clear from the fact that many supplemental appendices and leaflets are now used with it, particularly books for mission services, children's use, and other special occasions.

It may be said by many that we already have too many hymns, and that a large number are most unsuitable. There is no subject upon which persons differ more thoroughly than the suitability of different hymns. No two people will ever agree as to all the hymns in any collection. The only way of dealing satisfactorily with this problem seems to be to give a comprehensive compilation, together with guidance as to the character of each hymn. Hence, in the index of first lines a letter has been prefixed to each hymn giving an indication as to its characteristic—whether a hymn of direct praise, a prayer, or sentimental, historical, etc., etc. Those who object to hymns of any particular class can, therefore, easily avoid their use.

Guided by these two principles, hymns have been included for the following reasons:—

1. Hymns which, being in constant request, are inserted, not necessarily because of their merit, but rather because they have been found to be of real use in many cases.
2. Since the formation of other hymn books, much greater prominence has been given to music in connection with Choral Celebrations, and with this has grown a want of more hymns, especially short ones of one or two verses for different parts of the service.
3. So also has there grown a demand for further hymns on Almsgiving, for Processionals of a greater length than usual, for Harvest, Flower, and Mission Services, besides other special occasions.
4. Finally, it is felt by very many to be a mistake to accustom children to the use of a Children's hymn book which will be discarded when they have grown older. Far better is it to accustom them at once, when young, to love the hymn book which they will use in after life. For this purpose a few more children's hymns than are supplied in other books seem to be wanted.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S

PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

“Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul have to be congratulated upon another success.”—Sheffield Independent.

“The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct ‘scenes.’ The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—‘The Traitor at the Table,’ ‘The Denial,’ ‘The Condemnation before Pilate,’ ‘The Mockery on Calvary,’ ‘The Shadow of Death,’ and ‘The Holy Sepulchre.’ The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul’s previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the ‘Holy City,’ and other of the composer’s works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author’s lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul’s new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition.”—Musical Standard.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE
A SACRED CANTATA
FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised. Mr. Gaul was engaged on this, his latest work, for about three years, and we believe that all who hear it will agree that the time was very profitably spent."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

The opening Chorus of this Anthem is majestic. Each part has strength and effect with powerful modulations. The next Chorus is bright, telling, and lively, and works up to a splendid ff on the words "Open me the gates"; the voices moving in triumphant style. This is followed by an impressive Bass Solo "The same stone which the builders refused." The music throughout is melodious, lofty, and spirited.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND
EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY,
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

Separately, from the above:

THE RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS. Price 6d.
THE CANTICLES. Price 4d.

STRING QUARTET

IN A MINOR

COMPOSED BY

JOHN B. McEWEN.

1st Violin, 2s.; 2nd Violin, 2s.; Viola, 2s.; Violoncello, 2s.
Score, 5s.

THE TIMES.

On the present occasion, however, the quartet gained enormously in impressiveness by the superior performance, and, indeed, the beautiful slow movement created a very unusual impression.

DAILY NEWS.

A second hearing certainly gave me a different idea of the composition, possibly because the performance was better in every respect. . . . The slow movement, with its Scottish first subject and its really beautiful second subject, is music in the best sense of the word. Mr. McEwen has the gift of thematic invention, and he knows how to develop his themes in an interesting manner. So many modern composers of chamber music allow us to see that the development sections of their works are the merest music-making; Mr. McEwen is not of those musical manufacturers. The quartet should be in the répertoire of chamber concerts, and we ought to hear others of the composer's works.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Its merits are such that a second hearing serves to increase regard and admiration. The Andante quasi Adagio, with its characteristic Scottish folk-tune theme and beautiful second subject, is, indeed, admirably written and exceedingly interesting, while the Vivace, in which—as also in the Finale—the composer makes special and very effective use of the viola, is scarcely less taking.

STANDARD.

The first and second movements are built up with themes possessing character expressed in Scottish musical idiom and treated with pronounced skill. Of the two the second is the better. This is an Andante quasi Adagio, which shows that the composer has the power to express depth of sentiment. The succeeding movement, headed Vivace, is bright and vigorous, these attributes being heightened by a central section in slow tempo containing some charming passages for the viola. In the Finale, reference is made to the principal themes of the preceding movements, and an effective climax closes an interesting and scholarly composition.

OBSERVER.

The work is a masterly composition, strong and fresh in thematic material.—Scottish musical idioms are freely used—and ingenious, free, and picturesque in treatment.

SUNDAY TIMES.

The part-writing is always interesting and scholarly, and in the second number—an Andante quasi Adagio, built up with an expressive melody—there are several passages of great beauty. The Vivace, containing a charming slow section, is a captivating movement, and the Finale will probably improve on intimacy.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

The work, to begin with, is cast according to a true and rightly classical mode; it is throughout clever, and perhaps the most telling criticism upon it lies in the obvious fact that too often its liveliness does duty for life. Scottish it is in every detail of its being; and Mr. McEwen has without any question adapted the Scottish manner of musical thought to his really good sense of harmony, counterpoint, and instrumental combination.

MORNING ADVERTISER.

The succeeding quartet—one in A minor, by Mr. John B. McEwen—touched the main spring of modern development, so far as the term can be applied to music that is necessarily limited in its power of expression. There were moments when it seemed almost as if the composer were writing for a quartet of strings with the sound of the orchestra in his ear. Full justice, however, must be rendered him for the admirable manner in which he caught the peculiar glow of Scotland's pathetic minstrelsy.

THE WORLD.

It was a work well worth listening to, for it has great freshness of feeling and shows no little skill. It is Scotch, and is not ashamed of its nationality, nor does it attempt to hide its origin beneath the thin disguise of an English accent. Mr. McEwen's themes are mostly in the nature of Scotch folk-songs, and their varied expression gives him all the musical contrasts he needs. He uses them discreetly and does not get beyond the limits of chamber music, as so many modern writers do in their most expressive moments. . . . There is a refreshing natural note in the whole, and in the slow movement we have moments of real beauty, while in the trio of the Scherzo there is an impressive and cleverly used viola solo.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his "Suite Venitienne" at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. . . . In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS

BY

AGNES HONORIA LEEDS,

LICENTIATE OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

108 pp. Oblong Folio, profusely illustrated in colours, bound in coloured paper board covers, cloth back, price 7s. 6d.

"MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS" is a book which appeals to the minds of children between the ages of four and eight. Knowing the love which these little folks have for pictures, and the educational value of pictorial aids in imparting knowledge to those of tender years, the author has embodied in the present work a system of teaching notation by means of illustrations of familiar objects, a method which she has employed for many years with the greatest success. The scheme is entirely systematic and progressive, and by its means the child-pupil is led to form an actual friendship with the individual notes.

With regard to the value of notes, the method followed is that of grouping them into one FAMILY—the members of which become personally known to the pupil—the value of each note being clearly indicated by its degree of family relationship. Thus we have "Mr. Semibreve, Mrs. Minim, Master Crotchet, Miss Quaver, Master Semiquaver, and Baby Demisemiquaver." Furthermore, the child is initiated in a Game of Exchanging Notes, according to the respective values of the various notes.

The book also contains Elementary Ear Exercises and a special chapter is devoted to Signs and Ornaments. Other sections are Scales in One Octave, Easy Sight-reading Exercises, Easy Finger Exercises, together with little Solos, and Duets for Teacher and Pupil, and for little Pupils by themselves.

JOHN HARRISON'S SUCCESS.

THE TIMES says:

"The first of the songs, which were sung in German, with capital expression, by Mr. John Harrison: is a 'Friedensanzählung.'"

THE STANDARD says:

"The two principal tenor solos were finely sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE DAILY NEWS says:

"Mr. Harrison, the tenor, sang with a sense of dramatic emphasis one had not expected from him, and at the same time the quality of his voice was good."

THE MORNING POST says:

"Of two tenor songs, one 'The Vision of Peace,' the other from the last act, both are modelled on Wagner; the second is the more striking. The orchestration in the first is heavy, so that the vocalist has a hard fight. Mr. John Harrison sang both extremely well."

THE DAILY GRAPHIC says:

"Two of them well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says:

"The solo parts of which were taken in first-rate style by Mr. John Harrison."

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says:

"Two long solos allotted to the hero were sung by Mr. John Harrison, who earned great applause by his beautiful voice and method, and his sincere and rehned dramatic expression. His performances stamp him as an artist of the first rank."

THE GLOBE says:

"Two tenor solos, well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE STAR says:

"Both were sung with conspicuous beauty of voice and expression by Mr. John Harrison, who thereby showed himself more than equal to the severest of artistic tasks."

MISS LILLIE WORMALD

(SOPRANO).

GENTLEMEN'S CONCERTS (ORCHESTRAL),

MANCHESTER, FEBRUARY 29, 1904.

(Conductor: Dr. HANS RICHTER.)

Manchester Guardian says:

"The 'Couplets du Mysoli'—best of all the duet pieces for soprano voice and flute—were delightfully sung by Miss Lillie Wormald, who, as a light and agile soprano, has scarcely any rival among English singers of the present day. . . . In the two extremely delicate selections from Mozart Miss Wormald was also completely successful, and was very warmly applauded."

Manchester Courier says:

"Miss Lillie Wormald still retains her attractive style, and her voice has of late gained in volume and flexibility."

Manchester Evening News says:

"Miss Lillie Wormald sang two arias by Mozart, one from the 'Magic Flute,' and the other, 'Deh vieni, non tardar,' from the 'Marriage of Figaro.' They were well chosen to display the voice and style of the singer, who seems to be going from strength to strength in her profession."

Manchester Daily Dispatch says:

"Miss Lillie Wormald was the vocalist, and sang with excellent taste and sympathetic expression."

For terms and vacant dates apply—

MISS

(CONTRALTO).

"With much pleasure do I desire to record my very high opinion of Miss Fredrica Richardson's great gifts and attainments as a vocalist. Her voice, with an extensive compass ranging from contralto into the mezzo-soprano region, is full, rich, and commanding in its tone and power. Her phrasing and methods of expression are definite, artistic, and eloquent. I am sure that a career of distinction and usefulness awaits Miss Richardson in the oratorio and concert-room departments of her art."

(Signed) E. H. TURPIN,

Hon. Sec., R.C.O.;

Warden, Trinity Coll., London;

Examiner, College of Preceptors, &c.

COVENTRY MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"ORPHEUS" (GLUCK).

Coventry Standard says: "A feature of the performance was the artistic rendering of the most exacting character of Orpheus by Miss Fredrica Richardson. Miss Richardson possesses a charming contralto voice of beautiful quality, which she used with much dramatic power. The recitatives were declaimed in such a manner as to show a keen conception of the character, and the airs were sung with an impassioned earnestness which the audience was not slow to appreciate."

Midland Daily Telegraph says: "A notable feature of this part of the concert was the fine singing of the difficult contralto part of Orpheus by Miss Fredrica Richardson, who was especially successful in the aria 'Che Faro.'"

RUGBY PHILHARMONIC.

Rugby News says: "'Slowly, slowly' introduced Ursula (Miss Fredrica Richardson) to the audience, and she received quite an ovation at the close of her solo, which was again accorded her for her subsequent efforts. . . . 'Virgin, who lovest' was exquisitely given."

Northampton Herald says: "The exquisite mellowness and refinement of her beautiful contralto voice more than sufficed to earn for her the encores—including a double recall—which rewarded her efforts. Each of her songs—C. Wilson's 'Let me be thine,' the old English ballad 'Love is a sickness,' and Somervell's 'Shepherd's Cradle Song'—enabled her to demonstrate the many fine qualities of her vocal organ. 'Annie Laurie,' given as an encore, has seldom been more beautifully sung, while her gracefully tender rendering of 'Still wie die Nacht' was quite worthy of the double recall."

BALLADS.

Midland News says: "An excellent programme had been arranged, comprising many of the compositions from the pen of Dr. Cowen. Their exposition was entrusted to Miss Fredrica Richardson, of London, a contralto of rare attainments. Her selections were chosen entirely from Dr. Cowen's works, the composer playing the accompaniments. 'The Promise of Life' was given in a manner rarely heard."

He gave a delightful rendering of 'Good-night, Beloved,' and an old sea-song entitled 'The Lowland Sea,' and in response to an encore he substituted 'Myrra,' which was charmingly interpreted."—Norwich Daily Press.

"The Cavatina, 'Distressful nature fainting sinks,' stood out in bold relief as the most delicate piece of solo-singing in the whole concert, and won him a well-merited encore. In the air, 'The traveller stands perplex'd,' he was likewise altogether admirable."—THE SEASONS.

His songs, Elgar's 'War Song,' Schumann's 'Ich grolle nicht,' Schubert's 'Litanei,' Handel's 'Si tra i ceppi,' and Cobb's 'Cavaliers and Roundheads,' were admirably calculated to display his wonderful gifts as a vocalist. In Elgar's 'War Song,' which gives a most lurid picture of the phases of battle, and in the beautiful 'Litanei,' of Schubert, he was equally at home, singing with a power and reserve which charmed his hearers, and the ovation which he received was thoroughly well deserved."—County Express, Dec. 26, 1903.

"CREATION."—"Henry Sunman has lost none of his popularity in Deal, and his perfectly controlled, musical bass has, if anything altered, gained in richness since he last sang to us. His clear enunciation, and the way in which he gives the fullest effect to both words and music, make it a real pleasure to hear him."—Deal Mercury, Feb. 6, 1904.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

EDWARD MACDOWELL.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

Que j'aime les œuvres de ce jeune compositeur Américain MacDowell! Quel musicien! Il est sincère et personnel—quel poète—quelles exquises harmonies!

JULES MASSENET.

These words of the eminent French composer, written with the authority and mature judgment which carry conviction, excite curiosity as to the life and life-work of the artist thus eulogised. Will M. Massenet's pronouncement bear investigation? Can America produce a son so gifted? These questions can be answered sincerely and emphatically of two months, and received much stringent criticism which doubtless was beneficial.

In 1876, with a mother's devotion, Mrs. MacDowell went with him to Paris. The boy was then fifteen. He entered the Paris Conservatoire de Musique, he being one of the very few elected out of 230 candidates. He studied under Marmontel (pianoforte) and Savard (theory). Many things at the Conservatoire shocked the boy's artistic conscience. The professors never hesitated to mutilate a pianoforte classic if it contained anything that seemed to them uncanny. For instance, whole slices were cut out of the development section of Weber's Pianoforte Sonata in A flat! the first movement of which was chosen as a Morceau de Concours. It was no uncommon thing for these professors to insert bars of their own manufacture in a work of art, in order, as they thought, to increase its effect. If, in editing classic pianoforte in the affirmative. Moreover, few indeed are dually endowed with such executive and creative genius as that possessed by the distinguished musician who forms the subject of this Biographical Sketch.

Edward Alexander MacDowell was born in New York City on December 18, 1861. He is descended from an old Quaker family of Scotch-Irish extraction—hence his patronymic—who emigrated to America about 150 years ago. Never a prodigy, he was as a child encouraged to play the pianoforte as a recreative enjoyment. His first teachers were Juan Buitrago, a South American, and Pablo Desvernine, a Cuban, who had studied under Thalberg and Kalkbrenner, and who advised his youthful pupil to go abroad for the purpose of further study. The boy, while still at home, had the advantage of hearing Teresa Carreño play. MacDowell played to her every morning for a period sonatas, Marmontel came across a chord that seemed to him too Teutonic (or, perchance, ultra-dominant) he coolly altered it to suit his Gallic taste. Marmontel's pianoforte class was distinctly cosmopolitan. It consisted of nine Frenchmen, an Italian, a Spaniard, an American (Edward MacDowell himself), and a Cuban of great talent, and to cap the climax a full-blooded darkie, from Matanzas (Cuba), who won the first prize. The curriculum at the Conservatoire had somewhat the nature of a mechanical grind. For instance, nine classes a week were devoted to pianoforte, harmony and solfège. This last course consisted among other things of singing at sight in all the eight clefs! 'I had placed before me,' recalls Dr. MacDowell, 'a version of the repeating-note Variation in the Kreutzer Sonata in which the clef was changed at every third note! The transposition of Bach's fugues—e.g., from the key of D to that of B—formed another item in this hardening process, in addition to incessant scale practice.*

No wonder that these things jarred on a musician so poetically-minded as young MacDowell. His dissatisfaction with the Conservatoire and its professors' methods reached a climax at the July Concours. For his playing of the mutilated Weber sonata he received much applause; but the reading at sight of a manuscript composition composed—nay, manufactured—by a member of the jury, sealed his fate. He had played more than half this precious piece when the crescendoing titters of the audience convinced him that something was wrong—sure enough he was playing the thing in the minor instead of in the major key! Without troubling himself as to the result, he at once jumped into the major, 'with an effect,' as he says, 'of the sun suddenly shining from a coal-hole. It was like the coping-stone of a joke, and the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds.' This Phœbus-like 'effect' however failed to impress the jury; they failed to see the joke, and MacDowell failed to get a prize. Another bright ray of sunshine in his Paris experiences was the brilliant performance, by Nicolas Rubinstein, of Tchaïkovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor at the first of the concerts of Russian music (September 9) given during the Paris Exhibition of 1878.*

Tired of Paris, and weary of its Conservatoire, young MacDowell turned his steps towards Germany. His first experiences there were as unsatisfactory as those in the French capital. He went to Stuttgart, and in less than a month he discovered that the pedantic and pedagogic habits of Lebert did not suit him. At this time Emile Sauret, to whom MacDowell's mother had shown some kindness in America, advised that the boy should go to Wiesbaden to study under Karl Heymann, the distinguished Dutch pianist, who, till ill-health compelled him to give up the career of a virtuoso, passed like a comet through Europe, meeting everywhere with brilliant success. As Heymann was not to begin teaching (at the Frankfort Conservatorium) till the autumn, MacDowell spent the summer of 1879 at Wiesbaden, studying the piano with Louis Ehlert, who however flatly refused to give him lessons, saying, 'I shall be glad to study with you.' At the Wiesbaden Kursaal MacDowell heard much new music. Ehlert, who thought that Bülow would be a better teacher than Heymann for his young friend, wrote to Bülow asking him if he would take MacDowell as a pianoforte pupil. Without having seen the boy the irascible Hans angrily replied asking how he (Ehlert) dared to suggest such a silly thing; he (Bülow) was not a music-teacher—anyway, he 'could not waste his time on an American boy.'

Thereupon MacDowell went to Frankfort and entered the Conservatorium, of which Raff was then Director and Professor of Composition, and Heymann one of the teachers of pianoforte. 'Heymann,' says Dr. MacDowell, 'was a strange little man—very slightly built, with a large head and rather protruding forehead. His flat nose, dark, almost beady eyes, and high cheek-bones gave him a Mongolian cast of features. His people were very strict Jews, and, in deference to his father's wishes, he would never eat at a Christian's expense nor in a Christian house. I told him I was a Quaker. This seemed to satisfy him completely, and we often dined together at a restaurant in what I would now call a back slum. Heymann's teaching was inspiring to the last degree. He was the one pianist I have ever heard who, get as near the pianoforte as you could, remained a mystery as to how he did the things we heard. The simplest passage became a spray of flashing jewels in his hands. A melody seemed to have words when he played it. He produced tone-colours that, like Alpine sun-effects, were inexhaustible; yet each one, fleeting as it was, more beautiful than the last. His technique, while always of the "convulsive" order in quick passages, seemed mysteriously capable of anything. He was a marvel: he had a poor wrist, and yet sometimes when he sat down to show me a wrist passage, a kind of quiver would run over him—then, behold, the thing would be trilled off in the same supernatural way as all the rest.'

Dr. MacDowell's recollections of Raff are very interesting. In earlier days poverty had so gripped this celebrated composer that he was compelled to do such hack work as orchestrating waltzes at the remuneration of three shillings an hour! and later his salary as Director of the newly-founded Conservatory (known as Dr. Hoch's Conservatorium) was only £300 yearly. 'Raff at first seemed rather formidable,' recalls MacDowell. 'When Heymann introduced me to him as having been brought up in the "French School," Raff flared up and said that there was no such thing as "schools" to-day, that all national musical traits were common property, and that everyone made use of them according to his attainments and taste.' In regard to Raff's appearance, he continues: 'The clear-cut features, closely-cropped white moustache, short, military beard, and above all, the slightly frowning, penetrating, keen expression in his blue eyes, made one feel as if he might be a bit tigerish. His head—which was entirely bald, save two flat tufts of hair over the ears and a very narrow fringe at the back—in some positions reminded one remarkably of Shakespeare's. We always spoke French together. To me, coming from Paris with, I fear, a certain amount of slang, Raff's French seemed peculiarly antiquated. He retained all the eighteenth-century terminations, and often used y's instead of i's in writing.'

When Heymann left the Frankfort Conservatorium he proposed that MacDowell should be his successor. The post was worth £150 a year. Although Raff supported the recommendation, it was opposed by several other professors ostensibly on account of the American's 'youth,' but really because they did not like Heymann, who 'dared to play the classics as if they had actually been written by men with blood in their veins. A sonata was a poem under his fingers, if it was in the bounds of human possibility to make it so.' Having failed to secure the Frankfort professorship, MacDowell accepted the post of chief teacher of the pianoforte at the Darmstadt Conservatorium at a salary of £40 per annum. At Darmstadt he passed a dreary existence in an unmusical town, giving forty lessons a week and passing much time in trains to and from an old feudal castle where he taught some somnolent, blue-blooded pupils. To relieve the tedium of these journeys he composed his second Pianoforte Suite in the train. He soon however retraced his steps order to see Liszt. As may be assumed, the king of pianists cordially welcomed him and invited Eugen D'Albert to play the second pianoforte part of MacDowell's first Concerto. Liszt highly commended the work and, tapping D'Albert on the shoulder, told him that he must bestir himself or he would be outdistanced by the American. Liszt, no mean judge of technical ability and good musicianship, was so delighted with MacDowell's playing that he invited him to play at the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Verein of 1882, held in that year at Zurich. At this Festival Liszt supervised the performance of his Oratorio 'St. Elizabeth.' Saint-Saëns and many other notables were also present. It was an important event in MacDowell's career; he not only made a great success as a pianist of high attainments, to Frankfort, where he taught private pupils. One such was an American lady who had applied to Madame Schumann for pianoforte lessons. Madame Schumann turned her over to Raff, who advised that she should study under the clever young countryman of the fair pupil from the United States. MacDowell told this American girl that he was not eager to teach her, but if she would promise to work seriously he would give her a trial. Although she was indignant at this 'condescension' on the part of the young man, she agreed to become his pupil. That American lady is now Mrs. MacDowell.

* It may not be without interest to remind our readers that this now famous pianoforte concerto was first played in public in America. The performance took place at Boston, U.S.A., on October 25, 1875, the solo part being interpreted by Hans von Bülow.

Upon the advice of Raff, MacDowell, like all good pianists, made a pilgrimage to Weimar in but it opened up the way for the publication of his works. He says: 'I played my first Pianoforte Suite with the notes before me, as until then I had never realized that my compositions could be worth actual study or memorizing. I would not have changed a note in one of them for untold gold, and inside I had the greatest love for them; but the idea that anyone else might take them seriously never occurred to me. I had understood from early boyhood that it was expected of me to become a pianist, and every moment spent in scribbling notes seemed to be stolen from the more legitimate work of pianoforte practice.'

The death of Raff on midsummer's night, 1882, was a terrible blow to his American friend and pupil. He says: 'Only the day before the terribly sudden event I had walked part of the way home with him from the Conservatorium. As I bade him good-bye I noticed that his hand was very hot and dry and that his eyes seemed unusually bright. The next morning I was greatly shocked when I heard that he had been found dead in his bed by the barber who went every morning to shave him.' A mass of roses, loosely put together, were placed by MacDowell near the face of the dead master as a tribute of respect and affection and typifying the fragrance of his memory. Frankfort no longer had any attraction for MacDowell after the death of Raff. He and his wife—they were married in 1883—settled in a tiny cottage at Wiesbaden where they lived an idyllic life, revelling in the charms of nature; and here MacDowell devoted himself entirely to composition. This pleasant mode of existence lasted for four years, until 1887.

At this time he very narrowly escaped settling in Edinburgh! At Frankfort he had formed a friendship with the late Lindsay Deas, whom Royal Academy students of thirty years ago will remember as a strenuous Scot and a brilliant pianist. On the death of Deas, who held a high position as a pianoforte teacher in Edinburgh, a London friend proposed that MacDowell should succeed him (Deas) as the representative of the Royal Academy of Music in Edinburgh. But this was not to be. The possibilities of Auld Reekie having proved disappointing, MacDowell went back to his Wiesbaden cottage, and the year following, deciding that a change was advisable, he returned to his native land, choosing Boston as the field for his artistic energies. 'I had good luck at once,' he says. 'In the first year, through Mr. B. J. Lang's kindly interest, I played my two concertos in New York under Theodore Thomas and in Boston under Gericke. Since then I have played both concertos in many cities from New York to the Pacific coast.'

In 1896 MacDowell was appointed Professor of Music in Columbia University in the city of New York. Upon his leaving Boston his pupils formed a Society in his honour, naming it after him. It has steadily grown, both artistically and numerically, and has at present over 300 members. This organization shows the respect and esteem in which the subject of this sketch is held in so art-loving a city as Boston.

His University work continued eight years, and in that time he greatly developed the Department of Music and made it very prosperous. No instrumental or vocal instruction was given, but the College orchestra which he called into existence in 1896 has at present over 45 student-members and it does most creditable work. He resigned his Professorship on January 18 last, to take effect at the end of the College year, for reasons he gives as follows: 'Few colleges and universities consider the Fine Arts (except poetic literature and architecture) worthy of serious consideration. The effect of this neglect is most deplorable, as many women's colleges and preparatory schools are affected by it and thus the higher education for both sexes is incomplete. A broad education must include the Arts, which are a most potent element in the humanities. My plans for the remedying of these conditions were not accepted, therefore it seemed to me useless to continue a work that was hopeless.'

The Universities of Princeton and Pennsylvania have both conferred the degree of Doctor of Music on MacDowell. For two years he conducted the Mendelssohn Glee Club, one of the oldest organizations for male chorus in the United States. Few, if any, will deny that Dr. MacDowell is the foremost composer in America. To say that 'beauty and greatness are the twin sovereigns of his mental kingdom' is perfectly true, but it is not the whole truth concerning him. Above all else he is a poetical composer. Not that he scorns form, or allows his melodic gifts and harmonic instincts to run riot—he is too serious an artist to adopt the methods of an iconoclast, or to resort to eccentric strivings after effect; but his music is no mere dry classicism, neither does it smell of the lamp: on the contrary, as one of his pupils has aptly said, it gives one a distinct impression of 'outdooriness.' In the words of Mr. James Hunecker: 'MacDowell is fond of the open air. For him always the heather and the wind that sweeps across it, the crags of the highlands and the bonny blue of the sky.' A great thinker, his music is free from all superficiality, the product of an artist and an earnest-minded man liberally endowed with brains which he uses to the best advantage for the furtherance of his art. It is impossible to do justice to the many creations of the subject of this sketch within the limits of this article. The reader is advised to make for himself the acquaintance of Dr. MacDowell's works. They appeal to various tastes and capacities. Some may be disposed to consider the shorter pianoforte pieces—those charming creations of his poetic fancy—as his best achievements. Others will regard the more extended compositions for the household instrument as worthy of greater consideration—e.g., the four pianoforte sonatas. These are severally entitled 'Tragica' (first played in England by Miss Lucie Mawson at Bechstein Hall, February 25, 1902), 'Eroica,' 'Norse,' and 'Keltic,' titles which sufficiently convey their poetic import and importance. The two Pianoforte Concertos, in A minor and D minor, are as brilliant in their conception as in their executive attractiveness.*

Although Dr. MacDowell has not yet given a symphony to the world,—that, an opera, and perhaps an oratorio, are sure to come—he has made his mark in the tone-poems and suites that can be placed to his account. One of the most attractive of these is the 'Indian' Suite for full orchestra (Op. 48), first played in England by the Liverpool Orchestral Society, under the baton of the late

* The D minor Concerto was first played in England at the Crystal Palace Saturday concert of April 7, 1900, under the direction of Sir August Manns, when the composer's old friend, Madame Carreño, gave a masterly interpretation of the solo portion.

Mr. A. E. Rodewald, on March 26, 1892. The five sections of this gorgeously-coloured suite—its thematic material suggested by Indian melodies of North America—are entitled 'Legend,' 'Love-Song,' 'In War Time,' 'Dirge,' and 'Village Festival,' each one vividly illustrating the varied moods of this realistic tone-picture.

His songs have many admirers, and the reason is not far to seek. A well-known American writer—Mr. Henry T. Finck, in his 'Songs and Song Writers'—goes so far as to say: 'Were I asked to name the greatest living song-writers I should say

We must not forget the just claim which Dr. MacDowell has to be considered a pianist of high attainment. His masterly performance of his own Concerto (No. 2, in D minor) at the Philharmonic Concert on May 14 of last year, gave ample proof of his technical gifts and poetic temperament as an interpretative artist. He has given pianoforte recitals in Germany and in practically all the great cities of the United States from ocean to ocean, everywhere meeting with the greatest success and appreciation.

As may be assumed from what has been already Edvard Grieg and Edward MacDowell. There is a certain affinity between these two composers, traceable no doubt to their Scotch ancestry. Grieg and Wagner are the only composers whose influence can be distinctly traced here and there in MacDowell's songs; but it is no more than a harmonic atmosphere which he breathes in common with them when he gets into certain emotional spheres. His ideas are always his own, and there are plenty of them.'

stated, Edward MacDowell is a thoughtful, rather shy man. A passionate lover of nature, he is not seen to advantage in the hurly-burly of a London hotel; a golf suit and the fresh-air environment of the country are much more to his taste. Fishing, hunting, riding, walking—'living like a human being,' as he says—are his delights. He composes in the summer at his country house at Peterboro, New Hampshire. The photographs which we give of this delightful retreat from the noise and bustle of city life will furnish some idea of the artistic personality of one so esteemed and honoured as Edward Alexander MacDowell.

A VISIT TO BOSTON.

ST. BOTOLPH'S TOWN ! Hither across the plains
And fens of Lincolnshire, in garb austere,
There came a Saxon monk, and founded here
A Priory, pillaged by marauding Danes,
So that thereof no vestige now remains ;
Only a name, that, spoken loud and clear,
And echoed in another hemisphere,
Survives the sculptured walls and painted panes.
St. Botolph's town ! Far over leagues of land
And leagues of sea looks forth its noble tower,
And far around the chiming bells are heard :
So may that sacred name for ever stand

A landmark, and a symbol of the power
That lies concentrated in a single word.

THE ARMS OF BOSTON.

Thus, in the pages of his 'Itinerary,' wrote John Leland concerning Boston in or about the year 1540. This testimony of the famous antiquary would alone tempt one to visit the old town, even if the place were destitute of other associations, be they of old-world or present-day interest. The name of Boston is said to be derived from Botolph, or Botulf, a Saxon saint who founded a monastery at that spot in the year 654 : hence we get Botolph's town, and, in its reduced form, Boston. We learn that St. Botolph built his monastery in an 'untilled place where none dwelt, called Ikanho : it was a wilderness unfrequented by men.' Pishey Thompson, in his monumental history of the neighbourhood, says, 'Boston, at the time of the Danish invasion, probably consisted of nothing more than the monastic buildings erected by St. Botolph and the usual appendages of such institutions.' After they had been swept away (A.D. 870)

by the Danes—under Inguar and Hubba, sons of Ragnor Lodbrog, the Sea-King—‘Icanhoe, as it was then called, relapsed into its former desolate state, and in this condition, or something approaching thereto, it was in all probability at the time of the Norman survey.’

The non-mention of Boston in Domesday Book is probably accounted for by the fact that it formed part of the adjoining parish of Skirbeck. Early in the 12th century, however, we find that one through fire and through water, but Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.’ For what reason? Because Boston became a great commercial port during the 13th and 14th centuries: indeed, at one time it was next in importance to London in regard to import duties, the relative assessments being £836 and £780. In the 15th and 16th centuries, owing to the continued silting up of the river, the trade of the port steadily declined, to such an extent, in fact, that the Corporation actually ‘Fergus the coppersmith, of Botolph’s town,’ presented the Abbey of Croyland with two bells, which, by inference, shows Boston to have been a place of some importance. The town received its first charter in 1204 from the hands of King John. It suffered severely from the ravages of fire in 1281, and, five years later, from an inundation; these and subsequent events would have justified those old-time Bostonians in singing with emphasised significance the words of the Psalmist: ‘We went petitioned that ‘their borough might be put among the decayed towns.’ But the Boston of to-day, with its 21,000 inhabitants, shows no signs of collapse, a condition of things due not only to the engineering skill which has kept open its waterway, but to the enterprise of its citizens in their commercial activities and dock-constructive achievements.

One of the most distinguished natives of Boston was John Foxe, author of the ‘Book of Martyrs’ as it is popularly called, though its real title is

'Actes and Monuments.' John Foxe—born at Boston in 1517 of parents 'well reputed of, and of good estate'—gives us an amusing account of the proceedings connected with an expedition to the Pope for the purpose of obtaining a renewal of the 'greater and the lesser pardons' of Boston. This event took place about the year 1510, when Boston's chief emissary to the Vatican was Thomas Cromwell, afterwards Earl of Essex. It is interesting to learn from Foxe that Cromwell and his colleagues obtained the favour and ear of the Pontiff by means of 'English presents, brought in with "a three man's song" (as we call it) in the English tongue, and all after the English fashion.' Furthermore, knowing that the Pope had 'a sweet tooth,' Cromwell and his men took with them, for presentation to his Holiness, 'certain fine dishes of jelly!' The sequel to this vocal and gastronomic piece of diplomacy may best be told in the words of the old martyrologist himself:—

Cromwell, showing his obedience and offering his jolly junkets—'such as kings and princes only,' said he, 'in the realm of England use to feed upon'—desired the same to be accepted in benevolent part, which he and his companions, as poor suitors unto his holiness, had there brought and presented, as novelties meet for his recreation, etc.

Pope Julius, seeing the strangeness of the dishes, commanded by and by his cardinal to take the assay; who, in tasting thereof, liked it so well, and so likewise the pope after him, that knowing of them what their suits were, and requiring them to make known the making of that meat, he, incontinent, without any more ado, stamped both their pardons, as well the greater as the lesser.

Jean Ingelow is another literary native of Boston. The town is still further honoured in being the birthplace of John Conington, one of the greatest of English classical scholars, and of Herbert Ingram, the founder of the Illustrated London News; moreover, the Hallams were originally Bostonians. The Grammar School is one of the interesting antiquities of the place. There is evidence of its existence so far back as the year 1327; but the present building (of brick) was erected in 1567-8 at a cost of £195 os. 11d. At the opening of the School it was agreed—

That a Dictionarie shall be bought for the Scollers of the Free Scoole, and the same booke be tyed in a cheyne, and set upon a deske in the scoole, whereunto any scoller may have accesse as occasion shall serve.

Some of the Pilgrim Fathers doubtless received their early education at this ancient seat of learning, and in the identical room wherein the rising generation of Bostonians are now being educated. The past successes of the School have been principally in classics and mathematics; but the present Governors, in their desire to keep their trust in the front rank of educational progress, are building science and physical laboratories at an outlay of some £2,000. The headmaster, Mr. William White, M.A., in showing us over the premises, calls attention to an adornment of the main gateway, a beautiful piece of Flemish ironwork taken from a screen which formerly extended across the Parish Church. The old Town Hall—originally the habitation of one of the several Guilds for which

Boston was formerly famous—is not without interest to the antiquary. In the basement are the old-world kitchens, and in close proximity the dungeons wherein prisoners were confined, and where they, condemned to a bread-and-water diet, could hear the bubble and squeak of savoury dishes being prepared for the sumptuous banquets in the hall above.

Of much interest is the connecting-link between our Boston and the Boston—'the Hub of the Universe'—of the New World. Let us briefly set forth its history. The peninsula on which Boston (Mass.) stands was originally named by the Indians Shawmut. The early settlers somewhat clumsily re-named it Trimountain. But in September, 1630, the Court of Assistants of the Massachusetts Bay Company (who had gone out from England) decided that Trimountain should thenceforth be called Boston. Mr. Justin Winsor, in his valuable and exhaustive 'Memorial History of Boston' (Mass.), tells us:—

The name of Boston was specially dear to the Massachusetts colonists from its association with the old St. Botolph's town, or Boston, of Lincolnshire, England, from which Lady Arbella Johnson and her husband had come, and where John Cotton was still preaching in its noble parish church.*

The Lady Arbella Johnson above referred to was a daughter of the Earl of Lincoln and the wife of Isaac Johnson, one of the Court of Assistants, while John Cotton was the famous Puritan vicar of Boston in the 17th century. In some books of reference it is stated that the change of name (from Trimountain to Boston) took place on the arrival in Massachusetts of the Rev. John Cotton in 1633, but documentary evidence entirely disposes of this piece of misinformation. John Cotton, perhaps the most celebrated vicar of Boston, issued a book bearing the following title:—

SINGING OF PSALMES a gospel ordinance, or a treatise wherein are handled these foure Particulars:

1. Touching the Duty it felfe
2. Touching the Matter to be Sung
3. Touching the Singers
4. Touching the Manner of Singing

By JOHN COTTON, Teacher of the Church at Bofton in New-England. London. . . . 1647.

It will be observed that while Cotton described himself as 'Teacher' (not minister) 'of the Church at Boston in New-England,' his tract was published in London. In the seventy pages of this publication—one that is quite sermonic in its prolixity, dogmatism and argumentativeness—Cotton refers to the congregation singing with 'lively voyce.' Under the third head 'Touching the Singers,' he asks:—

If vocal finging may be allowed.

- | | | |
|-------------------|---|--|
| Who must fing? | { | 1. Whether one for all the reft, the reft only saying Amen? or the whole Congregation? |

* 'The Memorial History of Boston, including Suffolk County, Massachusetts, 1630-1880.' By Justin Winsor, Librarian of Harvard University. Boston: James R. Osgood and Company, 1882. The author gives in vol. I., p. 116, a facsimile of the Order which changed the name of the place from Trimountain to Boston.

Those who wish to follow the thread of Cotton's argument may betake themselves to his dissertation. We may however refer to the ingenious way in which, under the heading on the 'Manner of Singing,' Cotton answers the question 'Whether it be lawful to sing Pfalmes in tunes invented?' In reply thereto he says :—

If God have given us liberty and warrant to sing Pfalmes and Hymnes and spiritual songs, then we must sing them in some Tunes. Now the Tunes of the Temple are loft and hidden from us, so that we cannot sing them at all; and therefore we must sing such other Tunes, as are fuitable to the matter, though invented by men.

The glory of Boston is its noble church, dedicated to St. Botolph and built upon the site of an old Norman sanctuary. The tower thereof is in very truth the outstanding feature of the town and can be seen for many miles round. Although the foundations of the tower were laid in the year 1309, this elevated part of the sacred edifice—called 'the Boston stump'—was literally the final touch in the

The pulpit, from which John Cotton preached, is a fine specimen of Renaissance work dating from early in the reign of James I. The restoration of the church—which lasted from 1844 to 1853—was followed (in 1856) by that of the Founder's Chapel, restored at a cost of £650, building of the church, which was completed about the year 1460. The nave, aisles and chancel are in the Decorated style, but the two easternmost bays of the chancel (added later) and the tower, crowned by its beautiful octagonal lantern, are of the Perpendicular period. The exterior height of the tower is 272 feet; but one of the most extraordinary features of the church is the interior height of this imposing erection, it being no less than 156 feet from the floor to the vaulted ceiling. A mere statement of so many feet utterly fails however to give any idea of the height which so deeply impresses the spell-bound visitor as he gazes upwards to the far-away roof of that beautiful creation in stone.

Boston church, though transeptless, is one of the largest Parish Churches in England. Its nave is ninety-eight feet wide—that is to say, four feet wider than the nave of St. Paul's Cathedral. The chancel is extremely rich in the possession of no fewer than sixty-four stalls, of which thirty-eight are richly canopied like those in some great cathedral. The misereres, sixty-four in number, and dating mainly contributed by Americans in memory of John Cotton, vicar from 1612-33, who, as aforesaid, emigrated to Boston in the New World.

The library of the church occupies a chamber over the south porch. This parvise was in olden times used as a schoolroom 'for petty scholars.' In the year 1635 the vicar petitioned the Archbishop of Canterbury (Laud), then on his visitation tour, that a library should be formed in the church, with the result that the Archbishop ordered—that the roome over the porch of the said church shall be repaired and decently fitted up to make a librarye, to the end that, in case any well and charitably disposed person shall hereafter bestow any books to the use of the parish, they may be there safely preserved and kept.

Several 'well and charitably disposed persons' responded to this call in gifts of money; but the practical value of the library to the parishioners seems to have been doubtful. Its volumes were evidently shelfless, as, in 1766, it was ordered that 'the books should be thoroughly cleaned and regularly piled up again,' from which it may be inferred that they were lying in heaps on the floor!

Among the valuable books and manuscripts now preserved in this church library are a beautiful MS. commentary, in excellent condition, on Genesis, by St. Augustine (circa 1100). Here are also to be seen the Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549), Foxe's 'Book of Martyrs' (1576), two 16th century editions of Chaucer (folio), all in black letter, &c. The registers date from 1564.

The earliest mention of an organ in Boston Church is about the year 1480.* Later on, in 1552, the inventory of the 'Church Goods' included 'a payre of organs.' In 1589 the Corporation of the town—who then had the sole control of the sacred edifice—ordered 'that the chamber built on the north side, as shown in the photograph. Of excellent tone-quality, the organ at present consists of 41 sounding stops—13 each on the Great and Swell, 8 on the Choir, and 7 on the Pedal organ.

Turning now to the organists we find that only two names are recorded of those who held that important office in pre-Reformation times. One of these, circa 1520, is no less distinguished a person than John Taverner—a musician whom old Thomas Morley classes as among 'famous Englishmen which have been nothing inferior to the best composers on the continent.' In this connection we may quote the interesting biographical notice of

THE CHANCEL OF BOSTON PARISH CHURCH.

(Photographed specially for this article by Mr. G. E. Hackford, Boston.)

Great Orgaynes shall be sold, for the benefit of the Church'. The church therefore remained without an organ for 128 years, until a new instrument (completed in 1717) was built by Christian Smith, nephew and fellow-workman of the celebrated Father Smith. The organ has been successively enlarged and rebuilt by W. A. A. Nicholls (son-in-law and successor to G. P. England), in 1820; Hill, in 1853; and Brindley, in 1871. Previous to the restoration of 1853 the organ stood on a screen at the entrance to the chancel; it now occupies a

Taverner written by Anthony à Wood, set forth in all its quaint and abbreviated phraseology:—

TAVERNER JOHN of Boston in Lincolnsh., but descended originally, as I conceive from the Taverners of North Elmham in Norfolk, was promoted from being an Organist at Boston before mention'd, to be Organist of Cardinal Wolsey's Coll. in Oxon [Christ Church] at its first erection an. 1525 (17 H. 8) but he with some of the junior canons being corrupted with Heresie, (i.e. Lutherisme) as 'twas then called, they were cast into a prison within a deep cave under the ground of the same coll. wher the salt Fish was layd, so yt by the stench thereof being infected, some of them shortly after their release, died in their chambers. B. Gilbert, a former organist of the church, and subsequently organist of Trinity Episcopal Chapel, New York.

I have seen also some compositions of his making to be plaid on Instruments, wch were much valued when first playd; but whether any of them are printed I know not, nor whether he lived beyond the reign of K. Hen. 8.

Another pre-Reformation organist at Boston was one John Wendon (circa 1538), who is described as 'Organista et in Musico et Medicinus experto.' Was this Dr. John Wendon a man of more than local repute?

For a period of 128 years Boston Church was organistless as well as organless. In 1717, upon the erection of Christian Smith's organ, the Corporation proceeded to elect an organist, to whom they agreed to pay a salary of £20, in addition to the yearly remuneration of £15 provided by the Vestry. Here are the conditions of the appointment as laid down by the Corporation on April 29, 1717:—

Y^e Organist who shall be chosen to serve in y^e Parish Chh. of Boston shall play:—

Upon Sundays, Holydaies, and as often as there shall happen to be a Sermon or Homily.

One Short Voluntary before y^e Service begins, and another immediately before y^e First Lesson: also y^e singing Psalms; and a Voluntary immediately y^e Service is finished.

Also on Comunion daies, a Voluntary between y^e Sermon & y^e beginning of y^e Comunion Service.

And during y^e singing Psalms at y^e Comunion.

A short Voluntary at y^e finishing of y^e Comunion.

The Organist shall have liberty to appoint a sufficient Deputy to play for him (if occasion be) on y^e week daies, with consent of y^e Vicar.

Mr. John Webber, of Chelsea, was thereupon elected, and so became the first post-Reformation organist of Boston Parish Church. He died in 1741, at the age of forty-six, after having held the office for twenty-four years, and was buried in the church, wherein is placed a marble tablet 'erected to his memory by his musical friends.'

It would not be of general interest to give the names of all the succeeding organists of Boston, but before making mention of one or two well-known men among its 'chief musicians,' we may refer to an entry in the Vestry records which gives evidence of the low ebb to which the church music had fallen in the year 1786. The Minute reads thus:—

1786.—Whether any allowance shall be made to instruct a number of children to join with, and assist the congregation in singing the Psalms, Hymns, and other parts of Divine Service, in this Church. It passed in the negative.

In 1804 however the Vestry seem to have become a little more enlightened, as they resolved—

That £5 be paid to the Parish Clerk to instruct the children of the Blue Schools [which then consisted of thirty boys and six girls] in Psalmody.

The conditions under which former organists of Boston were appointed caused no little friction between the Corporation and the Vestry, who did not always see eye to eye in this matter. In 1832 these differences became so acute that the Corporation—who contributed towards the stipend of the organist—'were very indignant,' and they resolved—

That the Mayor be requested to write to the Bishop to represent the state in which the town is placed in consequence of the Vestry refusing to appoint an Organist, and the Vicar permitting an incompetent person to officiate in that capacity.

Dr. William Richard Bexfield—composer of the oratorio 'Israel restored' and other music—was organist from 1845 to 1848, he being appointed at the age of twenty-one. A score of years later Dr. Walter Bond Gilbert—the veteran composer of the hymn-tune 'Maidstone'—held the post for a year previous to his departure for New York. Dr. D. J. Wood, the present organist of Exeter Cathedral, officiated for six years—1869 to 1875. To him succeeded Mr. George Herbert Gregory, Mus.B., Oxon., one of a family of three brothers who are all graduates in music of English Universities. Mr. Gregory was born at Clewer, December 6, 1853, and studied under Mr. Samuel Reay; he had held organistships at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Melrose, and Tamworth Parish Church previous to his settlement at Boston nearly thirty years ago. As conductor of the Boston Choral Society, a teacher in much request, and man of genial temperament, he is held in great respect in Boston and the surrounding neighbourhood. The possessor of a good tenor voice he has made his mark as an excellent choir trainer. By-the-way, the choir of Boston Church—which consists of forty voices—has an endowment of £60 a year, resulting from Richard Briggs's charity (1558), whereby four Choral Bedesmen (now four members of the church choir) are paid a salary of £15 a year each. The manner in which the service is rendered at Boston Parish Church bears full testimony to the capabilities of the choir and to Mr. Gregory's musicianship—in a word, he is the right man in the right place.

For help kindly rendered in the preparation of this article, thanks are due to Mr. G. E. Hackford, the acting clerk of the Church, for much information and the use of his photographs; and to Mr. G. H. Gregory, the organist and choirmaster.

PROGRAMME MUSIC.

By PROFESSOR NIECKS.

Programmes are very diverse in their natures, that is, the subjects chosen by composers are approached by them from different standpoints, and dealt with in different ways. A programmatic composition may be a general impression of a complex subject, a series of pictures, or a portraiture of one character or several characters. It may be purely emotional, to a more or less extent descriptive, and even allegorical. The examination of the works of a single composer, say of Liszt, would sufficiently exemplify this variety, and a wider range of examination would lead to results still more astonishing. Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, and his 'Leonore,' 'Egmont,' and 'Coriolan' Overtures; Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' 'Hebrides,' 'Melusine,' and 'Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage' Overtures; Berlioz's 'Fantastic,' 'Harold,' and 'Romeo and Juliet' Symphonies, and 'King Lear,' 'Waverley,' 'Benvenuto Cellini,' and 'Roman Carnival' Overtures; Liszt's 'Faust,' and 'Dante' Symphonies, and the Symphonic Poems 'Ce qu'on entend sur la Montagne,' 'Prometheus,' 'Mazeppa,' 'Die Ideale,' and the 'Battle of the Huns'; Saint-Saëns's 'Phaëton' and 'Rouet d'Omphale'; César Franck's 'Les Éolides,' and 'Le Chasseur Maudit'; and Richard Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration,' 'Don Juan,' 'Don Quixote,' 'Zarathustra,' and 'Ein Heldenleben,' may be recalled as well-known examples of programme music, and will display in a striking manner the varied nature and treatment of the programme. The works named are complex conceptions on a large scale. But there exists also an immense quantity of short, simple, and even miniature programme music—song-like lyrical outpourings, mood pictures, landscape sketches, genre pieces, &c. We meet with titles like 'Chanson d'amour,' 'Abends,' 'Whims,' 'Forest Scenes,' 'The Mill Stream,' 'La vallée d'Obermann,' 'La Source,' 'Dance of the Sylphs,' 'Dance of the Gnomes,' 'The Butterfly' and 'The Mignonette.' Of course many titles have no meanings, are mere non-connotative names to distinguish the pieces that bear them from others, or to give to them artificial attractiveness. But it is not so with all titles.

At one time or another there must present itself to the thinking musician and music-lover, the question whether music can really express, as programmes and titles seem to pretend that it can, the soul-life of man, and things visible as well as things audible. That music can imitate things audible—the song of birds, the roll of thunder, the murmuring of the brook, &c.—is not likely to surprise anyone. But that music can imitate things visible—the flight of birds, the flash of lightning, the undulation of water, &c.—may stagger many who have not thought deeply on the nature and capacity of the art. The explanation however is neither far to seek nor difficult to understand. In most cases where the musician aims at the imitation of the visible, he deals with it by analogy, substituting audible for visible motion, and audible for visible light and darkness and its degrees and gradations. The analogy between audible and visible motion is obvious and perfect, and consequently need not further be considered. The less obvious and less perfect analogy between audible and visible light and darkness requires a few words showing how light and darkness can be audibly rendered in music. The means used for this purpose are highness and lowness of pitch, the major and minor of tonality, the bright and dull character of the intervals, and the close and extended distribution of the constituents in the harmonic combinations, and lastly, the colouring of the instrumentation.

We approach a more important and difficult problem when we ask ourselves what means the composer has at his disposal for the expression of the emotions. First presents itself to our notice the imitation of the accents of speech and the human cries, the infinitely differentiated ejaculations and exhalations of joys and sorrows, pleasures and pains, fears and longings, inarticulate but instinctively understood by everyone. The imitation of these accents and cries forms an essential and large part of the musician's expressive power. Another important part is the imitation of the physical movements corresponding to the psychological states—the process of breathing, the beating of heart and pulse, the circulation of the blood, and the action of the limbs, all of which give, as it were, the tempo and rhythm of the emotions. In addition to the two sources mentioned, there is the extension of these means of emotional expression by the imitation of the sounds and movements in nature which man feels sympathetically to be the counterpart of his emotional states—of calm and turbulence, of peace and war, of love and hate, of attraction and repulsion, of benevolence and malignancy. And there is yet a further extension of the means of emotional expression—namely, by the suggestion of the supernatural, and the fear, awe, and rapture it inspires, by unusual melodic, harmonic, and instrumental combinations.

In programme music, I said, things are possible both in regard to matter and form which, in absolute music, would be inadmissible. This is undoubtedly true. But let us also note the complementary truth that there are such things as subjects unsuitable for musical treatment, and that formlessness, or form ignoring the nature of the art, is intolerable in music. Subjects may be unsuitable for two reasons: Because they are beyond the expressional reach of music, or because they lie outside the range of art, which has its being in beauty. It is especially young composers still in the period of storm and stress who indulge in formlessness, and imagine that rhapsodic musical prose is an improvement on well-constructed musical verse. Such attempts are however nothing but negations of art. The young men of talent soon see the error of their ways; those that continue their evil courses are generally sterile natures pricked on by ambition to seek success in paths untrodden by genius. Whether you write programme or absolute music you cannot dispense with form. You need not follow the letter of classical form, but you must understand the spirit that generated and animates it. The style of music requires to be in the main verse, not prose. By all means let the verse be free and varied; but your music must be verse of some kind, for the nature of the art demands it. Now, what justifies me in making this assertion? On the one hand, all the lasting successes, and on the other hand, all the failures in musical literature.

Taking the term programme music in its widest and most general meaning, in the sense of expressive and descriptive music, we may say that its history is co-extensive with the history of music, that there was programme music from the earliest time that man attempted to express his feelings by the accents of speech and the emotional cries, and attempted to express his playfulness and his joy in life by the imitation of the sounds in nature. But it was long before music attained the power of doing this to a considerable extent and effectively. The early attempts at a more definite emotional expression were fragmentary and isolated, and the attempts at description childish. Indeed, the history of programme music in the more narrow sense of the term may be said to begin with the rise of monody,—that is, accompanied one-part vocal music—and the musical drama in the latter part of the 16th century, which is also the time of the development of instrumental music. The chief characteristic of the monodic movement was the striving after expression, a craving that could not be satisfied by mere beauty of harmoniousness. As to independent instrumental music, we have moreover to note that in it the striving after expressiveness was for some time less strong than in vocal music, and was for the most part subordinate to the pleasure derived from the play with sounds.

To avoid the danger of losing ourselves in a chaos of isolated facts, it may be helpful to group them into periods. I propose a grouping into six overlapping periods.

The first period, of the 16th century, is that of vocal programme music, and produced such descriptive pieces for voices alone as Jannequin's

'The Hunt,' 'The Song of the Birds,' 'The Battle,' 'The Cries of Paris,' and 'The Cackling of the Women.'

The second period, which extends from the latter part of the 16th to the beginning of the 18th century, opens with the Englishmen Byrd and Mundy, and ends with the German Kuhnau. It brings isolated and tentative cases, at first without exception crude and childish, and even later on mostly so—if not wholly, at least partially.

The third period, from the 17th to the middle of the 18th century, is that of the French lutenists and clavecinists, the masters of musical miniature genre and portrait painting, which culminated in François Couperin (Couperin le Grand). Here we meet with the first artistically satisfactory achievements in programme music.

The fourth period, entirely of the 18th century, is characterized by a more general striving after expressiveness in instrumental music, and a spreading of the cultivation of programme music. This is shown (1) in overtures, entr'actes, and incidental music to plays and operas, and the instrumental ritornelli and accompaniments of vocal compositions; (2) in melodrama, that is, instrumentally accompanied speech; and (3) in symphonies and sonatas.

The fifth period, which begins at the close of the 18th century, is that of programme music in the larger classical forms. Beethoven opens the period, and he is the principal inspirer of those that follow.

The sixth period, from about the fourth decade of the 19th century, is characterized by a wider scope of subjects, and departure from classical form. Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner are the inspiring geniuses of this period.

As these periods overlap and are distinguished rather by character and tendency than by time, they might perhaps be more appropriately called schools. But whether we call them periods or schools, we ought to note in them, besides the overlapping, the various degrees of artistic value and the parts played by different nationalities. The value of the vocal programme music of the first period, and of the isolated and tentative examples of the second period, is almost entirely historical. In the programme music of the third period, that of the French lutenists and clavecinists, we have, on the other hand, at least as far as the clavecinists are concerned, finished artistic achievements. The fourth period is noteworthy rather for the pronounced programme tendency in instrumental music generally, than for independent works of the kind. The periods of achievement in independent programmatic works are the fifth and sixth—those in classical and non-classical form. In connection with these two periods of fully-developed programme music we have to be especially careful to note the overlapping; for the production of programme music in the classical forms continues to the present day undisturbed, although no doubt stimulated and influenced, by the production of programme music of another kind.

As to the activity of the different nationalities, the sensuous Italians keep aloof from programme music; the intellectual French cultivate it with predilection; and the sentimental Germans occupy an intermediate position. These are the three great musical nations of Europe, those with a long and continuous history. The Norwegians and Russians have only quite recently come to the front, and begun to attract attention and exercise influence. The English appear only fitfully, most effectively in the latter part of the 16th and 19th centuries. Slight as their co-operation was, three facts should not be overlooked: The contributions of the virginal composers of the 16th century; Purcell's programmatic tendencies in the latter part of the 17th century; and Sterndale Bennett's classical programme music of the 19th century. The youngest generation of our British composers show unmistakably a strong bias towards programme music.

As the great mass of the present-day music, whether vocal or instrumental, is programme music,—that is, music which is intended to mean something, and not merely to tickle our ears and to please our form-sense—we must make an effort to understand the problem or problems involved. A position of unintelligent negation does not do justice to the subject, and brings discredit on the would-be judge. Tout comprendre c'est tout pardonner. I am sure that a full understanding of the nature and capacities of music, and the reasonable aims of programme music, furnish a complete apology of the genre, and prove conclusively its legitimacy and right to exist. Even if we had to admit that there are more bad than good examples, we could do so without giving our case away. In fact, are not Beethoven's or Mendelssohn's examples alone enough to legitimize programme music? And have there not been before them some, and after them many, whose contributions to the same species of composition every fair-minded person must acknowledge to be valuable and even priceless? Moreover, this is not a question of choosing the one or the other. It is quite possible, indeed quite easy and natural, to combine a love of programme music with a love of what is called absolute music.

Professor Kruse's second Musical Festival—announced to be held at Queen's Hall on various dates during the present month—bids fair to be of an unusually interesting nature. Not the least attractive feature will be the first appearance in London of Dr. Coward's celebrated Sheffield Chorus of 300 voices. These splendid Sheffield singers will take part in Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' and Beethoven's Choral Symphony, on Saturday afternoon, the 9th inst.; and in Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and Beethoven's Mass in D, on the evening of the 20th. Both these occasions will provide a feast of music in which London amateurs should be eager to share. The remaining five concerts of the Festival will be devoted mainly to orchestral music (100 performers) and concertos, played by Professor Johann Kruse (violin) and Mr. Mark Hambourg (pianoforte). The conductor will be—Felix Weingartner. May we be there to hear!

*He too is blest, whose outward eye
The graceful lines of art may trace,
While his free spirit, soaring high,
Discerns the glorious from the base:
Till out of dust his magic raise
A home for prayer and love, and full harmonious praise,*

In maze on maze the tracèd sight
Strays, mindful of that heavenly love
Which knows no end in depth or height,
While the strong breath of Music seems
To waft us ever on, soaring in blissful dreams.*

KEBLE.

The visit of Queen Alexandra to the Philharmonic Concert on the 2nd ult. was the first occasion for forty-four years that an English queen has thus honoured the veteran Society. During the lifetime of the Prince Consort it was the invariable custom of Queen Victoria to be present at one Philharmonic Concert during every season. Owing to the death of the Queen's mother, the Duchess of Kent, in 1861, no Royal visit was paid in that year; therefore the last occasion on which her late Majesty attended was on June 4, 1860, when the concert was held in the now defunct Hanover Square Rooms. Here is the programme of that royal music-making:—

BY COMMAND.

Under the immediate patronage of

Her Majesty.

His Royal Highness the Prince Consort.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.

Mus. D.

It may not be without interest to reprint the criticism of Mr. J. W. Davison on this concert, as set forth in The Times of June 5, 1860:—

Her Majesty arrived about a quarter-past eight, accompanied by His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, His Majesty the King of the Belgians, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena. The illustrious party occupied their usual places close underneath the orchestra, and were warmly greeted on their entry by the brilliant audience assembled in the Hanover Square Rooms. The brevity of the selection will not have escaped remark; but it is the custom when Her Majesty attends the Philharmonic Concerts to omit the concerto for a solo instrument, which at other times is invariably a feature of the programmes, and to limit the vocal music to a few pieces. This, however, is chiefly felt as a loss by habitual frequenters—the extra visitors being attracted to the Hanover Square Rooms almost exclusively by the hope of seeing the Royal party. Last night, however, the audience seemed more musically-inclined than is generally the case on such exceptional occasions, and were rewarded with one of the best concerts and one of the most admirable performances ever provided by the Philharmonic Society.

As soon as Her Majesty entered the room Professor Bennett gave a signal, and the band executed the National Anthem. Mendelssohn's symphony (an especial favourite at the Palace) was listened to with marked interest from end to end, and apparently as much enjoyed by strangers as by those to whom every phrase of it must have been familiar. A more faultless execution of this genial, spontaneous, and masterly composition has perhaps not been heard in England. The times of each movement were indicated with unerring judgment and precision; not a passage was hurried, and consequently not an instance of refined expression or delicate combination lost. The applause grew warmer and warmer after each successive movement of the symphony, and was as hearty and unrestrained at the conclusion of the irresistible Presto—in which the saltarello and tarantella are worked together in such spirit and ingenuity—as if there had been nothing to divert attention from the ordinary business of the evening. Beethoven's superb Eroica—although the first allegro might, with advantage, have been taken a shade quicker—was equally well played; the scherzo, so often imperfectly rendered, being given (the difficult horn parts of the trio included) to absolute perfection, the pathetic slow movement (“Marcia funebre sulla morte d'une Eroë”) as impressively as could have been wished, and the finale—in which invention and science appear to strive for victory, and both to come off triumphant—without a “hitch.” The two overtures—splendid examples of the genius of their composers, in many respects so alike, in others so widely opposed—were scarcely less satisfactory, the Ruler of the Spirits, perhaps, bearing off the palm for irreproachably finished execution. The members of the band and their accomplished conductor, Professor Sterndale Bennett, were evidently determined to maintain the reputation of the Philharmonic Concerts; and assuredly such a performance as that we have briefly described was not calculated to diminish it.

The two vocal airs—so different and yet so expressive—were sung with the utmost feeling, and in a thoroughly artistic style by Mademoiselle Artôt—her first, but, it is to be hoped, not her last appearance this season.

The Royal Party remained to the end of the concert, and as they rose to depart the audience again gave them a loyal greeting, and the National Anthem was again struck up by the orchestra.

While on the subject of Philharmonic Concerts we may refer to the fact that fifty years have come and gone since the Society introduced to an English audience Schumann's Symphony in B flat, a work performed at the first concert of the present season, though the programme-book made no mention of this jubilee fact. It was at a ‘command’ concert—June 5, 1854, at which Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort were present—that Schumann's genial work was first heard in England, Costa then being the conductor of the Society. How did the leading critics receive the Symphony? The question may well be asked. This is what Mr. J. W. Davison thought of it:—

The only novelty was Herr Schumann's Symphony in B flat, which made a dead failure, and deserved it. Few of the ancient ‘Society of British Musicians’ symphonies were more incoherent and thoroughly uninteresting than this. If such music is all that Germany can send us of new, we should feel grateful to Messrs. Ewer and Wessel if they would desist from importing it.—The Musical World, June 10, 1854.

Mr. Chorley appears to have been as strenuous an anti-Schumannite as his colleague of The Times and of the Musical World. This is what the critic of the Athenæum said:—

This Symphony by Dr. Schumann is considered by his German admirers to be his most reasonable orchestral work; and is the one described in some detail in the Athenæum [No. 1312], when an attempt was made to class the new writers of what is now called music, in Mozart's, Beethoven's, Mendelssohn's kingdom. We have nothing to add to the character of it already given as a piece of head work,—robust in places, but in places, also, very ugly, and throughout crude in colour and thick in texture. Here, we imagine, it may never be wanted again; and are glad to have the matter set at rest.

In the earlier criticism referred to in the above extract, Mr. Chorley characterized the Symphony as ‘dulness laid upon dulness.’ The Philharmonic directors evidently took these two criticisms very seriously to heart, as the work did not again find a place in their programmes until twenty-one years later. In the meantime it had been played no fewer than twelve times—twice in one month, March, 1860—at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts, under the direction of Sir (then Mr.) August Manns, who probably, in addition, conducted it at some of the daily concerts given at Sydenham. The Symphony has now been performed five times by the Philharmonic Society. We give the dates and the names of the conductors:—June 5, 1854, for the first time in England (Costa); April 26, 1875 (Cusins); May 26, 1881 (Cusins); March 8, 1899 (Mackenzie); and March 2, 1904 (Cowen).

At the monthly meeting of the Madrigal Society, held at the Holborn Restaurant on the 17th ult.,—one of those very enjoyable functions that have been going on for 163 years—the following interesting programme was performed:—

How still and peaceful	Tye
(In memory of a deceased member.)
Cry aloud, and shout	Croft
The Lady Oriana	Wilbye
Dainty fine bird	Gibbons
Sister, awake	Bateson
Sweet Philomel, cease thou	Ward
Hard by a crystal fountain	Croce
Dry be that tear	Torrance
(The Society's Prize Madrigal, 1903.)
Lady, when I behold	Wilbye
Sweet Philomela	Hawes
When Thoralis delights	Weelkes
O sleep, fond fancy	Benet
So saith my fair	Marenzio
The Waits	Saville

The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone), President of the Society, presided over this feast of song in his usual genial manner; Sir Frederick Bridge conducted the first part of the programme, and Dr. G. F. Huntley the second part; and Mr. Oscar W. Street, in the unavoidable absence of his father, Mr. J. Edward Street, discharged the duties of Secretary with that courtesy and hospitality which have so long been a tradition in his family. The attendance was one of the largest in the history of the Society.

The doyen of the musical profession, Manuel Garcia, celebrated his ninety-ninth birthday on the 17th ult., St. Patrick's Day, when he was the recipient of many congratulations upon his entry into his hundredth year. The very veteran professor is however still two years short of the age attained by Cervetto, the violoncellist (whose real name was Giacomo Bassevi), born 1682, died, in London, 1783; but he has considerably exceeded the age of Sir George Smart, who was nearly ninety-three at his death in 1867. Dr. Child, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, lived to be ninety, or ninety-one. Through the kindness of Mr. Burnham Horner we are enabled to give a portrait, dated 1827, of Mr. Garcia's father—Manuel del-Popolo-Vicente Garcia—and, moreover, the father of Madame Malibran and Madame Viardot-Garcia.

MANUEL DEL-POPOLO-VICENTE GARCIA (1775—1832).

FATHER OF THE NONOGENARIAN PROFESSOR.

(From a drawing kindly lent by Mr. Burnham Horner.)

This, the elder Garcia and the founder of the family, was a very remarkable man—excelling in the rôles of composer, singer, actor, and conductor. His vocal abilities may be judged by the fact that Rossini wrote the part of Almaviva, in 'Il Barbiere,' specially for him. Fétis says that he composed no fewer than seventeen Spanish, nineteen Italian, and seven French operas! He had many distinguished pupils. One of them was his son, Manuel, long resident in London, who has just entered his centenary year. It must not be forgotten that Manuel Garcia the younger—although he is ninety-nine—had a very celebrated pupil in the person of Jenny Lind. Who will deny that the Garcias are a wonderful family?

In the previous note, mention is made of Cervetto who attained to the age of 101. He was not only one of the earliest violoncello players in this country, but a man of humour. A story is told of him to the effect that, on one occasion, Garrick, in acting the part of a drunken man, finished up by throwing himself into a chair. At this moment, while the house was quite still, Cervetto gave a loud and long yawn, whereupon Garrick jumped up and, advancing to the footlights, angrily asked the yawning 'cellist what he meant. 'I beg your pardon,' immediately replied Cervetto, 'but I always gape when I am particularly enjoying myself.'

The recent examination for Free Open Scholarships at the Royal College of Music furnishes some interesting results, which we have pleasure in placing before our readers. The number of candidates who entered for the preliminary examination was 336. By disqualification, illness, &c., this number was reduced to 292, who were examined by Honorary Local Examiners at 70 centres. This weeding-out process left the respectable number of 117, further reduced, by 5 withdrawals, to 112, who presented themselves for the final test in London. Through the courtesy of the Registrar of the Royal College of Music we are enabled to give an analysis of the selected 112. Here it is, from the sex and subject point of view :—

	Female.	Male.	Total.
Singing	44	14	58
Pianoforte	16	2	18
Violin	12	2	14
Violoncello	1	4	5
Organ	0	6	6
Harp	4	0	4
Wind	not offered.	6	6
Composition	0	1	1
	77	35	112

Place aux dames is clearly demonstrated by the foregoing statistics in the proportion of more than two to one! Considering the number of would-be singers—fifty-eight as against eighteen pianists and fourteen violinists—one would think that there should be no cause for anxiety about the supply of English songsters, especially of the fair sex. But what about composition, with its solitary competitor among the selected 112? Are our budding musicians beginning to realize the truth of the saying Omnia non pariter rerum omnibus apta?

The following are the names of the successful candidates for the Open Scholarships :—

Composition : Julius A. G. Harrison, Stourport. Pianoforte : Edgar D. Macgregor, Beckenham. Singing : Agnes M. Coates, London; Robert P. Chignell, Worcester; Eva M. Brown, London (who resigns the emoluments of the Scholarship and receives the title of Honorary Scholar); and Dorothy L. Purser, London. Organ : Marmaduke P. Conway, Eastbourne. Violin : Mary S. Harrison, London; and Thomas Peatfield, Putney. Violoncello : Frederic G. Parkington, Clacton-on-Sea. Harp : Edith Scruby, London. Clarinet : Clifford Foster, Huddersfield; and Cecil Mangen, London. Bassoon : William H. Foote, London; Horn : Ernest A. Button, Bedford.

The subject of Folk-songs has been so much under discussion lately that a certain appropriateness is attached to our music pages in the present issue. 'Early one morning,' the English Folk-song which Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill has arranged as a four-part song, is at least one hundred years old. The words, entitled 'The Maid's Lamentation,' appeared in 'The Songster's Magazine,' circa 1804, and in a collection entitled 'Sleepy Davy's Garland.' As in the case of so many of these old ditties, the words have been modernized; but the subject of the song is always the same—a damsel's complaint for the loss of her lover, in 'The Songster's Magazine' the occupation of the inconstant swain being given as 'a gentle shepherd.' The music is traditional. William Chappell thought that he was the first to print it in his 'National English Airs' (1838), and afterwards in his 'Popular Music of the Olden Time.' But Chappell was, at least, forestalled by Thomas Moore, who included the tune in Part VI. of his 'Selection of Popular National Airs,' dished up by Bishop and issued at the end of 1827 or the beginning of 1828. 'Old English' is the designation given to the melody by Moore, who wrote words for it which begin 'Hope comes again.' In regard to the tune, Chappell says that it bears relationship to a hornpipe that was formerly played at the theatres. He remarks upon its great popularity in association with the words 'Early one morning,' a popularity which has fully justified its inclusion in most collections of English songs since Chappell's day. The technical construction of the tune is simple enough. Except in bars 3 and 7, the melodic intervals are either those of the tonic and dominant chords or else are formed by consecutive notes of the scale. It all seems so easy, but —

The University of Oxford has honoured one of Oxford's most esteemed citizens, by conferring the degree of Master of Arts, honoris causa, upon Councillor Thomas William Taphouse, in acknowledgment, and rightly so, of his researches into early English music, and the valuable services he has rendered to the art. The ceremony took place in a Convocation held on the 15th ult., at which the Principal of Brasenose, a Pro-Vice-Chancellor, presided. The following, from the Oxford Times of the 19th ult., gives the substance of the speech delivered by the Public Orator (the Rev. the Rector of Lincoln College) in presenting Mr. Taphouse for his degree:—

The Public Orator introduced him as a respected and experienced City Councillor, who had for many years been entrusted with the care of the municipal buildings. But these were not the sole grounds on which the Orator deemed him worthy of this honour. He remembered how Quintilian, quoting the words of Plato, declared that 'music' (in the full Greek use of the word) was a necessity for one who undertook civic functions: and he felt that Mr. Taphouse had abundantly realised this necessity, though it could not be said that he was the servant of only one of the Muses! For endowed as he was with a delicate sense of eye and ear alike, he had shown remarkably clear powers of criticism both in painting and in music. The speaker then touched upon the precarious existence of paintings, so many masterpieces having been lost to the world. And the fate of musical compositions was even more uncertain. Some were only born to die; and many fell into undeserved oblivion, hidden away amid the rubbish of libraries and perhaps making the lining of a mouse's nest! It was greatly to Mr. Taphouse's honour that, with a true musician's enthusiasm, he had made a splendid collection of books bearing on the history of music, that he had spared neither time nor trouble in restoring to the light of day not a few lost compositions, and in cataloguing and indexing a mass of material in various public libraries. Besides this, Mr. Taphouse had made a wonderful museum of musical instruments of many ages, and the Orator thought that Apollo himself, and Mercury, the inventor of the lyre, might well look with amazement on such a manifold progeny. He felt that another great claim that Mr. Taphouse had on the honour about to be conferred on him was his large-hearted unselfishness in opening the stores of his knowledge and affording the readiest assistance to all those fellow-workers who were interested in music.

All perfectly true and admirably stated. The degree was then formally conferred amid cordial applause. Not a few readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES will join us in heartily congratulating Mr. Taphouse upon an honour as rare as it is thoroughly well-deserved. We hope soon to give an account of his valuable musical library.

The Church Music Review (New York) for March makes the following references to the first performance of 'The Apostles' in America:—

Edward Elgar's latest work was performed for the first time in America at Carnegie Hall, N.Y., on the 9th February, by the New York Oratorio Society, under the direction of Frank Damrosch. The occasion was a remarkable one, for 'The Apostles' had had but one other public performance, and that was in October last at the English Festival for which it was composed. It is no doubt owing to the enthusiasm aroused by 'Gerontius' that the later work of Dr. Elgar was given in America at such an early date—even before the full score was out of the printer's hands.

Music lovers are indebted to Mr. Damrosch for the production of this colossal work and its excellent performance. The soloists were chosen with especial reference to the character of the music allotted to them. The difficulties of the choruses seemed as nothing, so thoroughly had the singers been prepared. . . . Mr. Damrosch conducted in a masterly manner, and his reading of the score was closely followed by many conductors from other cities who had come to hear Elgar's masterpiece.

A second performance of the oratorio was announced to be given on the 24th ult. at New York.

Musical critics are such a hard-worked body of scribes that any method put forward for the amelioration of their condition in this respect is worthy of all consideration and publicity. The latest thing in the way of a labour-saving appliance—and the mechanical writing of 'copy' is, at times, laborious—comes from the land o' cakes. We have before us a newspaper cutting of the report of a concert given north of the Tweed which thus editorially begins: 'Our Musical Critic [Please, Mr. Printer, be sure you put in the caps.] has handed us his programme, from which we cull the following marginal notes.' To reprint all these 'culled notes'—almost enough to make a symphony—would occupy too much space in THE MUSICAL TIMES, but we may give a few specimens in order to show how the new method may be worked:—

Orchestra timid in opening; chorus attack fair, tone good, and in tune.

Horn not in tune.

Beyond criticism; horn and oboe play with fine effect here.

String basses good in scales.

Very dramatic. . . . chorus not together on pp. stacc. notes.

Opens out nicely, but rather loud; swells well done.

Alto soloist very plaintive, just the correct thing.

Clarinet opens nicely, wants larger orchestra to bring out the full effects.

Male choir good; flute effective; dim. well done.

Fine effect by muted strings; clarinet in too soon; nice entry of all male voices; orchestra too loud at letter A, at letter B accompaniment very chaste; chorus singing well, but rather loud—very difficult music to perform, although it looks easy.

And so on. At the end of these ejaculatory specimens of musical criticism the performance is summed up in these words: 'The work is a very difficult one for the strings, and received great assistance from Miss — at the piano. The wind part, which was short in the Orchestra, received valuable assistance from Mr. — at the harmonium.' There, gentlemen of the music-critic fraternity, you see how it can be done! No more late hours, no construction of sentences, no, — but now you know.

A London newspaper, which shall be nameless, has recently issued a Musical Supplement. In one of its articles, of which Mr. Randegger forms the subject, we are informed that 'Correspondents want him to be at their beck and call to test their voices and give I got into the habit of accompanying early in my career opinions, regardless of his engagements.' This information, certainly not of a very luminous nature, is on a par with a statement attributed to Mr. Henry R. Bird, who, in the course of an interview, is made to say: 'Amongst violinists, I include Joachim and Lady Hallé when articulated pupil to an organist in Westminster.' Prodigious!

The Rev. Canon Rivington, Vicar of St. Mary's, Warwick, and formerly a curate of Tewkesbury Abbey, sends us the following interesting information concerning the Milton organ, of which we gave a photograph in our last issue (p. 158) as one of the illustrations in the article on Tewkesbury Abbey:—

After the organ was removed from the screen across the Abbey—in which position the famous Dr. S. S. Wesley had played upon it—it was first set up on the north side of the nave in the aisle. The Abbey, at that time being under restoration, was divided into two by a hoarding which reached from the ground to the roof of the church. The choir was restored first, and then the organ was placed against the south wall of the south transept. When the choir stalls were to be set in their place, across the entrance to the north and south transepts from the choir, the organ had to be again moved to a more suitable position. Mr. Thomas Collins, the well-known builder at Tewkesbury, now passed away, moved the organ bodily across the Abbey from the south transept wall to its then position just above the north choir stalls. It was most cleverly done by means of screw jacks, a wonderful feat on the part of Mr. Collins. I remember seeing the organ at rest in the very centre of the choir, all crooked as regards its position, like a piece of furniture which had been moved to be dusted!

A Yorkshire correspondent writes:—

I am rapidly forming an ornamental base to my library, of successive volumes of THE MUSICAL TIMES (from the year 1877) in their distinctly chaste bindings, which give the room the character of a 'brown study.'

We trust however that our correspondent will not experience the mental conditions expressed in Congreve's lines—

Invention flags, his brain grows muddy,
And black despair succeeds brown study.

But that would be impossible in his case.

Public attention has been called to the subject of 'the garments of praise' suitable for lady members of church choirs, and a correspondent suggests that, in regard to headgear, each fair singer should don a Tam O'Chanter.

The quartet ('For in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert') underwent several important changes. To what extent Wesley improved this section of his work may be gathered from the following example, forming the accompaniment to the opening bars:—

&c.

At (complete) bar 24 it will be observed that Wesley originally wrote the first three soprano notes a fourth higher than as now printed. At bar 33, the entry of all the voices in chorus,—though not so indicated in the MS.—the tenor kept strictly in thirds with the bass for seven bars, and, in so doing, formed a study in thirds proceeding in contrary motion. The last two bars of the voice parts stand thus in the autograph—

No material alteration occurs in the succeeding interlude, except that the change from 'Full swell' to 'Great' is not indicated until bar 72, as shown in the subjoined example—

But the re-deem-ed shall . . . walk there.

Diaps. G. O. and Swell Reeds.

The above extract includes the most important change made by Wesley in the whole anthem, an alteration that has created one of the most beautiful and poetically-inspired things in music. Note the wonderful contrast—made by this alteration—between the passage 'The unclean shall not pass over it,' assigned to the lower voices singing in chorus, and the ethereal strain 'But the redeemed shall walk there,' sung solí by the upper voices. This happy afterthought speaks for itself; but attention may be called to the absence of the pauses in the 'Recit. ad lib.,' and that the movement was originally one bar shorter than it is now. The autograph bears evidence of some penknife erasures in the voice parts of the last three bars of the movement. The rather curious stop-registration, 'Swell, sesquialtera,' is, of course, a part of the afterthought. In the Leeds copy (1840) the notes of the last two bars are halved in value, crotchets for minims, &c., and no ritard. is indicated.

THE EASTER HYMN—AN EARLY WESLEYAN VERSION.

The tune associated with the Easter Hymn does not appear in present-day hymnals in its original form. During the two hundred years of its existence it has undergone various changes, as indeed have all the old tunes. In our issue of April, 1898, we reprinted the tune as it first appeared (anonymously) in 'Lyra Davidica,' a collection published in 1708. How soon this time-honoured melody got into general use is a matter of conjecture; but we find it in the earliest collection of hymn-tunes issued, in 1742, by John Wesley, a 12mo publication entitled:—

A | COLLECTION | OF | TUNES, | set to music, | as they are commonly sung at the | FOUNDERY.

London :

Printed by A. Pearson, and sold by | T. Harris, at the Looking-Glass and Bible, | on London-Bridge ;
T. Trye, at Gray's-Inn- | Gate, Holborn, and at the Foundry, near Upper- | Moorfields. MDCCXLII.

The Foundry mentioned in the title-page was situated in Moorfields. It had been used by the Government for a number of years for the casting of cannon. In 1716, while the guns captured by the Duke of Marlborough in his French wars were being recast, a terrible explosion occurred which blew off the roof and killed several of the workmen. The place was consequently abandoned and the works removed to Woolwich. The Foundry, as Wesley called it, remained in ruins till the year 1739, when John Wesley preached there for the first time. He then bought the place and adapted it for the purposes of his services at a cost of £800. On July 23, 1740, he writes in his journal: 'Our little company met at the Foundry instead of Fetter-lane.' Here he produced the above scarce little book of thirty-six pages, the pioneer of Wesleyan Methodist psalmody. It contained forty-two tunes: it was sold at the popular price of sixpence—an early instance of cheap music. The melody only of each tune is printed, with a verse of a hymn interlined. From this book we give in facsimile the Easter Hymn as it therein appears, named 'Salisbury.'

The heading, 'Vol. 1, Page 209,' refers to the 'Hymns and Sacred Poems' published by John and Charles Wesley in 1739 and 1740—books of special interest, as they contain the first printed hymns written by Charles Wesley. The number and the character of the printer's errors in this Foundry collection of tunes point to the probability of the book having been issued without the personal supervision of John Wesley, who was very particular as to the accuracy of his publications.

Turning to the Easter Hymn as it appears in the facsimile below, there can be no doubt that the first minim in line 2 should be E, not G. As to the actual variants from the original of 1708, the differences occur in bar 2—in which the melody is quite altered—and in the last two bars of the tune. The latter 'improvement' and artistic success. The chorus did well; and the congregational singing of the hymn 'All people that on earth do dwell' was impressive. Mr. Kerridge, of Corpus College, presided at the organ with masterly ability.

Such devotionally-conducted services as these, be they held in cathedral or parish church,—services in which the people are enjoined to participate—deserve all publicity and every encouragement.

not only causes the tune to end on the upper D,—instead of the lower, as in the original version—but it introduces a semiquaver group of notes, difficult even for a Foundery congregation to sing with the requisite clearness. However, there they are, 'for better, for worse.' At some future time we may make further reference to this, the first tune-book of the Wesleys'.

CATHEDRAL AND PARISH CHURCH MUSICAL SERVICES.

At the concluding special musical service of the season held in the nave of Gloucester Cathedral on the 3rd ult., Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's Biblical scene 'Emmaus' was sung, under the composer's direction, by a chorus of 177 voices accompanied by the organ and an orchestra of strings and drums. An immense congregation, estimated at 4,000 people, was present at this, the 166th of these enjoyable services—a sure test of their continued popularity. Inaugurated more than twenty-five years ago by Dr. Harford Lloyd, they have continued to flourish under the successive organistships of Mr. Lee Williams and Mr. Herbert Brewer. The good seed thus sown bears good fruit. For example, the vicar of Chesterton, near Cambridge (the Rev. Norman W. Shelton), a former precentor of Gloucester Cathedral, started similar services in his parish church, the fifth taking place on February 18. In sending us the service-paper—which is headed 'The congregation are asked to join heartily in the hymns'—Mr. Shelton writes:—

These services have been much appreciated in this important suburban parish, and the fine old church on Thursday was filled with a very large congregation. The lady soloist, Miss Jessie Wood, sang 'Hear my prayer' and 'Hear ye, Israel,' with devotional power

Mr. William Cowan, one of the authors of 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' writes:—'In reference to the communication in THE MUSICAL TIMES for March, p. 173, on the subject of the tune "Howard," I think there is little doubt that Mr. Grattan Flood is confusing two tunes of the same name. The Sequel to Weyman's Melodia Sacra contains a tune named "Howard's," headed "composed by Mrs. Cuthbert." This, I presume, is the tune referred to by Mr. Flood as having been composed by Miss Howard in 1807; but it is totally different from the "Howard" which has been long in use in Scotland as a psalm-tune, and which is the subject of the statement quoted by Mr. Flood from "The Music of the Church Hymnary."

The Annual Report of the Choir Benevolent Fund recently issued sufficiently indicates the continued prosperity of the Society, owing largely to the able administration of its affairs. It is to be hoped however that the circular letter addressed by the Secretary to the Deans of Cathedrals throughout the country, appealing for an Annual Offertory on behalf of the Fund, will yet receive more consideration than has apparently resulted at present, for the Fund is one certainly deserving of every support from all who are interested in the proper rendering of the beautiful musical services of our Cathedrals.

The council of the Royal College of Organists have provisionally fixed June 1 (Wednesday) as the date for the opening ceremony at the new college building at Kensington Gore. Progress is being made in the construction of the new large three-manual organ for the examinations, &c., which will take place from time to time in the new location of the College.

Mr. H. Millington, organist of the Parish Church, Trowbridge, has been the gratified recipient of a congratulatory address upon having attained the fortieth anniversary of his appointment. In reply thereto, Mr. Millington said that he had served under six rectors, and that he had had experience of no fewer than thirty-seven curates during the tenure of his organistship.

The Hampstead Nonconformist Choir Union held their fourth annual festival in Lyndhurst Road Church, Hampstead, on the 16th ult., when Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Gounod's 'Out of darkness' were performed by a choir of 150 voices. The rendering of the music showed a marked improvement upon former efforts, especially in the all-important matter of expression, the light and shade effects being commendable features of the singing of the choir. The soloists were Miss Florence Holderness, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. Henry Holyoake, and Mr. Arthur Barlow. Mr. G. Dorrington Cunningham was at the organ, and Mr. J. Douglas Macey again proved his fitness for the responsible duties of conductor.

A performance of Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary' (probably the first) was given at the Parish Church, Leytonstone, on the 18th ult., under the direction of Mr. E. Cuthbert Nunn. The cantata was announced to be repeated on the 25th ult. and on Good Friday. The work was also to be performed at St. Andrew's Church, Pittsburgh, U.S.A., on the 20th ult.; at the Congregational Church, Blackheath, on the 23rd; at St. George's Church, Barnsley, and the Fulwood Wesleyan Church, Sheffield, on Palm Sunday evening; also at Holy Trinity, Lee, on the 29th ult., and at numerous other churches.

Spohr's 'Calvary' was performed at St. Gabriel's Church, Warwick Square, Pimlico, on Sunday afternoon, the 20th ult., by a choir and orchestra of 150 performers, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster of the church, Mr. Douglas Smith.

The Hymn of the Passion (Pange lingua) composed by the Rev. J. Baden Powell was sung at a special service held in St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, on the 22nd ult.

THE ELGAR FESTIVAL.

A triumph for English music! In these words may be summed up the unique event which stirred musical London on the 14th, 15th, and 16th ult. Who could have ventured to prophesy a few years ago that an English composer's music would draw crowded and brilliant audiences to Covent Garden Theatre on three consecutive evenings? Not Dr. Elgar's firmest friends, not even the staunchest champions of his genius would have dared to think the time so near when the Metropolis of the British Empire would pay him this great, this unprecedented homage. The event—unique, let it be noted—was more than a local celebration. From all parts of the country visitors flocked to do honour to England's foremost composer, and their Majesties the King and Queen by their presence gave expression to that pride which Englishmen the world over must feel in their great compatriot.

'The Dream of Gerontius' was performed on the first day (the 14th ult.). The orchestra (100 players) and choir (275 voices) were the well-drilled organization from Manchester associated with Dr. Richter, who conducted with sympathetic intuitiveness and consummate mastery. As 'The Dream of Gerontius' proceeded however it became evident that, in placing the whole force of executants upon the stage, a grave error of judgment had been committed. The chorus were seated so far back that the voices always sounded muffled, and nothing like a real fortissimo was ever heard. Those who do not know the brilliancy of Dr. Elgar's choral writing nor the splendid sonority of his tutti under favourable conditions, could not possibly get a satisfactory idea from the performances at Covent Garden. Even the orchestra sounded ineffective, though no composer has ever written more effectively for instruments than Elgar. That in spite of such a serious drawback the music made its usual powerful impression, testifies to its great qualities. Chorus and orchestra were absolute masters of their difficult parts, and sang and played with that surety and precision, and that thorough understanding, which are the result of intelligent and most thorough training allied to an ardent enthusiasm for the music which is being interpreted. The soloists, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, were excellent. Mr. Coates as Gerontius especially showed a further advance towards perfection.

There is no need to go into further details in commenting upon this work which, since the Düsseldorf performances of December, 1901, and May, 1902, has become the most discussed choral composition of modern times.

'The Apostles' filled the programme of the second day. The work was new to London, but in spite of the acoustic

This exquisite idea — perhaps more harmony than melody, and yet who shall say — may well stand for a poet's day-dream in a spot such as Euterpe the muse herself might have chosen for her grove.

We must pass over many interesting details to quote the striking idea in which Elgar wishes to suggest 'the relentless and domineering onward force of the ancient day and the strife and wars of a later time.' Great and significant use is made of this virile episode —

No. 4. Maestoso.

and when we return from the vision of a soul-stirring past to the present-day sunlight, we hear the tune which, unless we are much mistaken, will make the fortune of the Overture. This is a viola solo below an ethereal accompaniment of first violins divisi in tre, four solo second violins, and harps: the lonely shepherd's plaintive song floating towards the serene azure of the Italian sky —

Harps and four 2nd Violins Soli.

No. 5. 1st Violins div. in 3.

The great charm of this lovely melody is no doubt largely due to the peculiarly affecting tone-quality of the viola, and on the occasion under notice the composer owed much to the beautiful playing of Mr. Speelman, one of the best of viola players. We may here correct an error into which Dr. Elgar's fondness for a joke has led the writers of the excellent analyses for the third concert programme, Messrs. Percy Pitt and Alfred Kalisch. Their statement that 'the tune is founded on a canto popolare, and that the composer does not know who wrote it,' is misleading. The tune is Dr. Elgar's own, and he has every reason to be proud of it after it has been greatly admired as 'An Italian Folk-tune.'

The themes which we have quoted are subjected to elaborate and remarkably individual treatment, the scoring is superb, as usual, and altogether the Overture is perhaps the most beautiful orchestral work which the composer has given to the world.

Dr. Elgar had a great reception upon appearing on the platform to conduct his new work, and an even more striking ovation was awarded him at its conclusion. The offering of a gigantic laurel wreath however seemed to cause him more embarrassment than immediate happiness.

We must not close our report without mentioning the selection (Scene I., the trio for Eigen, Orbin, and Caractacus) from 'Caractacus.' It was well sung by Madame Suzanne Adams, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos and Charles Clark, of whom the last-named, a new comer, proved himself an artist of unusual distinction. The strains of the famous Military March in D, conducted by the composer, concluded the programme and the Festival. Dr. Elgar received another ovation, after which Her Majesty the Queen sent for him and Dr. Richter to express to them her pleasure at the success of the Festival.

Thus ended an occasion unique in the history of English music—a one-composer Festival so successful in nearly every way that all who took part in it may look back upon it with pride and satisfaction. To our distinguished composer however it will be but the most powerful incentive to continue in his own individual way, and add fresh and still more beautiful works to the rich store which is the present proud possession of his grateful countrymen.

ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI.

Mr. Edward J. Dent, a Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and an earnest-minded musical historian, read an interesting paper before the Musical Association on the 8th ult. on the subject of 'Alessandro Scarlatti.' To attempt to give an adequate summary of this excellent discourse would lead to no satisfactory result. But this is the less to be regretted in that Mr. Dent intends to issue during the present year a complete biography of the composer of whose life he has made a special study—a book that is sure to be welcomed by many music lovers. We may however mention a few points of special import gathered from the paper aforementioned.

The lecturer began by saying that 'Alessandro Scarlatti was in his lifetime the most celebrated composer in all Europe, though probably Corelli, who was an executant as well, enjoyed a still greater fame.' He was born in the year 1659, in Sicily, probably at Palermo, and not at Trapani as is generally stated. As a composer he was at first undoubtedly influenced by Carissimi and Legrenzi. His initial experiments in harmony are to be found in the cantatas and the few surviving specimens of his early church music, wherein can be traced the same devices which we find in Purcell—devices which had their common origin in the old Roman master Carissimi. Although Scarlatti has left a fair amount of church music, he was not a church musician in spirit. If his sacred compositions are all masterly, some of them technically very interesting, and some of them quite beautiful from a purely musical point of view, these creations of his genius are very inferior to his other works.

The lecturer naturally made detailed reference to the many operas composed by Scarlatti, and in one of the illustrations—an air 'Cara tomba del mio diletto,' from the opera 'Mitridate Eupatore,' composed for Venice in 1707—it was pointed out that Scarlatti had much in common with J. S. Bach, although we may be quite certain that the great cantor had no knowledge of his Italian contemporary. Mr. Dent pointed out how Scarlatti developed his accompaniments to vocal music. He said: 'As his [Scarlatti's] style advances, and as violin-playing improves under the influence of Corelli, the strings become more important, and the cembalo retires into the background, until it becomes his normal procedure to accompany the voice with the strings only, without double-basses, sometimes even without violoncellos, letting the basses, harpsichords, lutes, &c., enter in the ritornelli only. It is this stage of Scarlatti's work that seems to have had most influence upon his immediate followers.' Moreover, before the 17th century ended, Scarlatti had fixed the form of the overture in its definite Italian shape.

The thoroughness with which Mr. Dent prosecutes his studies came out in a reference he made to Scarlatti's Cantate a voce sola, of which he had catalogued no fewer than 500. We were told that 'the earlier cantatas are much more narrative than the later ones: indeed there are a few which are little more than lectures on Roman history set to recitative!' Scarlatti in his day appears to have been looked upon as a Richard Strauss, being 'regarded by his contemporaries as a very audacious and extravagant harmonist, and it is pretty evident that he sometimes rather enjoyed puzzling his hearers with modulations which to our ears sound logical enough.' Turning to the emotional side of Scarlatti's music, the lecturer is of opinion that Mozart, of all composers, is the one who comes nearest to him in feeling; and, in an able peroration, Mr. Dent said: 'Just as Mozart half-a-century later united in himself all those qualities which Scarlatti's pupils had derived separately from the founder of their school, so Scarlatti himself gathered up all the tangled materials of that age of transition and experiment, the 17th century, to weave them into a firm foundation for the more elaborate schemes of the three great masters of the symphony and sonata. Alessandro Scarlatti is the Father of Classical Music.'

Some songs from Scarlatti's operas were sung with real charm of voice and style by Miss Holbrook in illustration of the lecture, over which Mr. A. H. D. Prendergast presided.

A REGRETTABLE INCIDENT.

At a meeting of the Ayrshire Branch of the Educational Institute of Scotland, held at Ayr on the 12th ult., Dr. Somervell, H.M. Inspector of Music, in discussing the use of Folk and National songs in schools, commented on the late Sir John Stainer's Report to the Education Department published in 1895. We give below Dr. Somervell's remarks (as reported in the Glasgow Herald), and out of respect for the memory of Sir John Stainer we feel bound to add for comparison all that he wrote on the subject in the Blue Book to which reference is made. The italics are ours.

DR. SOMERVELL'S REMARKS.

The children should be taught the national songs of their country as part of their national heritage; Scotland, England, Ireland, and Wales had, he thought, the best collection of national songs in the whole world. When he made a similar remark in the letter [regarding school songs previously] referred to, he was told that there was a Blue Book published against the teaching of national songs. He rubbed his eyes, but he did find a Blue Book which divided the national songs into four classes—love songs, drinking songs, hunting songs, and sea songs. They heard the children in the streets singing 'The Honeysuckle and the Bee,' a love song of a thoroughly rotten type, yet they were not to sing their beautiful Scotch love songs. Why were they supposed to be more demoralizing than 'The Honeysuckle and the Bee'? He (Dr. Somervell) would not be a party to teaching the children drinking songs in the school, although he ridiculed the suggestion in the Blue Book that the effect would be that the children would immediately rush to the nearest public house. Then hunting songs were not to be taught because they alluded to all manners and customs that did not now exist, besides our sensitive children ought not to be told about the killing of animals. He (Dr. Somervell) did not think we were such a set of milksops as that. Then they must not teach sea songs, because we now used different ships, and the children would not understand references to 'Heart of oak' and 'Wooden walls.' He was not burlesquing; it was all solemnly written in the Blue Book. Was the teaching of history so bad that the children did not know that Nelson fought in a wooden ship? If so, the sooner they learned a little bit of history from the old sea songs the better. Concluding, Dr. Somervell said that we had a great deal of latent music in us, but until something was done to bring it out we would never become a musical nation.

SIR JOHN STAINER'S REPORT (1895).

Though the literature of English national songs is remarkably extensive and replete with fine examples, a close study of them proves that comparatively only a small number are suitable for school use. This arises from various causes, of which only a few need be stated. It is well known to teachers that school songs should not have a very extended compass. When a large number of children are singing together there must necessarily be among them many who cannot sing very high and many also who cannot sing very low. It is most important that the voices of such children should not be 'strained' in either direction, songs of a medium compass are therefore a necessity. But unfortunately it is one of the characteristics of many of our old English songs that their range is often excessive, very commonly an octave and four notes, frequently a twelfth, and I have noted a large number which actually extend to a compass of thirteen notes.

But even if old songs of a suitable vocal compass are selected, we still have to face the difficulty of finding new sets of words to the old tunes, new linings for these cherished old garments, owing to the fact that so many are aimed at political events of their period, events of which an ordinary school child has now no knowledge and in which he can take no interest; and, also, because their keen and often clever satire is couched in the most unparliamentary language.

A large and very beautiful group of our songs were merely vehicles for the interchange of (the usual) compliments between the everlasting Phillis and Damon or Chloe and Corydon. But many of these have been revived in a form suitable to children. A vast number of our national songs are devoted to the subject of hunting. It is not quite in my province to give an opinion on this matter, but I should think that fox-hunting is not a subject on which it is advisable to concentrate children's thoughts, even if the methods of the sport had remained unchanged. But they have changed: I am no sportsman myself, but I am not aware that hunting men are now roused out of bed at daybreak by the blowing of horns under their windows or that they return after an enjoyable run to sit down to dinner at twelve o'clock. With regard to the drinking songs, of course temperance words might be set to them, as has been done with some of our old English glees, but the result always sounds to me rather incongruous. Even the sea songs have to some extent grown out of date; a large number of terms and the expressions grouped round them, which were familiar to sailors on wooden sailing ships, would be quite unintelligible to a man on board one of our ironclads. I suppose even the well-worn phrase 'Heart of oak' will eventually have to be converted into 'Plates of steel.'

But a considerable amount of interest has been lately taken in the preservation of our national songs, and I have no doubt our editors and publishers will bear in mind the needs of our little school children for simple melodies with good straightforward words.

Reviews.

PART-SONGS.

Now is the Month of Maying. By Gustav von Holst.

Matin Song. By W. H. Bell.

Away to the Woodlands. By H. Waldo Warner.

A Song of Summer; Night Whispers. By W. v. Moellendorff.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

It is always pleasant to think about May, especially when April winds blow, and those who sing Mr. Gustav von Holst's part-song should have a very pleasant time indeed, for the music is blithesome and gay. There is a good deal about 'Fa la, la' in the text, but then it was written in the 16th century, when *fa la la*s were de rigueur.

The text of Mr. W. H. Bell's composition is by Nathaniel Field, and it is one of those exhortations to arise from slumbers and listen to the serenader which at times must have been disturbing and little calculated to induce a lady to look with gracious eyes on her adorer. Mr. Bell's music however would go far to assuage any irritability on the part of the awakened damsel, and its rhythm being triple and duple measure in alternate bars could scarcely fail to awaken curiosity. This peculiarity gives a distinction to the music, for it imparts engaging freshness and quaintness to strains which otherwise are admirably conceived and cleverly written.

Mr. H. Waldo Warner's part-song carries one on the wings of imagination to the good old days when lads and lasses found bliss in dancing round a maypole. 'Away to the Woodlands' is a distinct invitation to do this, and the music is so gay and sprightly as to make one yearn for 'the pleasures of Spring' and to 'dance to the honour of May.'

'A Song of Summer' and 'Night Whispers' are intended to be sung unaccompanied, and if performed consecutively would gain in effect by contrast. They are settings of German lines, but an excellent English version has been furnished by Paul England; albeit even in Summer it is rare that sopranos sing the high G with 'glee,' but this is better than the German 'grünt.' A peculiarity of this part-song is a central section of sacred character in which reference is made to the Feast of Pentecost. 'Night Whispers' would make a splendid study for crisp and rapid, soft choral singing, and if sung as indicated by the composer it would create a sensational effect.

The Act of Touch in all its Diversity: an Analysis and Synthesis of Pianoforte Tone-production. By Tobias Matthay. pp. 328.

[London: Longmans.]

The important subject of touch in pianoforte playing has often been discussed, and especially in recent years: but we were not aware of the existence of any work in which it is dealt with on the scale and in the style of the long-expected and, we may add, welcome book, wherein Mr. Matthay has recently staggered humanity, or at least that considerable portion of it interested in pianoforte playing. Mr. A. performs quite correctly a certain piece, and produces a dull impression. Mr. B. plays the same piece at the same pace as Mr. A. (so that if both players perform simultaneously they appear to unite perfectly) and produces a vastly different effect. We explain that Mr. A. is a mere plodder, and that Mr. B. is an artist. But the difference of effect, however apparently elusive, obviously is ultimately mechanical; it must arise from subtleties in the mode of depressing the key on the keyboard. Are such subtleties analysable from the mechanical side, or are they in the main essentially empirical? This is the problem which Mr. Matthay has the boldness to attack. The motto chosen for the book is that 'there can be no effect without a cause.' If the first impressions on poring over the volume are bewildering and astonishing because of the extraordinary fulness with which minute points are argued, one soon after gets deeply interested if not fully convinced. Every page has its deep, pregnant idea expressed in carefully chosen language. In Mr. Matthay's explanations and arguments there is always an undercurrent of appeal to the first principles of the relations of mind and matter and natural law generally. Physiology, anatomy, psychology and evolution are applied with Spencerian insistence. The book is no mere meandering round and toying with obscure transcendentalism; the tread of its logic is firm and the clearness of its diction bears witness to the amplitude of Mr. Matthay's vocabulary and the width and depth of his reading. The arrangement of the material of the book is masterly, even though it involves much repetition—a repetition which no good student will regret, inasmuch as it serves to drive the important points well home, and avoids the weariness felt when constant back references are necessary.

Mr. Matthay divides his work into four distinct parts. Part I. deals with general aspects of pianoforte playing; Part II. treats particularly of the Instrumental aspect, i.e., what happens on and in the instrument; Part III., which is by far the most important section, deals with the Muscular aspect of playing; and Part IV. has to do with Position. Each part has its explanatory preamble and carefully condensed recapitulation, both most luminous features of the design, and at the end there is yet another general summary and recapitulation. In this notice we can only briefly indicate some of the leading ideas of each section.

Part I. sets out the conditions of the problem to be studied. The difference between empiric and rational systems of teaching is thus described:—

'The empiric method of Pianoforte Education consisted in choosing pieces, studies, and technical-exercises, more or less suitable for the learner, and then leaving him to make tentative efforts to perform these; the comparative failure that resulted from his helpless, undirected floundering, being corrected—as it was supposed, by scolding, bullying, or encouraging him into trying again, according to the temper of the instructor!'

'A rational scheme of Education, on the contrary, would consist: in analysing the subject to be taught; analysing also the successful doings of successful artists; thence deducing the laws and rules that govern successful performance; and then directly communicating such laws of procedure to the pupil, instead of leaving him to discover them for himself.'

The necessity of correct principles of touch becoming habitual is urged. At first the acts involved are highly self-conscious, then they are gradually relegated to sub-consciousness—a relegation which can be accomplished only by a slowly-built co-ordination on natural lines of will, nerves, and muscles.

Part II. examines the behaviour of the instrument after the key has been struck or, in view of Mr. Matthay's condemnation of 'hitting,' we should say, made to descend to its bed. A minute description of the mechanical construction of the pianoforte is given. It is strongly urged that in order to produce the best tone possible it is not necessary to hit the keys: they must be pressed, not struck; and as the key with its apparatus of leverage and rebounding hammer cannot, after it has made the string vibrate, further exert the slightest influence over the string, it is futile to squeeze it down upon its bed with the object of inducing tone. The quantity of tone varies with the speed of the descent of the key. The more gradually the key descends the more beautiful is the tone-character. The more rapid the key depression the harsher is the tone-quality.

There is a long appendix 'on the fallacy of key-hitting or striking.' The author says: 'The deplorably evil effects of deliberately teaching key-hitting have proved incredibly far-reaching and disastrous to the progress of our art,' and he adds that 'it is, however, difficult to decide whether such "key-striking" is the most fell disease, or whether there is not a worse one still—in the shape of key-bed squeezing'! The following extract will give some idea of Mr. Matthay's contention:—

'SUDDEN attack of the string no doubt tends to produce but a concussion at the string's surface, causing it as it were to "wriggle off" into movement; hence a poor sound, harsh with harmonics. . . . GRADUAL attack tends, on the contrary, to give it a really far greater momentum, the resulting vibrations partaking rather of the simple (fundamental) type than of the compound (harmonic) type. . . . If we desire to give a person seated in a swing a good "shove off," it is useless to endeavour to do so by means of a sudden jerk or knock. The only way to secure an effective result is to apply force gradually: by allowing our hand gently to come into contact with the person—without concussion therefore, and realizing the degree of resistance to be overcome, we increase the energy of the push given, as the speed is felt to increase by virtue of it.' (Page 75.)

Part III. is devoted to key-treatment from its muscular aspect, a point of view which Mr. Matthey says at once brings us face to face with the most important problems dealt with in this work, and concerning which there exist generally the darkest ignorance and the most vicious teaching. Three muscular components are recognized—namely, the down-activity of the Finger, the activity of the Hand, and Arm-weight. We despair in the limits of this review of the possibility of giving an adequate summary of Mr. Matthey's views and elaborate arguments as unfolded in the 172 closely-printed pages devoted to this one matter. No doubt the intelligent anticipation of controversy before it occurs has induced the author to accumulate evidence in support of his contentions. He finds that there are 'some 42 distinct kinds' of key attack. The circumstances in which bent fingers and flat fingers may or may not be used are fully discussed. It is said that—

'The flat or clinging finger (with its correlated "hanging" upper-arm) reduces the whole system of finger-hand-and-arm into the most elastic condition;—a disposition favouring therefore a gradual transmission to the key of the full amount of Energy employed—with its resulting gradual key-depression and more sympathetic (or unpercussive) quality of tone.'

The following passage from Franklin Taylor's 'Technique and Expression' (a valuable book full of grit and probably elaborate enough to satisfy most pianoforte students) is quoted on this point:—'To produce the most musical and singing quality, it is necessary that the finger, however firm the pressure, should be in an elastic condition, and it is therefore important that every joint of the finger and hand, and even the wrist, should be kept loose and should yield slightly with each pressure of the finger tip.' But Mr. Matthey adds that it is the whole limb (from the shoulder) that becomes elastic if we employ what he alarmingly calls 'Upper-arm Weight-lapse.'

We pass on to Part IV., which deals with Position. Mr. Matthey considers this to be of secondary importance. He laments the deplorable mistake committed by nearly all teachers until recently in attaching such vastly exaggerated importance to the matter, many going so far as to make it into an absolute fetish. His own view is that most of the details of Position should demand but little attention, since they are likely to fulfil themselves automatically, provided we insist upon the correct muscular conditions. Nevertheless some forty pages are devoted to a discussion of the details of position. We note one of the numerous points dealt with. As to the horizontal placing of the fingers on the keyboard, Mr. Matthey says:—

'Seen from above, the fingers should reach the centre of their keys. In the case of white-key passages the middle-finger should reach its white key close to the front-edge of the black keys, the remaining fingers reaching their keys slightly behind this position—slightly nearer the outside edge of the key-board, each finger according to its relative shortness. . . . It is a total fallacy to suppose that the fingers must reach their keys all in the same line.'

What will be the influence of this extraordinary book? It should be deep and widespread even if its doctrines are not all accepted. But we have to reckon with the imperviousness of teachers and performers who have already found salvation or think they have, which in this connection amounts to the same thing. Then some will be repelled by what appears to be a convincing demonstration of the impossibility of their ever playing a pianoforte properly, even if they can procure the superlatively fine instrument required. But when all is said it must be acknowledged that Mr. Matthey has earned a place on a pedestal in a prominent position in the pantheon of pianoforte pedagogues.

Three Dances. By Frank E. Tours. Arranged for Violin and Pianoforte by the composer.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

These Three Dances by Mr. Frank E. Tours have been arranged by him from the original orchestral score. The latter is not yet published; but, judging from the present transcription, these terpsichorean themes should prove highly effective and attractive concert pieces. The first is a bright allegretto movement in E minor; the second opens with a very expressive larghetto in E flat for the G string—which however would undoubtedly become much more effective on the violin if the unison accompaniment provided for the pianoforte were omitted—followed by a pleasingly contrasted pizz. mosso subject in B flat, and concluding with a repetition of the larghetto; whilst the third, bubbling over with animation, brings the set to an exhilarating conclusion. The violin part demands a fair amount of executive ability on the part of the performer.

SONGS.

To Daffodils; The Ballad of the Red Deer. By Dora Bright. Susani. 14th century carol. Arranged by Ethel Barns.

Voices of Vision; Willows (Op. 24). By Cyril Scott.

Three tiny Songs. By Frank Lynes.

[Elkin and Co.]

The tinge of melancholy that pervades Herrick's little poem 'To Daffodils' is reflected in Madame Bright's music; and so also is the poetic charm of the lines, which gain in significance by alliance with this clever lady's strains. Higher praise could scarcely be given. The text of 'The Ballad of the Red Deer' is simply announced as being by F. H. Apparently the verses are an allegory, and the moral would seem to be that when you go a-hunting you should not give heed to any stray Earl's daughter who gazes forth from a lattice window, for it is told that of the three knights who rode by 'he who mounted the Castle stair, ne'er more the world shall roam!' The song is cast in true ballad form with a refrain which leaves room for the play of the imagination of the listener, and the accompaniment is appropriately simple.

'Susani' is a German carol of the 14th century, which, furnished with English words by Mr. Alfred Kalisch, has been arranged for voice and pianoforte accompaniment by that clever violinist and composer Mrs. Charles Phillips (née Ethel Barns). Of the antiquity of the melody there can be no doubt, and care has been taken to preserve its archaic character in the harmonization, which, without being obtrusive, is effective.

The music of Mr. Cyril Scott has of late attracted so much favourable attention that we took up 'Voices of Vision' and 'Willows' with considerable interest, which may be said to have increased with their examination. They would seem to be experiments in chromatic harmonics. Mr. Scott is his own poet, an undertaking, be it said, that is justified by results, and consequently the words are suitable to the unconventional style of the music. The pervading tonality of the first song is G, but Mr. Scott does not trouble to indicate this in the signature, and the first four bars of the introduction contain forty sharps, flats and naturals. Numbers are not criticism, but in this case they indicate the abnormal chromaticism of the harmonic scheme. Although some theorists would style it mad, there is method in it, and some vague and weird effects appropriate to the text are secured, but we fancy that Mr. Scott in the future will get the same results by simpler means.

Mr. Lynes's songs are only trifles, but they are significant. The words may be described as poetical moralizings, and the music, while simple, is tasteful. The most important of the group is entitled 'If all the pity and love untold.'

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Rare éclat was given to the concert—Queen's Hall, on the 2nd ult.—which inaugurated the ninety-second year of this venerable Institution. The Queen and the Prince of Wales were present, and a very large audience shared with them the pleasures of the evening. It is understood that the King had intended to honour the concert with his presence, but slight indisposition frustrated this desire of his Majesty. Artistic as well as social distinction was conferred upon this music-making in that the only actual novelty of the Society's prospectus was performed—a Symphonic Prelude to Byron's 'Manfred,' composed by Mr. A. von Ahn Carse. The Prelude forms the initial number of an opera on the subject of 'Manfred'—an opera which 'some day' may be heard. In the meantime we have the Prelude constructed from themes taken from the complete work. Youth is proverbially bold, and Mr. A. von Ahn Carse is no exception to the rule. Undeterred by the failures of Schumann and Tschaiikovsky to successfully portray in music the 'inexplicable' drama of Byron's creation, the ex-student of the Royal Academy of Music takes up the theme with commendable courage. The result, judging from the Prelude, is very interesting from a technical point of view, especially that of clever orchestration. There can be no question that the young composer's effects 'come off.' The most original and, let us add, very beautiful one is the second Manfred theme, assigned first to the four horns in full harmony (the other instruments taceti) and subsequently to four violas, whose weird melancholy tones made a deep impression. The question however may be asked: Why do present-day composers in the early dawn of their careers choose such gloomy subjects as 'Manfred' for the exercise of their talent? What induces them to philosophize in music? Is it a natural condition of mental perception? One longs for strains that shall tend to brighten existence, and not constantly remind us of 'measureless despair'—in other words 'the blues.'

The remainder of the concert does not call for extended notice. Miss Elizabeth Parkina, the American vocalist, sang well a delightful air 'Depuis le jour' from Charpentier's 'Louise'; Miss Marie Hall gave her usual brilliant interpretation of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto—in which she flies away with the tempo of the last movement; Miss Dorothy Maggs played Tschaiikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor; while Schumann's genial Symphony in B flat—a jubilee performance (see p. 235 of the present issue)—concluded the concert.

The programme of the concert on the 24th ult. opened with Beethoven's frisky Fourth Symphony, and closed with Strauss's tone-poem 'Death and Transfiguration'—there are no symptoms of death in the Symphony. Mr. Leonard Borwick ably interpreted Brahms's first Pianoforte Concerto; Bottesini's F sharp minor Concerto for double-bass served to show the ability and agility of Mr. Claude Hobday, one of the contrabassists of the orchestra; and Miss Maria Gay was the vocalist. Dr. Cowen conducted with his wonted enthusiasm.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

It is pleasant to know that the recent season of Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall have been so well supported that it has been decided to give three extra performances on the 28th inst., May 10, and June 2. The concert on February 27 does not call for detailed notice, but merits warm praise for the revival of Haydn's Symphony in C, the first of the Salomon set, a delightful work, delightfully rendered. No less enjoyable was Mozart's clavier Concerto in A (B. & H., No. 23), the solo part of which was played to perfection by M. Raoul Pugno; Brahms's 'Variations on a theme by Haydn,' and Strauss's Symphonic Poem 'Don Juan,' which completed the scheme.

The feature of the concert on the 12th ult. was a performance of Liszt's 'Dante' Symphony. Originally produced in 1857 at Dresden, it was first heard in England at a concert given by Mr. Wilhelm Ganz on April 22, 1882, at St. James's Hall. The late Walter Bache conducted it in the following year, and Dr. Richter brought it forward at one of his concerts in 1890. To the majority of the audience on the 12th ult. the work probably came however in the nature of a novelty, and it is a testimony to the advanced character of Liszt's genius that the music appeared so fresh, particularly with regard to its scoring, which is remarkably modern. The first movement and the choral close are the more satisfactory portions of the work. The former is well balanced, contains striking themes, and the episode dealing with the incident of Paola and Francesca is very beautiful. The central portion, 'Purgatorio,' suffers from contrast with the vividness of the 'Inferno' section, and still more from over-development indulged in until the listener experiences somewhat of that Purgatorial weariness described by Dante; but the music is lofty in conception and the orchestral colouring is very pure, rich, and most appropriate to the subject. The choral portion was excellently sung by the ladies of Mr. Smallwood Metcalfe's choir from Eastbourne, and subsequently these choristers gave admirable renderings of Dr. Elgar's charming part-songs 'Fly, singing bird, fly' and 'The Snow.' At the request of Mr. Henry J. Wood, the composer recently scored them for orchestra, and these parts were played for the first time on this occasion. Needless to say they add greatly to the effectiveness of the beautiful compositions. It should be added that M. Henri Marteau, Professor of the Geneva Conservatoire, made his reappearance in England in Beethoven's Violin Concerto, in which he played with great finish and purity, if somewhat coldly.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The Royal Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' at the Albert Hall on the 10th ult., under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, with Mr. H. L. Balfour at the organ. Sir Frederick worked very hard to get the best results from his singers, but although some of the choruses were finely sung, the choir has been heard to greater advantage. The soloists were Messdames Sobrino, Maggie Purvis, Kirkby Lunn, and Messrs. Charles Saunders, Harry Dearth, and Andrew Black. As supplementary to the notice in last month's issue of the performance of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's sacred cantata 'The Atonement,' it should be stated that the work was then sung for the first time in its revised and improved form, and that it was listened to with evident interest by an appreciative audience.

ROYAL ACADEMY AND ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The concert given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music on February 25 brought forth a clever pianoforte suite entitled 'Transformations on an original theme,' by Mr. Paul Corder. The several numbers are respectively named 'Prelude,' 'Rhapsody,' 'Mazurka,' 'Elegy,' and 'Polonaise,' and show skill, invention, and perception of what is effective on the keyboard. The work was played with notable brilliancy by Mr. Claude Gascoigne.

The pupils of the Royal College of Music gave on the 18th ult. a most praiseworthy performance of César Franck's Symphony in D minor, under the direction of Sir Charles V. Stanford. The difficulties of the work are considerable, and it was most interesting to mark how boldly they were attacked and for the most part valiantly overcome by the young players. The renderings of other compositions were equally commendable, and the soloists all showed decided talent and gave proof of having received excellent training.

BROADWOOD CONCERTS.

Distinction was given to the Broadwood Chamber concert on the 3rd ult. by the first performance in London of Dvorák's String Quintet in E flat (Op. 97). The composition dates from the period of the composer's sojourn in America, and may be regarded as a companion work to the Quartet in F. The Quintet was interpreted with the verve and brilliancy for which the Bohemian Quartet is famous, the additional string part being played by Herr Benedictus. This concert concluded the second series of Messrs. Broadwood's venture, but so successful had it proved that three extra performances were decided upon. At the first of these, on the 10th ult., the Moscow Trio made their second appearance in London. As in June last, the party consists of MM. David Shor (pianist), David Krein (violinist), and Rudolph Erlich (violinocellist), and they played with fascinating finish, unanimity of expression, and an artistic intuition that made the interpretations of Tschaiikovsky's 'Elegiac' Trio in A minor (Op 50) and Schubert's in B flat (Op. 99) pleasantly memorable. The second and third 'extra' concerts on the 18th and 29th ult. were entrusted to the Kneisel String Quartet from Boston, U.S.A. The last previous appearance of this party in England was in 1897, when it comprised MM. Franz Kneisel, Karl Ondricek, Louis Svecenski, and Alwin, but the second violin is now M. J. von Theodorowicz. On the 18th ult. most highly-polished interpretations were given of Beethoven's second 'Rasoumovsky' Quartet and Dvorák's 'Negro' Quartet in F (Op. 96), but in regard to readings the performances were somewhat cold.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

The recent series of visits of Dr. Richter and his Manchester Orchestra to London terminated at the Queen's Hall on the 1st ult. The selection ranged from Cherubini to Wagner, and Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'Mazeppa' fared better under Dr. Richter's baton than did Mozart's Symphony in E flat (Köchel 543).

The second part of the first act from 'Die Walküre,' with Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Ben Davies as soloists, was finely rendered, but the interpretation of Bach's Concerto in E for violin and orchestra, in which it was stated Miss Otie Chew made her first public appearance in England, was less satisfactory.

RECITAL OF ANCIENT MUSIC.

The pianoforte and vocal recital given by Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies at St. James's Hall on the 10th ult. proved remarkably interesting. The former artist played for the first time in London a number of the clavier pieces of old and little-known Netherlandish composers from the collection made by Chevalier van Elewyck. The composers drawn upon were Joseph Hector Fiocco, of whom little is known except that he was born in Brussels in 1690, and became Chapelmaster of Notre Dame, Antwerp, in 1731; Jean Thomas Baustetter, organist at the parish church of St. André, Antwerp, and subsequently at Notre Dame, Bruges, who died in 1788; Dieudonné Raick, a native of Liège, appointed organist at Antwerp Cathedral in 1721, died in 1764; Chrétien van der Borgh, born at Louvain in 1729, where he spent a greater part of his life as organist of the Abbey of St. Gertrude; Matthias van der Gheyn, the celebrated carillonneur, who lived from 1721 to 1785. The collection was made in monasteries and various out-of-the-way places, and the pieces played by Miss Fanny Davies certainly justified the labour which was spread over many years. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies was heard in Bach's almost unknown Cantata 'Amore Traditore,' for baritone and cembalo, in songs by Schumann, and in three old Welsh ditties, one of the latter entitled 'David of the White Rock' being a song of real pathos.

THE MERTHYR AND DOWLAIS PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY AT QUEEN'S HALL.

It was rather remarkable that on the 14th ult., when a choir from Manchester was performing at the Covent Garden Elgar Festival, a choir from a distant corner of Wales was simultaneously performing at Queen's Hall. On its merits the Merthyr and Dowlais Philharmonic Society fully deserved a metropolitan hearing. It has the good fortune to be conducted by Mr. Harry Evans, and it is one of the few choirs in Wales formed on a permanent basis and not merely scratched together for competition purposes. But although the record of the choir as a regular concert-giving institution is excellent, it also includes a victory in the chief class at the National Eisteddfod. The programme on the present occasion was miscellaneous, but it served to exhibit the first-rate training of the choir. Their tone is pure and round, but perhaps not wholly sweet in the blend. The execution was always artistic, and never defaced by the exaggerations that often characterize the performance of Welsh choristers. Mr. Evans is evidently a restraining force, and his ideals of choral execution are derived from the best standards. Miss Maggie Davis, Mr. Thomas Thomas, Mr. Iver Foster, Miss A. Backsheen Wood (violin), and Mr. Merlin Morgan (accompanist) also took part in the concert.

The performances at the Popular Concerts in the past month have maintained a high level of excellence, if at times they have failed to attain the degree which gives distinction. Reliance has chiefly been placed on familiar masterpieces, consequently detailed criticism is unnecessary; but it should be recorded that 'Le Quatuor Lyrique' from Paris sang an interesting selection of ancient and modern vocal part-music on the 5th and 7th ult., and that three clever, new settings by Mr. Rutland Boughton of poems by Rudyard Kipling, respectively entitled 'The Price of Admiralty,' 'The Deep-sea Cables,' and 'The Song of the Sons,' were effectively sung by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

A pleasing feature of Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. Charles Phillips's chamber concert on the 12th ult. at Bechstein Hall was the first performance of a Sonata for violin and pianoforte by the former artist, who played the string part of her composition. The work possesses a certain freshness of ideas which, combined with graceful and melodious themes, invest the music with no little attractiveness. It so greatly pleased the audience that Miss Barns was induced to repeat the scherzo. The pianoforte part was excellently rendered by Miss Isabel Hirschfeld. At the same concert was produced for the first time a second set of 'Blake Songs' by Mr. Arthur Hinton. Their exponent, Mr. Phillips, sang them admirably and was recalled to the platform several times.

Miss Irene Penso distinctly improved her artistic position by tasteful and refined playing at her violin recital on the 8th ult. at St. James's Hall. Her selection included a 'Romance,' new to London, by M. Rachmaninoff, a scholarly if not remarkable piece. Mr. John Prouse contributed some songs with acceptance.

The Mozart Society gave a concert for the benefit of its founder, Herr J. H. Bonawitz, on the 19th ult. at the Portman Rooms. An admirable rendering was secured of this musician's Requiem Mass, and a feature of the afternoon was the dramatic singing of Miss Blanche Gordon.

Mr. John Dunn gave an orchestral concert on the 4th ult. at St. James's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Hamish McCunn. Mr. Dunn was heard in Beethoven's Concerto, Tschaiikovsky's Concerto in D, and Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Pibroch' Suite, the last-named conducted by the composer.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral Society gave a concert in aid of the North Eastern Hospital for Children on the 23rd ult., when the playing of the orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Arthur Payne, was of customary excellence. An interesting feature was the début of a very youthful violinist—Sybil Keymer—a pupil of Herr August Wilhelmj, who played the Adagio and Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto with excellent technique and sympathetic feeling quite remarkable in one so young.

Among other numerous concerts and recitals may be mentioned the pianoforte recital given by Miss Elsie Hall at Steinway Hall on February 25, when the young artist showed that she was making good progress in her art.—Miss Winifred Christie's sympathetic and intelligent pianoforte playing at her recital on the 3rd ult. at St. James's Hall.—The series of seven historical pianoforte recitals by Miss Adela Verne, the fourth of which takes place on the 13th inst. at the Salle Erard.—Miss Ethel Hirschheim's enjoyable vocal recital on the 10th ult. at Bechstein Hall.—Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton's interesting and enjoyable concerts of little-known ancient music at Brinsmead Galleries on February 23 and the 22nd ult.

Canon Gorton, the Chairman of the Morecambe Festival Committee, sends us some interesting notes regarding the forthcoming meetings to be held on the 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th inst. On the last day there will be about 1,800 singers in evidence, including many of the best north country choirs, and the programme is full of interest. A remarkable fact is that during the fourteen years of the existence of the Festival 126 composers have been represented by 305 compositions. No piece has been done twice. Welsh Eisteddfod managers please copy.

Suburban Concerts.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' on the evening of the 5th ult. at the Crystal Palace, under the conductorship of Mr. Arthur Fagge, to whom great credit is due for the generally excellent rendering which the work received. The chorus was particularly good, displaying sonority of tone and close attention to detail. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Arthur Winkworth. Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock was at the organ. Not only were the large audience deeply impressed with the music, but the occasion was one that excited great interest in the neighbourhood.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'The Dream of Jubal' formed the chief feature of the concert given by the South London Choral Association on the 18th ult., and the work was listened to with rapt attention by a large audience. The poem was recited by Mr. Richard Temple, whose efforts met with much acceptance, and Miss Emily Davies and Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst gave great satisfaction in the principal soprano and tenor solos and in the duet. Miss Edith Judge and Mr. W. E. Soar completed the quartet of principals for the 'Gloria in Excelsis.' A capital orchestra (led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) gave full effect to the important part assigned thereto by the composer, while the choruses were rendered in the manner which has for many years earned for the Association a high place in the ranks of London Choral Societies. The programme further included Sir Frederick Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clamphdown,' Miss Gertrude Venables was organist and Mr. L. C. Venables conducted with his experienced skill.

The Reeves Quartet (Messrs. H. Wynn Reeves, Henry Gibson, H. Goom and J. T. Field) gave an enjoyable concert of chamber music at the West Hampstead Town Hall on February 27 before a crowded audience. Beethoven's String Quartet in D (No. 3, Op. 18) and Brahms's Clarinet Quintet (the clarinet part played by Mr. George W. Anderson) were included in the programme. A feature of special interest was an excellent and well interpreted Pianoforte Trio (MS.) composed by Mr. Henry Gibson. The composer, who is a nephew of Mr. Alfred Gibson and the second violin in the Quartet, played the pianoforte part in his own Trio, and Miss Ethelmay Holbrook contributed some songs in a tasteful manner.

The Inaugural Concert of the Winchmore Hill Choral and Orchestral Society took place in the main hall of the New Institute on the 16th ult., the chief feature of the programme being Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The fact that nearly the whole of the orchestra (led by Mr. G. A. Parker) were amateur is worthy of note, and their more than capable rendering of the Symphony speaks much for the earnest and patient training of the conductor, Mr. J. Gilmour Laird, who was no less successful in results with the choir. The solo vocalists were Miss Lucy Turner, Miss Florence Bunce, and Mr. Henry Turnpenny.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, March 8, 1904.

The budget of news which must go into this letter is so large that even hasty comment on the most important things is all but impossible. The record, moreover, must be confined to New York, barring the mere mention that the struggle to perpetuate the Chicago Symphony Orchestra promises to end successfully (the subscriptions to the fund having reached $650,000, leaving only $100,000 more to be raised) and that the 'Dream of Gerontius' has been successfully produced in Boston under the direction of B. J. Lang, and in Philadelphia under H. G. Thunder.

The noteworthy incidents in the New York season since my last report have been many. Let me list them before they slip out of my mind. Dr. Elgar's 'The Apostles' had its first production at Carnegie Hall on February 9;

Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Atonement' at St. Thomas's Church on February 24 and 25; the opera season came to an end, so far as the regular subscription performances are concerned, on March 5; 'Don Quixote' received its first performance at the hands of Mr. Gericke and his band of virtuosi from Boston on February 18, and exactly a fortnight later it was heard under the direction of its composer, Dr. Richard Strauss, at the second concert of a Strauss Festival laid out on precisely the same lines as that prepared for the English metropolis last summer; Victor Herbert of Pittsburgh, Felix Weingartner of Munich, and Wasili I. Safonoff of Moscow have conducted concerts of the Philharmonic Society; Alfred Reisenauer and Ferruccio Busoni have given pianoforte recitals here and in the principal cities of the country.

Dr. Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' was performed (on February 9) at an extra concert of the Oratorio Society, assisted by a choir of the Musical Art Society (the latter composed of professional singers), for the benefit of the City History Club. Mr. Frank Damrosch prepared and conducted the work, which created so much interest that Mr. Damrosch felt justified in changing his purpose of devoting the third regular concert of the Oratorio Society to Brahms's 'German Requiem' and a Bach cantata, and repeating 'The Apostles' on March 24. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Atonement' was made the central feature of the first service, or recital, of the reorganized Church Choral Society under Richard Henry Warren. There were two performances, one in the afternoon of February 24, and one in the evening of the 25th. The choir was a highly efficient one of 150 voices and the instrumental apparatus was ample. The affair was invested with the solemnity of a churchly function, all the performers being surplined, the congregation uniting in a familiar hymn (the Passion chorale, 'O sacred Head, once wounded'), and the meeting ending with Collect and Benediction. Mr. Taylor's work benefited from the serious consideration which such surroundings insured, and was listened to with profound respect. The critical voice seemed to question whether the ingenious composer's treatment of his subject was quite on the plane long ago established as proper to that theme. Greater power and less sentimentality seemed desirable.

The subscription season at the opera endured fifteen weeks, within which time, besides the regular sixty performances, there were eleven representations of 'Parsifal,' and sixteen representations of works from the regular repertory at reduced prices. To these was added a serial performance of Wagner's 'Ring of the Nibelung,' which will extend the season to the 10th inst. The company, which has been giving weekly representations all the season in Philadelphia, will now visit Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati, Boston, and other cities, and return towards the close of April for another series of the dramas forming the tetralogy and a final 'Parsifal.' The record made by the last drama is stupendous. The ten representations originally contemplated were augmented by one in the daytime on February 22, which is a national holiday (Washington's birthday). The gross receipts on these eleven performances were $186,308, an average of $16,937 a performance. My prediction of two months ago has been verified to the letter. Whether or not there is in this a cause for rejoicing I shall not discuss long. The production of 'Parsifal' has worked for good artistically, but also for evil. It has marred the opera season by heightening its commercial spirit in a manner never reached before when there was much less protestation of artistic virtue; and the fact that the country will be flooded with cheap imitations of the really admirable performances within a few months will degrade the standard of Wagnerian representations and lessen the popular respect which 'Parsifal' deserves from every point of view.

We are in the midst of the Strauss Festival which had its beginning on February 27, when Dr. Richard Strauss introduced himself as conductor of 'Ein Heldenleben' at a concert which opened with 'Also sprach Zarathustra' conducted by Herman Hans Wetzler. The concert was the last of a series projected by Mr. Wetzler which had failed to enlist public interest, and Dr. Strauss's debut was, to that extent, unfortunate. Before the second concert Dr. Strauss appeared as pianoforte accompanist in a recital of his songs, the singer being his wife, Madame Strauss-de Ahna. Neither in voice nor in art did she meet popular expectation or satisfy popular demand. At the second concert Mr. Wetzler's orchestra came to grief in 'Don Quixote' though Dr. Strauss was himself at the helm. A fortnight before the work had had an amazingly brilliant performance in a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the comparisons, inevitable under the circumstances, robbed the occasion of all the lustre which it might have had, had the fantastical work received a luminous and authoritative reading. Added to this was the fact that the audience was pitifully small. It was announced that the third concert set down for to-morrow (March 9) would be signaled by the first production of the composer's latest work, the much-discussed 'Symphonia domestica'; but as I write the announcement reaches me that Dr. Strauss, who has also conducted concerts in Philadelphia and Boston, has found it impossible to prepare the work, and that its production is postponed till the last concert. This concert, set down for March 16, will also have to be postponed to a date not yet agreed upon. The Strauss Festival is a woeful financial failure, and thus far has yielded little else than disappointment artistically.

Very different were the experiences of our other foreign visitors. Herr Weingartner, for whom the Philharmonic Society set aside the traditions of decades and gave a concert outside the subscription, made so profound an impression on the musical life of the American metropolis that an effort will doubtless be made to bring him here permanently, or for a term of years; while M. Safonoff had the staid Philharmonic audience on its feet waving kerchiefs and cheering minutes by the dial after Tschaikevsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony and Beethoven's 'Leonore' No. 3. He is a conductor of vast temperamental and elemental puissance, and excited his players almost as much as he did the audience.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15.

The great success which the songs of Hugo Wolf have achieved throughout Germany has brought about the desire to become acquainted with his other works, of which the opera 'Der Corregidor' is the most important. This work has already been given on several German stages, but after a few performances laid aside; for this reason the Opera here did not feel any inducement to announce it; at last however the management yielded to the pressure of numerous admirers of Wolf's music. The performance must be regarded as an honour due to the composer who spent his whole life here, rather than as a necessity; and that honour was paid with all due éclat—the rendering being in every respect admirable. It was accepted as a pious duty discharged towards the song composer whose tragic end excited a feeling of melancholy. 'Der Corregidor' is neither a ripe nor an effective work; it shows the praiseworthy writing of a neophyte. Much in it is commonplace, while of dramatic traits there are few. Again, for the merry story the music is conceived in too tragic a mood; hence the scene of jealousy, one of the best in the work, does not make its proper effect. Still there are signs of talent, and for those who take interest in musico-dramatic problems there are some notable points.

Emil Paur, a former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has given an interesting concert. He was trained in the Viennese school—his father as orchestral player took part in performances given under the direction of Beethoven himself. He is a brilliant conductor, and knows how to interest and magnetize his audience.

An unusual musical event was the performance of Bach's cantata 'O ewiges Feuer.' We live in a Catholic country in which church performances of Protestant sacred works are not permitted, hence they have to be given in a concert-hall. The wonderful aria in this cantata was admirably sung by Frau Helene Durigo, while the choir of the 'Singverein' deserve all praise for their participation in the work. A deep impression was created by Brahms's little-known 'Begräbnisgesang' (Burial Song). The performance, for the first time here, of Tschaikevsky's 'Winter Dreams' Symphony, No. 1, was listened to with marked interest. Löwe, who conducted all these works with the utmost care, recently ventured at another concert to play Brahms's First Pianoforte Concerto without a conductor! But the 'Concertverein' orchestra has played under his direction for years, and the experiment was thoroughly successful. Löwe is not only an excellent conductor but an exceptionally good pianist.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Philharmonic Society was brought to a close by the performance on the 18th ult. of Wagner's 'Lohengrin.' Whatever may be said as to the artistic propriety of performing an opera without the accessories of scenery, costume and action, it cannot be denied that the preparation of such a work provides excellent training for an amateur chorus and orchestra; moreover, no representation in a provincial theatre can pretend to have so complete an orchestra as that which assisted on this occasion, reinforced as the local performers were by many excellent players from Manchester. The soloists were Madame Sobrino, Miss W. Ludlow and Messrs. John Coates, Andrea Kaya and Arthur Winckworth. The Society's conductor, Dr. Francis Koeller, had taken infinite pains in training his forces, and the result was such a complete success that the general feeling was a desire to hear it all over again!

The Royal Irish Fusiliers Band, under their clever conductor Mr. Dunn, have been performing weekly at Promenade Concerts in the Ulster Hall during the month. There are always one or more soloists, vocal or instrumental, and the programmes are designed to satisfy the most varied tastes—Wagner, Sousa, Tschaikevsky, etc., being sandwiched in the most random manner. But nothing succeeds like success—there is always a crowded house and barely standing room. These concerts evidently supply a want, and must stimulate the rather backward interest in music in Belfast.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The eighth Halford Concert, held in the Town Hall on the 1st ult., introduced an interesting novelty, the Symphonic Poem No. 4 by William Wallace, first performed by the Philharmonic Society, London, in March, 1901. The composer conducted, and himself and his work were very cordially received. Mr. Halford directed fine performances of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture, and Miss Kate Cherry made a successful first appearance in excerpts from Wagner's works. At the ninth concert, on the 15th ult., Dr. Cowen conducted the first performance here of his 'Indian Rhapsody,' and the Festival apart, the first performance of his Orchestral Poem 'A Phantasy of Life and Love.' Both were splendidly played, and the composer came in for a great ovation. Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a most artistic rendering of the solo part in the Second Pianoforte Concerto of Brahms (also new to us), and the concert terminated with a brilliant performance of Tschaikevsky's 'Francesca da Rimini.'

On the 21st ult. the Birmingham Amateur Orchestral Society gave a most interesting concert at the Midland Institute. The programme comprised Rubinstein's Humoreske, 'Don Quixote' (first time in Birmingham), an Idyl, 'Springtime,' by A. Herbert Brewer, Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'Les Préludes,' and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Miss Margaret Holloway as soloist. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted.

The last Harrison Concert of the season took place in the Town Hall on the 7th ult. The vocalists were Madame Melba, Miss Carrie James (a local contralto), Mr. William Green, and Mr. Robert Radford. Madame Melba was in brilliant voice and was naturally the centre of attraction. Successful débuts were made by Mlle. Sassoli, a youthful harpist, Miss Kathleen Chabôt, a clever pianist, pupil of Miss Fanny Davies, and Mr. Rohan Clensy, an Irish violinist.

The third of the Festival Choral Society's Concerts was given on the 10th ult., with a programme consisting of Dvůřák's 'Spectre's Bride,' Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' The vocal principals were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Harold Wilde, and Mr. Watkin Mills. These all did well, and the chorus was in fine form. Dr. Sinclair conducted.

On the 3rd ult. a pianoforte recital was given in the Masonic Hall by Miss Kathleen Arnold, a former pupil of Miss Fanny Davies. An interesting number in the programme was Arensky's Suite for Two Pianofortes, played by the ladies above named, and for the first time here. Mr. Francis Harford was the vocalist.

The last of Mr. Max Mossel's drawing-room concerts was held in the Grosvenor Rooms of the Grand Hotel on the 17th ult. Mr. Philip Halstead, a pianist from Glasgow, made his first appearance in this city, and with Mr. Max Mossel played César Franck's Duo Sonata in A and Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang, for the first time in England, a tragic song-cycle, 'Schön Gretlein,' by the Lübeck Kapellmeister, Alexander von Fielitz, and songs by Percy Pitt and Landon Ronald, Mr. Pitt acting as accompanist.—On the 14th ult., at the Institution for the Blind, was performed a short cantata, 'The Centurion's Servant,' by Frederick W. Priest, an inmate of the Institution, who is a pupil of Mr. A. R. Gaul. The work is for tenor and baritone soli, chorus and organ. The music is unpretending but well written, and the text is reverently set.—At the Broadwood concerts given at the Temperance Hall, which came to a close on the 19th ult., the Willy Hess String Quartet, the pianists Madame Marie Fromm, the Misses Mathilde and Adela Verne, and Mr. Leonard Borwick, and the vocalists, Miss Alice Höllander and Mr. Charles Phillips, were among the artists engaged. The programmes for the most part consisted of familiar works, but on the 5th ult. Philipp Scharwenka's Pianoforte Trio in C sharp minor (Op. 100) was performed for the first time in England.

The popular Saturday Evening Concerts in the Town Hall continue to draw large audiences. On the 5th ult. Mr. F. W. Beard, with a band of eighty, gave a programme devoted to Wagner, Elgar, and Tchaikovsky. On the 12th ult. the Choral and Orchestral Association, conducted by Mr. Joseph H. Adams, gave a performance of Costa's 'Eli'; and on the 19th ult. the Choral Union gave a concert recital of Wallace's 'Maritana,' under the direction of Mr. Thomas Facer. On the same evening, at the Midland Institute, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Stockholm gave their sixth annual harp concert, attracting a large audience.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of the Bristol Harmonic Male-Voice Choir was given on February 29 at Barton Hill Assembly Hall, a spacious structure that has not long been built in East Bristol. An audience of about 2,000 was present, and the performance evoked considerable enthusiasm. The Choir includes about fifty young men resident in this part of the city, and their conductor is Mr. J. Jenkins, who was the late conductor of the Rhondda Fach Glee Society. Choruses and part-songs were delivered with spirit, these being diversified by solos given by Miss M. Griffiths Mullins, Mr. W. Perkins, and Mr. J. M. Dingle. The Imperial Band played some selections under the direction of Mr. J. H. Cozens.

On the 12th ult. the Bristol Choral Society gave Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' at Colston Hall, and there was a very large audience. Choir and band numbered about 600, the leader being Mr. H. Lewis. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Watkin Mills, all of whom found their efforts appreciated. The choir sang with steadiness and excellence of tone, all the points which go to make up a good representation being forthcoming. Mr. George Riseley conducted with his accustomed ability.

At the concert given on the 14th ult. at Colston Hall in aid of the Sunday afternoon services, Mr. George Riseley was at the organ. The vocalists were the Misses Edith Evans, Katherine Gerrish, Eveline Gerrish, and Ada Bennett. There was a fair attendance, and the hearers were evidently gratified with the performance.

The Wednesday afternoon and evening concerts at the Fine Arts Academy in Queen's Road, which attract large audiences, have been resumed under the management of Mrs. J. L. Roeckel and her sister Mrs. Villiers.

The fourth Clifton Chamber Concert for the season was given on the 17th ult. at the Victoria Rooms. The players were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). The principal works performed were Brahms's Quartet in A minor (Op. 51, No. 2) and Arensky's Quintet for pianoforte and strings, which were excellently rendered. Mrs. Henry J. Wood, accompanied by Mr. Wood, was the vocalist, and the large audience no doubt had agreeable memories of the former visit of this charming singer, as she was received with much applause.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third and fourth concerts of the Dublin Orchestral Society were given on January 28 and February 25. The music performed included Beethoven's Triple Concerto, played for the first time at these concerts, the soloists being Miss Bessie Ruthven (pianoforte), Herr Adolf Wilhelmj (violin), and Mr. Clyde Twelvetrees (violoncello); Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony; Elgar's 'Grania and Diarmid' Funeral March; Beethoven's Seventh Symphony; Mackenzie's Orchestral Ballad 'La belle dame sans merci'; the Fantasia for two Pianofortes and Orchestra by Signor Esposito (the solo parts of which were played by Miss Annie Lord and Miss Edith French); and the 'Ballet des Sylphes' and 'Marche Hongroise' from Berlioz's 'Faust.' Signor Esposito conducted with his usual skill.

At the Orpheus Choral Society's second concert Dr. Culwick presented a fine selection of madrigals and part-songs, including Thomas Morley's 'Shoot, false love, I care not,' Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music,' and his own elegy 'Lycidas,' written in memory of Sir Robert Stewart.

On the 10th ult. Madame Cosslett-Heller's Irish Ladies' Choir gave a very successful concert in the Antient Concert Rooms. The fair singers were heard to advantage in a selection of Irish airs specially arranged for them by Dr. József and Mrs. Needham. Miss Victoria Delany (violin), Madame Cosslett-Heller (soprano), Mr. J. C. Doyle (baritone), and some members of the Choir were the soloists.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The chief feature of the Amateur Orchestral Society's second concert on February 17 was the Choral Fantasia of Beethoven. The Society had the valuable co-operation of the Edinburgh Choral Union, and the solo pianoforte part was brilliantly played by Mr. Alfred Hollins. The programme also included the 'Jupiter' Symphony and 'Zauberflöte' Overture, and Sullivan's 'Merchant of Venice' music. Under the tactful and inspiring beat of Mr. Collinson the Society showed to the greatest advantage, and the concert was extremely enjoyable.

Year by year the University Musical Society takes a more and more important position among Edinburgh organizations, both by reason of their growing membership and of the sterling worth of their achievements. The performance of the Society reached its high-water mark in Hiller's 'Song of Victory' and Goring Thomas's 'The Sun-Worshippers,' which were the chief works given at the annual concert on the 4th inst. The hymn 'Morning and Evening' was sung in memory of the late Professor Sir Herbert Oakeley, and made a most impressive opening. The soloists were Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Ben Davies, and the accompaniments were played with admirable taste by a section of the Scottish Orchestra with Mr. Daeblitz as leader, Mr. Collinson being at the pianoforte.

The concert of Mr. Stronach's Ladies' Choir on the 11th ult. was a great success. The Choir sang with taste and expression, and showed continued improvement in all respects. Valuable aid was lent by the soloists—conspicuously by Messrs. Stronach, Winram, Millar-Craig, and Affleck.

A highly praiseworthy work is carried on in the Fountain-bridge district (one of the poorer localities of the city) by Mr. Isaac Grossett. In connection with the Mission Church he trains a choir of some sixty voices, and the results he succeeds in getting from his unpromising material are surprisingly good. Aided by a small orchestra, and with

Mr. C. W. Dodd at the organ, the choir gave a concert on February 22 to an interested audience, and achieved much success in some 'Messiah' choruses and other pieces. The solos of Misses Maggie Wilkie and Nelly Ritchie were well received.

An interesting recital of vocal music was given to the Edinburgh Society of Musicians on the 12th ult. by Mr. Charles Tree, the well-known baritone. Mr. Tree's programme of seventeen songs embraced almost every variety of style, and his renderings were enthusiastically applauded. The pianoforte duets of Messrs. Dace and Gibson and the violin solo of Mr. Winram lent welcome variety.

(From a Correspondent.)

The eighth annual concert given by Mr. Moonie's choir—in the Music Hall, on the 14th ult.—met with its usual success. Of special interest was the 'chronological programme of unaccompanied choral music,' which included the Mass 'Puisse j'ay Perdu' by Orlando di Lasso, and compositions by Arcadelt, Gastoldi, Thomas Morley, J. C. Bach, Sullivan, Walthew, Elgar, Charles Wood, and Edward German—all these compositions being admirably sung by the choir under Mr. Moonie's careful direction. Miss Lydia Nervil and Mr. Robert Burnett were the soloists.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On the 1st ult. the Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, under the capable direction of Mr. B. W. Hartley, gave a remarkably interesting concert, the programme of which was largely devoted to those gems of four-part music seldom heard nowadays. Among the most successful numbers were Palestrina's 'When flow'ry meadows,' Ravenscroft's 'In the merry Spring,' and Atterbury's 'Come, let us all a-maying go.' The singing of the choir was marked throughout by great refinement and taste, and was highly appreciated by a large and enthusiastic audience.

The Vale of Leven Choral Union, reorganized and set a-going after a lapse of ten years, performed Haydn's 'Creation' on the 2nd ult. The tone of the new choir is fresh and of excellent quality, and the male voices are much better than are usually found in small choirs. Haydn's tuneful work received a fairly good interpretation. A feature of the performance was the unusually fine singing of the solo music by Madame Bertha Rossow and Messrs. Webster Millar and Fowler Burton. Mr. William Blakeley conducted.

On the 3rd ult. the Dumbarton Choral Union, under Mr. Edwin Owston's direction, essayed T. Mee Pattison's 'Song of the Bell' and some miscellaneous pieces with success. On the 8th ult. the Glasgow Sabbath School Union Choir (conductor Mr. Alec Steven) gave a very praiseworthy rendering of Haydn's 'Creation.' The Choir, composed chiefly of teachers and others engaged in Sunday School work, is numerically strong and fairly well balanced, and the choruses were all sung with great spirit and good attack. The solo music was well given by Miss Jenny Taggart and Messrs. Adams and Burnett; an efficient orchestra led by Mr. Siegl and supplemented skilfully by Mr. Berry at the organ gave the accompaniments effectively. The second concert of the season by the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society on the 14th ult. was one of the best yet given by this body of accomplished amateurs. The programme included the Overture to 'The Magic Flute,' Beethoven's Overture 'Leonore' No. 3, the love scene from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet,' Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'The Preludes,' and Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins with accompaniment for string orchestra. The Berlioz and Liszt numbers were best played, although the whole performance was of a high order. The solo parts in the Concerto were most beautifully played by Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the accomplished leader of the Scottish Orchestra, and Master Bertie McGrath, a youthful violinist who will yet make his mark as a performer. A special interest attaches to this concert, as it completes Mr. W. T. Hoeck's majority as conductor of the Society. Miss Barbara Kerr, a young contralto vocalist of much promise, sang some songs remarkably well.

The Cecilia Orchestral Society, a combination which, we understand, originated some years ago under another name, gave a creditable performance under Mr. E. R. Joachim's baton on the 17th ult. Considering the personnel of the band, the programme, which included Beethoven's First Symphony and Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillant in B minor (pianoforte soloist, Mr. W. M. Turnbull), was somewhat ambitious, but in many respects the performance was remarkably good. Miss Isobel M. Kendrick contributed some vocal solos.

Under the energetic direction of Mr. R. L. Reid the Choral Institute connected with the Young Men's Christian Association gave Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' on the 18th ult. The choruses were sung with praiseworthy correctness, although some of them lost in effect through being taken too quickly, and the whole performance was highly creditable to all concerned. An efficient orchestra, with Mr. Hutton Malcolm as organist, played the accompaniments, and of the soloists Miss Maggie Jaques bore the honours.

Several church choir concerts have taken place during the month, and among the works performed have been Haydn's 'Creation,' Bennett's 'The Woman of Samaria,' and the same composer's 'May Queen.'

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A brilliant programme was associated with the last of the Richter concerts, which took place in the Philharmonic Hall on the 2nd ult. Prominence was given to Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra,' performed for the first time in Liverpool. Beethoven's 'Leonore' Overture No. 2, the prelude and final scene of 'Tristan und Isolde,' and Dr. Elgar's 'Cockaigne' Overture were included in the programme.

The tenth concert of the sixty-fifth season of the Philharmonic Society occurred on February 23, when the programme included the Grail music from 'Parsifal,' Beethoven's Symphony in A, and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' the last-named performed for the first time at these concerts. Miss Muriel Foster sang with much art and finish Saint-Saëns's ballade 'Le Fiancée du Timballier.' The eleventh concert took place a fortnight later, with M. Raoul Pugno as solo pianist (in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto) and Mr. John Coates as vocalist. Dr. Cowen occupied his usual post as conductor at both concerts.

An excellent concert was given under the auspices of the Cymric Vocal Union on the 12th ult., when the Welshmen had the valued assistance of the Liscard Orchestral Society. Miss Helen Jaxon and Mr. Emyln Davies sang with all desirable success.

The fourth of the series of recitals of Mozart's concertos for pianoforte and violin was given at the College of Music on the 15th ult. Amongst those who participated were Miss Dora Owens, Miss May Shepherd, Miss Lizzie Green, Mr. Ernest Hunt, the orchestra being conducted both by Mr. W. I. Argent and Mr. Carl Courvoisier. In charity's cause the Post Office Choral Society, directed by Mr. Percival Ingram, gave a concert at the Philharmonic on the 16th ult., when the popular organization was assisted by Madame Siviter, Miss Marie Stuart, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Meurig James, and Mr. Thos. Southworth, whose playing of the violin constituted one of the most pleasant features in a well-arranged programme.

Mr. Granville Bantock has been appointed conductor of the Liverpool Orchestral Society.

The first performance in Liverpool of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's dramatic oratorio 'The Rose of Sharon' was given in the Philharmonic Hall by the Liverpool and District Baptist Choral Society on the 24th ult. The choral forces of this ambitious Society are not large, and occasionally volume of tone was lacking, and the full effect of some of the fine choruses was but imperfectly realised, although the Society deserve every credit for making so enterprising an effort. Mr. Charles Tree (Solomon) sang with true appreciation of the meaning of his rôle, and his fine bass voice wedded itself in admirable sympathy to the beautiful and graceful music of the part. His singing of the air 'Thou art lovely, O my friend,' was a fine effort. Miss Perceval Allen also won distinction as the Sulamite, singing with appropriate simplicity of style and commendable clearness of intonation. Mr. Tom Barlow was the tenor, Miss Charlotte Lane the contralto, Mr. Edward Watson was at the organ, and Mr. Thomas Rimmer conducted.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In the latter part of February something occurred here which passed almost unnoticed in the neighbourhood and, I believe, quite unnoticed in the rest of musical England, though it was a new departure of great importance. At a meeting of the Manchester Municipal Council grants were made to various educational institutions, and among them a grant of £300 a year to the Royal Manchester College of Music. No one opposed the resolution at the meeting, though a party opposed to it unquestionably exists, two or three letters having appeared in the local press written by persons posing as champions of 'the profession' in general and raising objection to what they consider the unfair advantage thus given to the College. A curious point was that what the writers of the said letters in each case opposed was not at all the particular Institution and its privileges, but any sort of higher education in music, not the ghost of an attempt having been made to show that apart from the College any such higher education exists at all in this neighbourhood. The old cry was raised about the injustice of Manchester's having to pay for students who come from a distance. So far as I can ascertain, this is the first case in which the money of a British municipality has been voted for the furtherance of musical art—unless something was done at Birmingham for the musical side of the Midland Institute.

At the seventeenth Hallé concert, on February 25, a remarkably fine rendering was given of Elgar's 'Apostles,' all the performers—orchestra, choir, organist, conductor, and soloists—being the same as at the recent Elgar Festival in London. The following week Mr. Godowsky played with consummate mastery in Tschaiakovsky's B flat minor Concerto and not so well in Chopin's C sharp minor Scherzo. The purely orchestral pieces were Mendelssohn's 'Meeresstille' Overture, Parry's Symphonic Variations, and Beethoven's A major Symphony, the audience taking care to demonstrate their very special affection for the last-named work and their appreciation of Dr. Richter's monumental rendering. Strauss's 'Zarathustra' was repeated at the nineteenth concert (on the 10th ult.) and received with genuine warmth, the occasion being the first on which anything by Strauss has been so received at these concerts. Dr. Brodsky played Busoni's Violin Concerto, and Tschaiakovsky's 'Manfred' was given for the first and probably also the last time in this neighbourhood. For the last Hallé concert of the subscription series there was a Beethoven programme ending with the Choral Symphony, which was magnificently done by the orchestra and choir, and conducted by Dr. Richter with sacerdotal impressiveness.

At the seventh Gentlemen's Concert, on the 1st ult., the light and agile soprano of Miss Lillie Wormald was displayed in airs from the 'Magic Flute' and 'Figaro' and in David's 'Couplets du Mysoli' for voice and flute duet, and various lighter orchestral pieces were charmingly played. At the fourth Schiller Anstalt concert, on the 12th ult., Mr. Borwick played a Beethoven Sonata and a selection from Brahms's Waltzes, besides taking the pianoforte part in a Trio by Smetana exemplifying a very unsatisfactory application of Lisztian principles to concerted chamber music. The singer was a Miss Else Schünemann, unknown in London and never heard here before, who gave a fine performance of songs by Schubert, Brahms, and Hugo Wolf, her voice being a rich and expressive contralto.—At the fifth Brodsky concert on the 10th ult. a fine rendering was given by Dr. Brodsky and Messrs. Spielman, Fuchs, and Cohn of Richard Strauss's Quartet for pianoforte and strings. Mozart's B flat major and Beethoven's second Rasoumovsky were the string Quartets. On the 15th ult. Miss Edith Robinson gave an interesting recital of older violin music, the programme including examples by Purcell, Senaillé, Léclair, Corelli, and Tartini. Vocal selections sung by Mr. Plunket Greene agreeably diversified the concert, which was thoroughly successful.

The most important feature of the recent Ladies' Concerts in the Midland Hall was the playing of the Moscow Trio on the 8th ult., which made a considerable impression, especially in Haydn's Trio in A flat and B major and minor.—A series of concerts organized by Dr. Bradley on behalf of the Salford Municipal Council, and held on Saturday evenings at the Technical Institute, came to an end on February 27 with a Schubert concert and lecture, in the course of which the quartet-playing of a group of youngsters from the Manchester College and Mr. Frank Barker's performance of the 'Erl King' were such as to be worth honourable mention.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was an element of novelty at the Chamber Music Society concert on the 8th ult., in the shape of the first appearance of the youthful Grimson String Quartet, consisting of Miss Jessie Grimson and Messrs. Frank Bridge, Ernest Tomlinson, and Edward Mason. Schubert in G (Op. 161), Haydn in D minor (Op. 16, No. 2), and two movements from Tschaiakovsky in E flat minor (Op. 30) were submitted to the audience. Mr. Hugo Heinz was the vocalist.

On the 18th ult. the forces of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and the Hallé Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. J. M. Preston, performed Sir Charles Stanford's 'The Voyage of Maeldune' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The latter work received an exceedingly fine rendering, but although the difficulties of the former were well surmounted, the chorus seemed scarcely at ease with some of their portions. The programmes issued in connection with these concerts are always interesting. A portrait of Sir Charles Stanford and the sketch of his life which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1898, occupied the major portion of the booklet. Dr. Elgar's 'Apostles' and Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' are announced to be given next season.

Two local societies, each bearing the name of 'Philharmonic,' undertook the 'Creation' on successive evenings—the first at Jarrow, conducted by Mr. Jeffries, the Cathedral organist, and the second in Newcastle, under the baton of Mr. George Dodds. It is to be hoped that the growing importance of the latter organization, as yet only in its fifth winter, will enable it to overcome two of the difficulties which beset young choral societies,—and many old ones too—the lack of sufficient supply of voices to secure any adequate balance of parts, and the want of a strong enough financial basis to assure the regular employment of a complete orchestra.

At the concert of the Newcastle Musical Society on the 16th ult. Schubert's Trio in B flat and a Mozart Violin and Pianoforte Sonata were played. Miss Hetty Page and Messrs. Alfred Wall and Oscar Cohen were the instrumentalists, and Mr. Arthur Lambert the vocalist.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At Boston the Choral Society gave a good account of itself on the 2nd ult., when Haydn's 'Creation' was performed, with orchestral support, under the skilful guidance of Mr. G. H. Gregory. The soloists were Miss Christine Warner and Messrs. Render and Woodward, the two last-named of Lincoln Cathedral.

Under the aegis of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society, the second orchestral concert of the season was given on the 3rd ult. The chief features of the programme were Brahms's Second Symphony and the 'Variations' from Tschaiakovsky's Third Suite. Other items of the programme were the 'Der Freischütz' and 'William Tell' Overtures and the Introduction to the 3rd Act of the 'Meistersinger.' Miss Edith Patching rendered 'Hear, gods of vengeance' ('Magic Flute') and 'I am Titania' ('Mignon') with great skill and vocal dexterity. Mr. Allen Gill conducted the concert with his usual skill and received quite an ovation at its termination.

The West Bridgford (Nottingham) Choral Society terminated its current season with a performance of Leon's 'Gate of Life,' in which the solos were rendered by Miss Annie Bartle, Mr. Anderson Nicol, and Mr. Charles Keywood. Mr. Lyddon, the conductor, had a chorus and orchestra of 100, who loyally responded to his baton.

The Nottingham St. Cecilia Choir, under the direction of the Hon. Mrs. Handford, presented a unique programme on the 15th ult. Amongst other items, Max Bruch's 'Flight into Egypt,' and Mundella's 'Victory of Song' were noticeable features.

A string band under the direction of Mr. Ellenberger rendered works by Bach, Handel, Tschaiikovsky, Boccherini, and Massenet.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On February 4, in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Musical Club, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony in B minor, and Beethoven's second Symphony were well played by Dr. Allen's local orchestra. The programme also included Mozart's ever-welcome Pianoforte Concerto in A major (the solo part being admirably played by Mr. Leonard Borwick) and Brahms's rarely-heard chorus 'Nänie.'

On February 17, in the Sheldonian, Sir Hubert Parry discoursed upon 'Types of Audience and their influence.' His lecture was much appreciated.

On February 25 Miss Marie Hall paid her first visit to Oxford, and played at a concert in the Town Hall under the auspices of the Musical Club. She first played Brahms's Sonata in D minor (Op. 108) for pianoforte and violin in conjunction with Mr. Herbert Fryer, and later on Bach's wonderful Chaconne in D minor and the Moto Perpetuo of Paganini, to the great delight of the audience.

On February 29 Miss Ada Thomas and Mr. Gervase Elwes gave a pianoforte and vocal recital in the Assembly Room of the Town Hall, the programme being devoted to the music of Brahms. Miss Thomas's principal solos were the Sonata in F minor (Op. 5) and the Intermezzo in E flat minor (Op. 119); while amongst the songs artistically given by Mr. Elwes were 'Komm' bald,' 'Regen-lied,' and 'Am Sonntag Morgen.'

On the 17th ult., in the Town Hall, the united forces of the Choral and Philharmonic Societies and the Bach Choir were concentrated upon the performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' under the enthusiastic and able conductorship of Dr. Allen. The performance upon the whole was admirable. Special mention should be made of the excellent rendering of the famous 'Hailstone Chorus,' 'He sent a thick darkness,' and 'I will sing unto the Lord.' The popular duet 'The Lord is a Man of war' was capitally sung by Mr. Lomas and Mr. Sunman, two lay-clerks, and was, as usual, encores.

The Sunday evening concerts at Balliol College have been continued during the term under the able direction of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Chamber Music Society scored another local success on the 8th ult., when Mrs. Mountain's pianoforte-quartet party played Mozart in G minor and Beethoven in E flat (Op. 16). Mrs. Mountain (whose associates were Mr. John Peck, Mr. Herbert Parkin, and Mr. Maurice Taylor) also co-operated with Mr. Peck in Mozart's Sonata in G major for pianoforte and violin.

Among the district and suburban concerts given in the earlier days of the month may be mentioned an excellent performance of Benedict's 'St. Peter' by the Rawmarsh and Parkgate Choral Union under Mr. A. E. Simmonite's direction; a successful rendering of 'Elijah' at Ann's Road Church under the direction of Mr. Maurice Tomlinson, and a performance of Handel's 'Samson' at Wycliffe Congregational Church conducted by Mr. Reeves Charlesworth.

Several successful and excellent concerts have been given by the larger district societies. The Burngreave Choral Society (Mr. H. C. Jackson) in 'The Hymn of Praise,' the Heeley Wesley Choral Society (Mr. R. M. Bullmore) in Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' the Norton Lees Choral Society (Mr. H. Reynolds) in Coward's 'Gareth and Linet,' and the Hoyland Common Choral Society (Mr. W. H. Jones) in 'Acis and Galatea' afforded in their respective concerts further proof of the remarkable choral development which has recently taken place. The Rotherham Choral Society's performance on the 17th ult. of Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and 'Hymn of Praise' marked a further advance in the progress of Mr. Thomas Brameld's widely-famed choralists. Yet another 'Hymn of Praise' performance was given at Oxford Street Chapel, Sheffield, one of an excellent series organized and conducted by Mr. Joseph Kaye.

The closing subscription concert of the Sheffield Musical Union, given in the Albert Hall on the 22nd ult., found the members in the pink of choral condition as a result of their hard training for their coming appearances at Queen's Hall. Sir A. C. Mackenzie's 'The Dream of Jubal' was the principal feature of a programme which, in view of past and coming strenuous work, had purposely been made as light as possible. The fine choir of the Union sang with the enthusiasm and intelligence now always associated with their efforts. The Funeral March was treated with poignant expression, and in the Patriotic March and the concluding Invocation, vigour and precision were all that could be desired. Mr. Charles Fry declaimed the poem with all dramatic intensity, and at the close was accorded a rousing ovation by audience and performers. The soloists were Miss Ethel Wood (who sang splendidly), Mr. Samuel Masters, Miss Biggin, and Mr. Hamer. The programme also included Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens,' Liszt's Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody, and the recitation 'King Robert of Sicily' with Mr. John E. West's beautiful incidental music for organ (excellently played by Mr. W. S. Jessop) and male-voice chorus. Dr. Coward conducted with his wonted energy.

A number of interesting concerts were fixed for the closing days of the month, but, owing to the dates, detailed reference must be held over. Among these were performances of 'Judas Maccabæus' by the Penistone Choral Society; 'King Olaf' by the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society; Coward's 'Magna Charta' by the Talbot Street Institute Choral Society; and a concert (including Tschaiikovsky's Fifth Symphony) by the Brincliffe Amateur Musical Society.

LEEDS.

A NEW SYMPHONY.

During the past month there have been two events of prime importance at Leeds—the first performance in the district of Elgar's 'Apostles' and the production of a new symphony by a local composer. Before this letter appears a third will have to be added—the performance by the Leeds Philharmonic Society of Bach's B minor Mass; but this must be dealt with next month. To take the two events to which I have referred in chronological order: the Municipal Orchestra, which has during the past season made so good a beginning, gave a special distinction to the final concert of the series on the 12th ult. by including a Symphony in D minor written by a Leeds musician, Mr. Frederick Kilvington Hattersley. Since he completed a successful career at the Royal Academy of Music, with whose teaching staff he was for some time associated, Mr. Hattersley has not been idle. He wrote a concert-overture for the Leeds Festival of 1886 and a cantata, 'King Robert of Sicily,' for the Leeds Philharmonic Society (1894); these and other works, however, able as they were, are eclipsed by this Symphony, which is no work of mushroom growth, but bears traces of long and thoughtful labour. Lest this should be interpreted in a sense not intended, I must hasten to add that it does not 'smell of the lamp,' for it is by no means pedantic or academic. Based on Brahms as regards its type, it is admirably constructed; the themes have charm, together with the distinction one expects in symphonic music, and the orchestra is used with experience and almost invariably with good effect. There is unity of character, and I should not deem it a fault that the Finale is lighter in calibre than the rest, though perhaps this movement is less coherent in construction than its predecessors. As a whole the Symphony shows a very exceptional gift for composition and musicianship of a high order, and I trust to have an opportunity of renewing an acquaintance with the work, which is far too good to be shelved. It was very creditably played under the composer's direction, and among the other features of the programme must be mentioned Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' three movements of which were very artistically played by Miss Alice Simpkin as the solo violinist. Mr. Fricker conducted, and Miss Ada Beecroft was the vocalist.

The Leeds Choral Union did honour to themselves as well as to Dr. Elgar by their fine performance of 'The Apostles,' on the 16th ult. Mr. Alfred Benton, who conducted, showed that he had carefully studied the music, and his fine chorus sang with power and precision, their efforts being greatly enhanced by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, specially engaged for the occasion. Of the principals, Messrs. Ffrangcon-Davies and Andrew Black sang their original parts with even greater power of dramatic expression than ever, and a trio of baritones on which it would be difficult to improve was completed by the highly artistic singing of Mr. Lane Wilson in the part of St. Peter, which has never had more complete justice done to its character. Miss Jenny Taggart was the soprano, Madame Kirkby Lunn the contralto, and Mr. Philip Newbury the tenor. The work attracted a very large audience and evoked genuine enthusiasm.

The orchestra conducted by Mr. Edgar Haddock, which, like the Municipal Orchestra, aims at popularizing orchestral music, but differs from it in being largely amateur in constitution, have given two more concerts. That of February 27 included the favourite Symphony in D of Haydn's 'Salomon' sets, and Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat was played with spirit by Mr. F. Sant-Angelo, while Miss Maude Sugden contributed songs. Not the least enjoyable thing in the programme was Strauss's 'Blue Danube' waltz, the lilt of which was very happily interpreted by Mr. Haddock. On the 19th ult. the programme included the '1812' Overture, made more rowdy than ever by the help of a military band, Guilmant's Symphony in D minor for organ (soloist Mr. Bearder) and orchestra, and Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto (Mr. Arthur Ayres). Miss Ethel Bowman was the vocalist.

BRADFORD.

The performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius' at the subscription concert on the 11th ult. has been the sensation of the month. Mr. John Coates interpreted the part with which he has identified himself since he first essayed it in Worcester as sympathetically and dramatically as ever. Miss Alice Lakin sang the music of the Angel conscientiously, and Mr. Iver Foster's performance of the bass parts marked a distinct step in advance in his career. The chorus of the Festival Choral Society sang with admirable correctness and remarkable spirit, if they hardly succeeded in realizing to the full the mystical atmosphere of the work. The Hallé Orchestra was of course excellent, and Dr. Cowen conducted with well-directed energy. On the 1st ult. the Bradford Old Choral Society wound up their season with a quadruple bill, including Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore.' As a garnish we had the 'Egmont' Overture, and by way of a curious intermezzo, Mendelssohn's D minor Pianoforte Trio, which seemed out of place in its surroundings. The choir, under Mr. Fitton's conductorship, were at their best in Elgar's work, which was sung with freshness and intelligence. Two of the Permanent Orchestra's concerts have to be recorded. On the 5th ult. Mozart's G minor Symphony and Beethoven's greatest 'Leonore' Overture were well played under Mr. Allen Gill's direction, Mr. Arthur Payne contributing violin solos, and on the 19th ult. a popular 'Sullivan programme' was arranged with the help of the Festival Choral Society. Miss M. Klepper, a Bradford pianist who is as gifted as she is ambitious, gave on the 14th ult. a highly interesting Chopin recital, showing great technical powers and genuine artistic refinement of feeling. On the same occasion a very promising young soprano made her appearance, Miss Ethel Lister, whose fine voice and dramatic power, combined with an attractive presence, speak well for her future.

HUDDERSFIELD.

The Huddersfield Choral Society gave on the 4th ult. a performance of 'Elijah' which can only be styled sensational. The chorus, which I do not hesitate to style the most powerful in the country, sang with the force of a steam hammer, yet with its power of control. The principals, Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Bulleid, Messrs. Mitton and Tree caught the enthusiasm, and Dr. Coward egged on chorus and orchestra alike to achieve marvellous effects. When the fire descended it came in the form of a thunderbolt from the drums, and the viciousness of Jezabel's denunciations was intensified by the encouragement with which the soloist's words were echoed by the chorus, whose 'Woe to him, he shall die' was quite phenomenal in its explosive force. Perhaps a still greater effect might have been made of the gradual climax in the Baal choruses had a little more restraint been exercised at the beginning, but after all the impression made by the performance was magnificent, if not always precisely Mendelssohnian.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Halifax Choral Society gave on the 3rd ult. Stanford's 'Elegiac Ode,' a work which bears revival uncommonly well. The soloists in this, and in a portion of 'Creation' which followed, were Miss Gleeson White, Messrs. Samuel Masters, Shepley and Herbert Brown, and Mr. English conducted a good all-round performance. On the 10th ult. the Halifax Orchestral Society, under Mr. Van Dyk, gave an interesting programme, including Mozart's G minor Symphony and the 'Lohengrin' Prelude with great success. Mr. J. Browning was the vocalist. This same Symphony has been much in vogue of late in the West Riding, for I have yet a third performance to chronicle at Keighley on the 2nd ult., when the local Orchestral Society, under Mr. Summerscales, included it in their programme. Another interesting feature was the charming violin duets of the Misses Watts. The Keighley Musical Union, which also is conducted by Mr. Summerscales, chose Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' for their final concert of the season on the 16th ult. Miss Gillespie, Miss Bertha Salter, Mr. Brearley and Mr. Charles Knowles were the principals in a generally satisfactory performance. On the same date the Dewsbury Choral Society gave a concert, the programme of which was carefully chosen with regard to the absence of an orchestra. Bach's motet, 'Glory, Honour and Blessing,' Schumann's 'Pilgrimage of the Rose,'—which is much best heard with pianoforte accompaniment—and Waddington's 'John Gilpin' formed a pleasing contrast of styles. It is to the credit of the Society that the chorus supplied all but one of the soloists, the exception being the baritone, Mr. Wardley. Mr. Fricker conducted.

At Hull the Philharmonic Society, on the 11th ult., gave, under Mr. J. W. Hudson, an ambitious programme that included Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, the 'Walkürenritt' and the 'Euryanthe' Overture, with a degree of success remarkable in view of the large proportion of amateurs in the orchestra. By a contretemps, which one hardly knows to regard as tragic or as comic, the drummer managed to lose his instruments, a slip which might more readily have been forgiven the performer on the piccolo, and the music suffered a slight change of complexion in consequence. Mr. Plunket Greene sang. On the 18th ult. the Hull Harmonic Society gave a concert at which Liszt's Psalm xiii. and Stanford's 'Revenge' were the choral works, and the first orchestral suite (Op. 42) by Dr. MacDowell, the American composer, performed for the first time in England, was included in the programme. Mr. Walter Porter conducted, and Mr. Charles Saunders excited much popular enthusiasm by his singing.

At Ripon Cathedral Mr. C. H. Moody, the organist, has continued the special Lenten services he arranged a year ago. On the 10th ult. he conducted an impressive performance of Mozart's 'Requiem,' which was to be followed on the 31st ult. (after these notes are written) by Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion. With this however I hope to deal next month in connection with some other interesting 'Passions' that are promised in West Riding churches. On the 9th ult. the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society gave a miscellaneous programme, a feature of which was Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and a part of Elgar's 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite, which were sung very smartly under Mr. W. H. Wright's conductorship. Mr. W. Henley's dexterous violin playing and the singing of Miss Eva Rich added variety to the programme.

On the 18th ult. the Harrogate Choral Society, of which Mr. C. L. Naylor is the chief, gave Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch' with much success. The principals were Miss Gillespie, Miss Frood, Messrs. Fred Fallas and Charles Knowles.

Obituary.

LOUISA FANNY PYNE (MRS. BODDA PYNE), well known to a former generation as the foremost singer in English opera, died, we regret to say, at 85, Cambridge Gardens, on the 20th ult., aged seventy-five. Born in 1828—not 1832, as is sometimes stated—she came of a musical family. George Pyne, her father, was one of the best alto singers of his day, and his other two daughters, Mary Anne (Mrs. Galton) and Susan, were also professional singers. Louisa Pyne first appeared as a child nine years old in a performance of the 'Messiah' given at Newcastle-on-Tyne, when she sang the solo 'If God be for us, who can be against us?' The child vocalist was so small that she had to stand on a stool in order to be seen. It was however in opera that this gifted singer made her mark, and her first appearance, as Amina in 'Sonnambula,' which took place at Boulogne in 1849, was so successful that she at once received an offer to sing in opera at the Princess's Theatre. One of her most notable triumphs took place when she was called upon, at a few hours' notice, to undertake the part of the Queen of the Night in Mozart's 'Magic Flute.' Mr. Gye was so grateful for her ready help in a difficult situation that he presented her with a handsome watch with her initials in diamonds. In 1857 the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company commenced their brilliant but brief (eight years) series of opera performances in the vernacular. From 1865 to 1877 Louisa Pyne sang in concerts, and the latter years of her life were devoted to teaching. In 1868 she married Mr. Frank Bodda, who predeceased her, and in 1896 she was accorded a Civil List pension of £70 a year.

Mr. Frederick Rose, who had been intimately connected with the firm of Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons for upwards of half-a-century, died, we regret to record, at Manchester, on February 28, aged seventy-five. In his position as head of the Broadwood pianoforte manufactory Mr. Rose proved himself to be a man of tact, energy, sound judgment and kindly feeling. Always mindful of the welfare of his workmen he started a band, of which the conductor was Thomas Sullivan, father of Arthur Sullivan, who as a boy used to play the big drum at rehearsal. Mr. Rose also fostered the workmen's library, which now consists of 6,000 volumes. He organized two highly efficient companies of volunteers from the Broadwood factory, the men being attached to the Queen's Westminster regiment. For many years he devoted much time and thought to municipal life. The cause of philanthropy was very dear to his heart; his interests in that direction embraced active participation in Sunday-school, hospital, and mission work. The name of Frederick Rose will long be held in fragrant memory.

Foreign Notes.

BÂLE.

A series of concerts was to be given last month by the General Musical Society to illustrate the development of the Symphony from Stamitz to Brahms. The former composer was a predecessor of Haydn in the field of the Symphony. The scheme is both interesting and profitable.

BRUSSELS.

M. Vsaye recently conducted a concert, the programme illustrating the Russian School from Glinka to Glazounov.

COLOGNE.

At a Gürzenich concert Herr Steinbach recently gave a programme entirely devoted to Brahms, an unprecedented event here. Those who attended the concerts given by him in London will not be surprised to learn that the venture was most successful.

LEIPZIG.

It is proposed to hold a congress in the autumn in connection with the reorganization of the 'International Society of Musicians,' and at the same time to perform some seldom heard works of Bach. In selecting the programmes there will be a real embarras de choix.

LEYDEN.

A performance of Dr. Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' has been given by the Maatschappij, under the direction of Daniel de Lange.

MARSEILLES.

Wagner's 'Die Meistersinger' was performed here for the first time on the 1st ult. No one was allowed to enter the theatre after an act had been once commenced.

MUNICH.

Bruckner's Ninth Symphony has been performed three times this season, the third having taken place at a concert of the Musical Academy under the direction of Court-Capellmeister Fischer.

NAMUR.

Le Cercle Musical has celebrated the twentieth anniversary of its foundation by a concert, the programme of which was devoted to the compositions of its founder, M. Balthazar Florence. The selection included his Overture Dramatique, Concerto Pathétique for Violin, performed by Madame van der Eeden, a Jubilee Cantata, and some songs.

PARIS.

The poem 'L'Ame de Paris' by MM. Eugène Adenis and Fernand Beissier, which gained the Rossini prize offered by L'Académie des Beaux-Arts, will be given to the competitors for the musical (Rossini) prize. The text consists of a prologue and three episodes, of which the first deals with the 'île de la Cité' in the year 452, and the repulse of Attila by Geneviève; the second with Jeanne d'Arc before Paris in 1429; and the third, the heroic death of the sailors on board the 'Vengeur.'—Brahms's 'Tragic' Overture was recently given as a novelty at a Conservatoire concert under the direction of M. Georges Marty.—On February 28, at the Lamoureux Concert, the programme included a new Symphony in B flat by the accomplished French composer M. Vincent d'Indy. It bears the Opus number 57, and is quite a recent composition (1902-3). M. Amédée Boutarel in Le Ménestrel speaks in terms of high praise of the work, but regrets that so able and sincere an artist as M. d'Indy should at times renounce that simplicity which forms so essential a part of the art-work of great geniuses.—The monument of Gounod has been set up in the Parc Monceau without any ceremony, or, to quote from a French paper, 'without drums or official trumpets.' It is the work of the distinguished sculptor Mercié, and the three figures represented are those of Marguerite, Juliette, and Sapho.—'Daria,' a music-drama in two acts, libretto based on a Russian tale by Adolphe Aderer, music by M. Georges Marty, a former Prix de Rome, will be produced at the Grand Opéra during the season 1904-1905.—Two performances of Monteverde's 'Orfeo,' produced at Mantua nearly three hundred years ago (1608), have been given at the Schola Cantorum under the direction of M. Vincent d'Indy and attracted considerable interest.

SCHWERIN.

The first performance of Conrad Schröder's comic opera 'Die Nonne von Ghioceni' took place on February 21. The libretto, based on a Roumanian tale, is by Adolf Flach. The work met with a cordial reception.

TORGAU.

At the third concert of the Musical Society under the direction of Herr Schröder, the programme was one of considerable interest. Madrigals by John Dowland, Thomas Morley, H. L. Hassler, and J. Eccard were sung, and by way of instrumental music were given the eighth Partita from J. H. Schein's 'Banchetto musicale' (1617), and movements by Handel and Gluck. Modern music was also represented—four songs of Mendelssohn and Mozart's G minor Symphony.

WINTERTHUR.

Spitta in his 'Life of Bach' refers to the Collegia musica, or meetings of musicians for performances of music, or for the purpose of discussing questions relating to the art, and to the particular one founded by Telemann in 1704, of which later on Bach was an active member. The one at Winterthur was founded as early as 1629, and Festival concerts were given last month to commemorate the 275th anniversary of that event.

ZURICH.

Dr. Carl Attenhofer, who has been conductor of the Male Choral Society of this city for the long period of thirty-eight years, will resign in June. Music-director Volkmar Andreae has been elected his successor.

Miscellaneous.

The Cheltenham Musical Festival Society (conductor, Mr. J. A. Matthews) gave a successful concert in the New Town Hall on the 17th ult. The programme included Sir Frederick Bridge's dramatic overture 'Morte d'Arthur' and the new elegy 'Song of the Silent Land,' a setting of Longfellow's words by Mr. Harry A. Matthews, son of the conductor of the Society. The latter work had been previously produced in America, but this was the first time it had been given in England. It is a musicianly composition, and left behind a pleasing impression. Mr. Philip Newbury gave a very fine rendering of the tenor solo which forms the second part of the 'Song.' The chorus work on the whole was good. Sir Arthur Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' took up the second part of the programme, the soloists being Miss Susanne Palmer (of Cheltenham), Miss Bertha Salter, Mr. Philip Newbury, Mr. Charles Tree, and Mr. Ernest Davies, Mr. J. A. Matthews conducted.

The Ardeton Piano is a new invention that claims attention on the part of those—and their number is many—who aim at the attainment of correct technique in playing the household instrument. The Ardeton Piano claims to be a combination, in one instrument, of a perfect Practice-Clavier and Pianoforte. As a Practice-Clavier it provides, at will, 'up' and 'down' clicks and a touch graded from one to eight ounces, and—this is an important point—in either case with or without tone. These novel features are of such obvious advantage as to merit a career of usefulness to the Ardeton Piano. Messrs. Rushworth and Dreaper, 13, Islington, Liverpool, are the manufacturers and inventors of the new instrument.

Mr. W. G. Whittaker, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, writes in reference to the first performance of Rheinberger's 'Christophorus' in England:—'In your account in the March issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES, of the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society, is a list of works performed by the Society. It is therein stated that the Society performed Rheinberger's "Christophorus" for the first time in England. Will you kindly allow me to point out that the work was given by the "Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society" in 1885, eight years before the more southern organization was formed, under the conductorship of Dr. W. Rea, the great pioneer of music in this neighbourhood.'

Sir A. C. Mackenzie's second Scotch Rhapsody ('Burns') was performed for the first time in Hungary at the ninth concert of the Philharmonic Society, Budapest, on the 9th ult., and met with a flattering reception. The performance, under Herr Stefan Kerners, was excellent, and the local paper, especially the Pester Lloyd and the Budapester Abendblatt, expressed warm appreciation of the Scottish master's beautiful music.

The following awards have recently been made at the Royal Academy of Music:—The Goldberg Prize (Singing)—to Lindsey Squire (Liverpool). The Evill Prize (Singing)—to Ben Calvert (Halifax). The Ross Scholarship (Singing)—to Philip Simmons (Henley-on-Thames). The Sterndale Bennett Prize (Pianoforte)—to Julia H. Higgins (London).

The nineteenth Westmorland Festival—to be held at Kendal on the 14th, 15th and 16th inst.—has a new and enterprising feature in the engagement of Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra. The usual competitions will be held, the judges being Mr. T. Tertius Noble, Mr. F. Kidson, and Mr. George Rathbone.

At the Earlestone Eisteddfod, held on the 5th ult., the Southport Vocal Union (Mr. J. C. Clarke) won the first prize. Mr. Emyln Evans adjudicated. The Southport Choral Society, which is also conducted by Mr. Clarke, gave a performance of 'Elijah' on the 4th ult.

Dr. Cornelius Rübnér, Director of the Grand Ducal Conservatory of Music at Carlsruhe, has been appointed Professor of Music at Columbia University, New York, in succession to Dr. Edward MacDowell, who has resigned that office.

Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Madame Agnes Leeds's book, entitled 'My First Piano Lessons,' recently published by Messrs. Novello.

Dr. Walter Carroll has been appointed a Lecturer in the Victoria University of Manchester, where he will also hold the position of Secretary to the Board of the Faculty of Music.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music upon Mr. T. Barrow-Dowling, organist of St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town.

Country News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BLACKBURN.—The last concert of the 29th season of the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union was given in the Exchange Hall on the 4th ult. The band—selected from the Hallé Orchestra—and chorus numbered nearly 300 performers. Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' and 'A Song of Destiny' (Brahms) occupied the first half of the programme, both works being given with refinement and accuracy. In part two the chorus sang the part-songs 'The Dawn of Song' (Bairstow) and 'Echoes' (Sullivan). Miss Agnes Nicholls was the solo vocalist. The band were loudly applauded for able renderings of Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite, and Hungarian Dances Nos. 5 and 6 (Brahms). Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted with conspicuous ability.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The Winter Gardens Symphony Concerts, under the able and enterprising direction of Mr. Dan Godfrey, are continuing their successful course. The programme on February 29 included Beethoven's 'King Stephen' Overture, Grieg's Suite, 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' Brüll's Symphony in E minor (Op. 31), and notably a Concertstück in A minor for piano-forte and orchestra composed by Mr. Tobias Matthay (the solo part played by Mr. York Bowen), which achieved a great success.

CAMBUSLANG.—The Choral Society gave a performance of two parts of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on the 22nd ult., in the Institute Hall. The choir sang very efficiently and the soloists were Miss Mary E. Alexander, Mr. Tom Child and Mr. J. Bayne Young. The accompaniments were efficiently played by Mr. W. H. Cole's orchestra. Mr. Herbert Walton, of Glasgow Cathedral, was the conductor.

JOHNSTONE, N.B.—On the 15th ult. a recital of sacred music was given by Mr. J. Barratt and the Parish Church Choir, assisted by Miss Margaret Cameron (soprano), of Glasgow. Mr. Barratt rendered pieces on the organ by Schubert, Mozart, Guilmant, Morandi, Lux, and Liszt, in excellent style. The choir sang Gounod's 'Gallia,' and choruses from 'St. Paul,' 'Elijah,' and 'Samson,' in a highly effective and artistic manner, and Miss Cameron, in addition to the solo in 'Gallia,' sang 'There is a green hill far away,' and 'Let the bright Seraphim,' in a very expressive manner.

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES.—A performance of Elgar's 'Light of Life' took place in the Parish Church on the 16th ult., under the direction of Dr. A. P. Alderson. The choir sang well throughout, and were heard to special advantage in the choruses 'Light out of darkness' and 'Light of the world,' and the accompaniments were efficiently played by an orchestra consisting of strings, drums, harp and organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Fanny Cheetham, Miss Minnie Chamberlain, Mr. Samuel Masters and Mr. Bertram Mills. Mr. Edwin Stephenson presided at the organ, and Dr. Alderson conducted with much care.

LOUGHTON.—The 'Banner of St. George' (Elgar) and a miscellaneous programme attracted a full audience to the Topping Hall on the 14th ult., when the Choral Society and Orchestra gave their last concert of the season. Mr. Henry Riding conducted, and Mr. W. B. Carter was the principal violin.

NEWPORT, MON.—The Philharmonic Society performed Elgar's 'King Olaf' on February 25 with much success. The soloists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. W. I. Ineson. The chorus and orchestra did excellent work under the baton of Mr. I. A. Gaccon.

RIPON.—An interesting lecture was given in the Ripon and Wakefield Training College on the 4th ult. by Dr. Henry Watson, of Manchester, on 'Shakespeare and music.' The illustrations were provided by Mr. C. H. Moody, the Cathedral choir, and a small string orchestra. Mr. Moody played Matthew Locke's 'Tempest' Music and contemporary examples of the 'Domp,' 'Galliard,' &c., on the pianoforte, and the choir gave exquisite renderings of glees by Stevens, Arne, Bishop, Macirone, Watson, and from anonymous MSS. of the poet's time. Messrs. Senior and Hartley sang songs by Watson and Schubert, and Miss Pratt and Miss Dixon contributed Haydn's 'She never told her love' and Bishop's 'Bid me discourse' respectively most charmingly. The band gave a finished performance of Edward German's 'Henry VIII' Dances.

Answers to Correspondents.

G. G.—(1) Joseph Seegr (Seeger, Saeger, Segert, or Zekert) was one of the best European organists of the 18th century. He was born at Rzepin, near Melnik, in Bohemia. He pursued his general education at Prague, where, at the Jesuit College, he obtained the degree of Bachelor of Arts. On turning his attention wholly to music he studied under one Bohuslaw Czernohorsky, a Franciscan. While still young, Seegr became the most remarkable organist in Bohemia. He succeeded Zach as organist at St. Martin's Church, Prague, where he remained five years. Then, for forty-one years, he was organist of the Thein-Kirche, Prague, and concurrently (for thirty-seven years) at the church of the Brothers of the Cross. When the Emperor Joseph II. visited Prague in 1781, he was so pleased with the talent of Seegr that he wished to attach him to his Imperial Court; but in the meantime the gifted musician died, on April 22, 1782, at the age of sixty-six. Among his pupils were Missliwiecek, Jean Kozeluch, Kopziwa, Skrydanech, Kucharz, and others. Seegr left behind him many compositions. In 1794 Messrs. Breitkopf and Haertel published eight toccatas and fugues for the organ; and a collection of organ preludes by this excellent artist was subsequently issued. (2) For tenor and bass duets, 'not too modern,' see: False love and true (Pinsuti); Go, baffled coward, from 'Samson' (Handel); The portals of this holy dwelling (Spohr); Now we are ambassadors, from 'St. Paul' (Mendelssohn); The moon has raised her lamp above (Benedict); Comrade, your hand (Balfe); Flow gently, Deva (Parry); The Fisherman (Gabussi).

A. W.—We are sorry that we cannot give any idea of the value of your Spinet, although it is 'a remarkable piece of antiquity.' As you mention 'an offer made to purchase by a local gentleman, who wants it as a match for his old grandmother, who has a cottage in the country,' this gentleman's grandfilial affection will doubtless induce him to set free the well-springs of his generosity to the best pecuniary advantage. You do not give the name of the maker.

PIANIST.—Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto was performed for the first time in England at the New Philharmonic Society's concert of May 14, 1856, the solo part played by the composer's wife. Schumann died ten weeks later. Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto was first heard in this country at the Philharmonic Society's concert of May 28, 1832; it was repeated at the following concert, June 18, the composer on both occasions interpreting the solo portion. In the programme it was indicated as being in MS.

J. A.—For concert pianoforte pieces (solo) see: Airs de Ballet d'Alceste, Gluck (Saint-Saëns); Islamay (Oriental Fantasia) (Balakirew); Prelude (Rachmaninoff); Au bord de la mer (Smetana); La Chevaleresque (B. Godard); L'Angoisse (Tschaikovsky). For pianoforte trios (six hands), see: Passacaille (Gounod); Tarantella (Lack); Menuet (Boccherini); Retraite aux flambeaux (Pessard).

LICENTATE.—You would do well to get some help from a 'coach,' one who knows the ins and outs of the examination, before you 'go up.' Do not be discouraged if you fail in the first attempt. You ask 'How do concert players as a rule get their musical education?' The answer is 'variously,' though some of them, we fear, are only half-educated. Write to the lady herself for the information you require.

ANXIOUS.—(1) An illustrated article on Lincoln Cathedral will shortly appear in THE MUSICAL TIMES. (2) 'The moon has raised her lamp above' can be obtained from any music-seller. (3) No complete list is published of Liszt's works. (4) All Wagner's operas can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

A. A.—Put not your whole trust and confidence in editors of Bach's pianoforte works. We think your difficulties will be overcome by consulting Mr. Dannreuther's invaluable Primers on 'Ornamentation.' The reference thereto will also cover your Czerny question.

J. F. M.—(1) 'Catholic Hymns, original and translated, with accompanying tunes,' edited by Dr. A. E. Tozer, is a publication out of print. (2) In regard to the Ely Diocesan Festival Book apply to the Rev. C. E. Crump, Sawston Vicarage, Cambridgeshire.

H. J. R.—The anthem composed by Sullivan for the twelfth commemoration of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, is a setting of 'I will worship towards Thy holy temple'; it is published (folio size only) by Messrs. Boosey.

S. H. M.—For pedal studies (organ) see Best's '30 progressive studies,' and 'The art of organ-playing' (Part 2); 'Organ pedal technique' (Parts 1 and 2) by Burnham Horner; and 'Daily Studies and Pedal Scales' by Lake.

H. H. W.—(1) The 'Harmonicon' is well-worth having and the price you mention for a complete set is quite reasonable. (2) Probably a uvula trouble, but it is very difficult to advise on such matters. See a doctor.

STUDENT.—Mr. Edward Chadfield, 19, Berners Street, W., is the Secretary of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; and Mrs. Kate Lee, 8, Victoria Road, Kensington, is the Secretary of the Folk-Song Society.

CLAVICHORD.—It is impossible to give any idea of the commercial value of your clavichord without knowing its present condition; even then you might not realize its estimated worth from the sentimental point of view.

J. B.—Yes, Hiller's 'Song of Victory' and Gounod's 'Gallia' were brought into existence by the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

CARDIFFIAN.—We are sorry that we cannot break through our rule of not giving the names of teachers. You will soon find out 'who's who' in the town you mention.

E. C.—If you will kindly send us the leaf of the book to which you refer we shall doubtless be able to trace out the title of the publication.

L. S.—A photograph of the memorial to Sir John Stainer in St. Paul's Cathedral may be obtained from Mr. A. P. Monger, 8, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane.

INQUIRER.—Pronounce as you would say the word 'generation,' regardless of its syllabic division in a piece of music.

A. J. L.—A good dentist would put you right, so that by his artificial aid you would be able to sing without a semblance of false pretences.

MEDALS.—As to whether medals are of 'any real value in the musical profession,' it all depends upon the medal and the medalist, especially the medalist.

CHORAL.—See Chappell's 'History of Music' and Stainer's 'Music of the Bible.' There is great need for a book (in English) on the history of orchestration.

EISTEDDFOD.—Please send us a copy of the tune and we will do our best to trace it for you.

W. E. S.—Yes, Gounod did write six fugues for the harmonium, but we think that they are now out of print.

F. H. H. S.—See answer to A. A.

MR. WEBSTER NORCROSSE

(BASSO).

In consequence of the numerous applications received by him during the past few years to sing the basso rôles in "Messiah," "Judas Maccabæus," "Creation," &c., but which offers he has been obliged to refuse on account of his agreement with the other members of the "Meister Glee Singers," Mr. Webster Norcrosse now begs to announce that he will in future be available for Solo Engagements.

Mr. Webster Norcrosse began his career in this country under the personal direction of the late Mr. Carl Rosa, and is well known by his impersonations of Bertram, in "Robert the Devil" (Meyerbeer); Peter the Great, in "Star of the North"; Cardinal, in Halevy's "La Juive"; and King, in "Lohengrin"; and by his extraordinary success in concerts throughout the country.

Mr. Webster Norcrosse received his Handelian education from Prof. Stockhausen, of Frankfurt a.-/M.

"ROBERT THE DEVIL."—LIVERPOOL.

"At the performance of 'Robert the Devil,' on Saturday afternoon, the fine vocal part of Bertram was most artistically sung by Mr. Webster Norcrosse, whose expressive method and admirable voice were most enjoyable."—Liverpool Daily Post, January, 1889.

"STAR OF THE NORTH."—MANCHESTER.

"The performances commenced with the second act of Meyerbeer's 'Star of the North,' in which we had a new Peter the Great in Mr. Webster Norcrosse, who made his first appearance in that part and created a very favourable impression."—Manchester Guardian, March, 1889.

"ROBERT THE DEVIL."—BRISTOL.

"The Bertram of Mr. Webster Norcrosse was a grand impersonation. He has a fine voice and good stage presence; he was the best actor on the stage last night. In the third act Mr. Norcrosse has the first scene pretty much to himself, and he makes the most of the occasion: he is very much like Foli, only an infinitely better actor; he has some lovely notes in his voice which told well. The scene between Alice and Bertram was intensely interesting, and enraptured the house; the weirdness of the occasion being only equalled by the ability displayed by the artistes."—Bristol Times and Mirror, October 5, 1889.

"ROBERT THE DEVIL."—BELFAST.

"Mr. Webster Norcrosse's Bertram was a notable performance; his acting was of the real Mephistophelian type. This was particularly evidenced in the scene where Alice endeavours to overcome the potency of his spell by embracing the cross. His rich, deep, sonorous full notes rang out with astonishing musicianly resonance in the ghostly incantation, and contributed forcibly to the impressiveness of the magnificent trio which brings the opera to a conclusion."—Belfast Northern Whig, September 20, 1889.

"ROBERT THE DEVIL."—CARDIFF.

"It would be difficult to overrate Mr. Webster Norcrosse's services to the opera by his rendering of the rôle of Bertram the Fiend. His acting was superb, and his fine bass voice was heard to much advantage in the grand passages which abound through the work for this character."—Cardiff Times, October 18, 1889.

NORDICA CONCERT.—HANLEY.

"As individual performers the Glee Singers hardly appear to such advantage as when they join forces, Mr. Norcrosse being perhaps an exception. The manner of his singing of Shield's 'Quaff with me the purple wine' causes one to wonder why he is not oftener heard as a soloist. But, after all, you may not eat your cake and have it. He has his reputation as one of the world-renowned quartet; what more can he wish?"—Staffordshire Sentinel, October 7, 1892.

DUBLIN.

"Mr. Webster Norcrosse displayed great flexibility of voice and considerable dramatic power in Handel's 'Oh ruddier than the cherry.'"—Freeman's Journal, January, 1899.

HARRISON CONCERT.—LIVERPOOL (PHILHARMONIC HALL).

"Mr. Norcrosse took for his solo 'The Norseman,' by Ervini, and the alternate vigour, masculinity, and pathos of the song were well developed, and the florid portions were so treated as to show the soloist's flexibility."—Liverpool Daily Post, March 9, 1894.

WIGAN.

"The honours of the evening, however, fell to Mr. Webster Norcrosse. In reply to an encore to the song 'The Norseman' he gave 'In Cellar Cool,' and this popular drinking song has seldom, if ever, been heard to better effect. Mr. Norcrosse literally took the audience by storm; he was vociferously cheered, and although he bowed his acknowledgments on three occasions the assembly would not rest satisfied until he had responded with a portion of the contribution named. A more flattering reception has never been awarded any artist at local concerts."—Wigan Observer, October 20, 1894.

HULL.

"There was special local interest in Mr. Norcrosse's declamation of 'Honour and Arms.' It will be remembered that he sang this famous Handelian air at a Vocal Society's Concert. A double encore was the audience's reward for its applause of the fine rendering given to the number, for the singer had to appear and sing 'If all the young maidens' (Lôhr), and to reappear and sing 'Drinking.'"—Daily Mail, Hull, October 27, 1902.

"Mr. Webster Norcrosse came in for an ovation for his splendid rendering of Handel's 'Honour and Arms,' and nothing would please the audience but, after having sung one song as an encore, he must sing still another."—Eastern Morning News, Hull, October 27, 1902.

QUEEN'S HALL, LONDON.

"Mr. Webster Norcrosse gave evidence of being a Handelian singer of first-rate ability in his rendition of 'Honour and Arms.'"—Standard, September, 1899.

"Handel's aria, 'Honour and Arms,' gave Mr. Webster Norcrosse an opportunity of displaying a bass voice of excellent timbre and unusual flexibility."—The People, September, 1899.

NEWCASTLE.

"... and Mr. Webster Norcrosse (whose magnificent bass register, conspicuous for its depth and power, it is always a pleasure to hear) contributed several solos."—Newcastle Journal, March 14, 1904.

PREFACE.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.For this reason, the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern, so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

The lack of certain well-known hymns in that book and the need of extra hymns for certain occasions are often felt. This is clear from the fact that many supplemental appendixes and leaflets are now used with it, particularly books for mission services, children's use, and other special occasions.

It may be said by many that we already have too many hymns, and that a large number are most unsuitable. There is no subject upon which persons differ more thoroughly than the suitability of different hymns. No two people will ever agree as to all the hymns in any collection. The only way of dealing satisfactorily with this problem seems to be to give a comprehensive compilation, together with guidance as to the character of each hymn. Hence, in the index of first lines a letter has been prefixed to each hymn giving an indication as to its characteristic—whether a hymn of direct praise, a prayer, or sentimental, historical, etc., etc. Those who object to hymns of any particular class can, therefore, easily avoid their use.

Guided by these two principles, hymns have been included for the following reasons:—

1. Hymns which, being in constant request, are inserted, not necessarily because of their merit, but rather because they have been found to be of real use in many cases.

2. Since the formation of other hymn books, much greater prominence has been given to music in connection with Choral Celebrations, and with this has grown a want of more hymns, especially short ones of one or two verses for different parts of the service.

3. So also has there grown a demand for further hymns on Almsgiving, for Processionals of a greater length than usual, for Harvest, Flower, and Mission Services, besides other special occasions.

4. Finally, it is felt by very many to be a mistake to accustom children to the use of a Children's hymn book which will be discarded when they have grown older. Far better is it to accustom them at once, when young, to love the hymn book which they will use in after life. For this purpose a few more children's hymns than are supplied in other books seem to be wanted.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE
A SACRED CANTATA
FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE
AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneousness, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised. Mr. Gaul was engaged on this, his latest work, for about three years, and we believe that all who hear it will agree that the time was very profitably spent."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"A 'Song-Cycle for Children' on 'The Seasons,' words and Music by Clarisse Mallard (Breitkopf and Hartel), can be heartily recommended. It consists of four numbers, one devoted to each season, with chorus in unison. The melodies are simple and attractive, and the verses, more especially of 'Winter,' are an unacknowledged treatment of a well-worn subject."—Musical News, August 29, 1903.

"'Song-Cycle for the Children,' by Clarisse Mallard. 1s. 6d. Some charming little songs, and if performed in the way suggested will prove most popular."—Nonconformist Musical Journal, August 1, 1903.

"Nothing but the highest praise can be accorded to 'Memories,' by Clarisse Mallard. It is very beautiful. 'Petite,' also by Clarisse Mallard, is, in different fashion, as charming. The words of both songs are by Fred. A. Farwell."—The Lady.

"IN THE SOUTH"

(ALASSIO)

CONCERT OVERTURE

FOR ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 50.)

FULL SCORE AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS IN THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

The contrast is admirably pointed, the themes are delightfully fresh and gracious, and their treatment masterly, although the work would bear a slight curtailment, notably in the passage where a part of the military music is textually repeated. This undue length is, however, but a very slight blemish on a remarkably beautiful work.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

We account "In the South" to be a really great and beautiful creation. . . . The fresh feeling of gladness; the gentle and musing melancholy which comes of contemplating exquisite scenes of Nature; the energy which thoughts of a great heroic past develop—all are here in rich abundance, and best of all is the artistic restraint that controlled the musician's thick-coming fancies, and made his whole powers minister to the beauty without which music is no better than a tinkling cymbal.

STANDARD.

The contrapuntal writing is masterly, and the scoring is most picturesque, and in its entirety the overture fully sustains the reputation of its composer.

DAILY NEWS.

I think it contains some of the best writing the composer has yet given to the world. . . . The scoring throughout is masterly, and, what is more to the point, it is individual, owing but very little to Wagner, Tschai-kovsky, or Richard Strauss. There is a fine atmosphere of poetry in the music. . . . The composer has never written anything so powerful as the working-out section in which the composer tells us that he has "endeavoured to paint the relentless and domineering onward force of the ancient day and give a sound-picture of the strife and wars of a later time." The music is full of energy and picturesqueness, and makes a fine contrast to the restful section dealing with a folk-song sung by the viola.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The opening seems illumined by sunshine until an element of disturbance enters with the idea of "the ancient might of Rome," and drums and trumpets suggest a somewhat irregular march. The resumption of tranquillity with the tinkle of sheep bells brings a melodious strain for harp, lower strings and horn, which is practically sustained until the close. Dr. Elgar's individuality in the handling of striking themes is apparent throughout, and a second hearing of the overture will be heard with pleasure by all who were present last night.

GRAPHIC.

The music is characterised by that fine, healthy, open-air feeling which is so often to be found in Dr. Elgar's work. The splendid vitality of the opening phrases, the plaintive song of the shepherd, and the martial strains of the section in which Dr. Elgar depicts the "strife and wars of a later time," all show him in his happiest vein, and the overture must rank among the most successful of his orchestral works.

GLOBE.

The themes are not only very beautiful in themselves, but they are also woven together with consummate skill, and the new overture is one of the finest of all Dr. Elgar's works.

MORNING POST.

The brilliant opening suggests the open air and breathes a spirit of buoyant optimism. Very admirable is the part where the composer's thoughts are aroused by the contemplation of old Roman remains. . . . Particularly charming is the employment of a popular tune, allotted to a solo viola. . . . It is undoubtedly a brilliant and interesting work.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a work glowing with life and colour, and full of spontaneous melody. The Roman section is the strongest and most virile music that Dr. Elgar has written, and the serene beauty of the section in which the shepherd's folk-song is heard will dwell in the memory.

PALL MALL-GAZETTE.

Elgar has sought for the divine life of an Italian spring, and, for the honour of English music, he has found it. . . . Elgar fills up his score with a fine sense of mastery, while all the time he is interpreting for his hearers the secret lessons of the land which has evidently captured the remotest places of his spirit. It was natural, too, that the genius and conquest which accompanied the march of old Rome across Germany and France even to the north of England should have attracted his poetical and meditative mind. In this portion of the overture the music rises to a height which well may be called Imperial. . . . Among all the composers who have used Italy for their inspiration, Elgar has brought back most of the essential spirit of the country.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The new overture is marked by rich imaginative play and graphic touch. In form it gravitates, like "Cockaigne," to the "Meistersinger" type, but the atmosphere is absolutely new, and the composer's mastery of intricate line is freshly revealed.

MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS

BY

AGNES HONORIA LEEDS,

LICENTIATE OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

108 pp. Oblong Folio, profusely illustrated in colours, bound in coloured paper board covers, cloth back; price 7s. 6d.

"MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS" is a book which appeals to the minds of children between the ages of four and eight. Knowing the love which these little folks have for pictures, and the educational value of pictorial aids in imparting knowledge to those of tender years, the author has embodied in the present work a system of teaching notation by means of illustrations of familiar objects, a method which she has employed for many years with the greatest success. The scheme is entirely systematic and progressive, and by its means the child-pupil is led to form an actual friendship with the individual notes.

With regard to the value of notes, the method followed is that of grouping them into one FAMILY—the members of which become personally known to the pupil—the value of each note being clearly indicated by its degree of family relationship. Thus we have "Mr. Semibreve, Mrs. Minim, Master Crotchet, Miss Quaver, Master Semiquaver, and Baby Demisemiquaver." Furthermore, the child is initiated in a Game of Exchanging Notes, according to the respective values of the various notes.

The book also contains Elementary Ear Exercises and a special chapter is devoted to Signs and Ornaments. Other sections are Scales in One Octave, Easy Sight-reading Exercises, Easy Finger Exercises, together with little Solos, and Duets for Teacher and Pupil, and for little Pupils by themselves.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND
EVENING PRAYER

SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY,
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

COMPOSED BY

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

Folio edition, with the Composer's original Organ Accompaniment fully set out, 4s. net.

Octavo Edition (compressed accompaniment), 8d.

A classic of "English Church Music," Wesley's setting of Isaiah xxxv. ("The Wilderness and the solitary place") takes the highest rank as an anthem in several respects: technical construction, organ accompaniment and stop registration, charm of variety, melodic beauty, and, above all, poetic inspiration. One of the finest of his anthem masterpieces, "The Wilderness" will long preserve the memory of Samuel Sebastian Wesley in "quires and places where they sing."

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his "Suite Venitienne" at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. . . . In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

THE TIMES, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

Dr. Elgar has treated his subject with a fitting sense of dignity and awe, and everywhere his reverence, sincerity, and conviction are clearly manifested. Much of his writing is in the best manner of genuine Church music, much of it is in the right sense mysterious, as it should be. And precisely because it is the direct outcome of conviction so it carries conviction with it. . . . Dr. Elgar has succeeded in a huge task before which most composers might well have quailed.

DAILY TELEGRAPH, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

It is a good omen that at last a man of our own race and nation has come to the extreme front and drawn to himself the wondering admiration of all who profess and call themselves musicians and lovers of the art. There is something impressive in the position now occupied by Elgar. He is not an intriguer. He does not compass heaven and earth making proselytes to believe in his own powers, neither does he trim his sails to catch the varying breezes of popular opinion. Having something to say in the fashion which appears to him best, he says it straight out, and leaves the issue to the Fates. Yet, though sturdily independent, courting nobody, he now occupies the position of a man with whom most people are determined to be pleased. There must be something in him—much more than common—to bring about this result. . . . This remarkable Oratorio is worth any amount of care in the handling. It is not a work of a mere trafficker in musical goods. Its sincerity is unquestionable, the loftiness of its aim cannot be denied, and its strength must be taken into account, whatever may be thought of its methods.

DAILY TELEGRAPH, OCTOBER 16, 1903.

Leaving consideration of method for the greater satisfaction of touching upon evidence of the lofty powers with which the composer is endowed, and by the strength of which he has taken a foremost place amongst the composers of the world—perhaps even more than in "Gerontius," where the subject was less varied and expansive—those powers assert themselves in the new work. . . . Whether he shows us the ineffable gentleness and dignity of Christ, the penitence of Mary Magdalene, the despair of Judas—whether he picture storm or calm, suggests the tragedy of Golgotha or the glory of the Ascension, we are conscious of power, sincerity, and truth.

STANDARD, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

There can be no question concerning the lofty purpose of the composer and his consummate mastery of the resources of his art. The work is the product of fervid imagination controlled and guided by keen intellectual perception, a masterful expression in music of spiritual convictions, and in its essence a sacred music drama permeated with the spirit of the preacher. . . . The keynote of Dr. Elgar's work is lofty mysticism, suggesting the spiritual in a peculiar and often strangely beautiful manner.

MORNING POST, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

The deep sincerity which pervades the work, the splendid technique, the power, and, in many instances, the great charm that are revealed demand immediate recognition before any criticism be passed. . . . As an expression of lofty purpose, as an example of consummate musicianship, and as revealing both imagination and originality there can be but one opinion. The instrumentation of the work is a study in itself.

GLOBE, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

Dr. Elgar's command of every orchestral resource is proverbial, and in "The Apostles" he handles vast choral masses with no less signal success, and his solo writing, if not exactly melodious in the old-fashioned sense, is always dramatic and expressive. . . . Those who know Dr. Elgar's music best will understand how fully he has availed himself of the many opportunities given him by the most moving story the world has ever known, what treasures of musical science he has expended upon it, and with what dazzling resources of orchestration he has enriched it. . . . The work must be pronounced a worthy successor to "The Dream of Gerontius."

PALL MALL GAZETTE, OCTOBER 15, 1903.

A masterpiece; an invaluable contribution to the art of the world; a score of pure gold throughout—a work so great, so remote from the common things of the earth, that to follow the composer into the distant fastnesses of his mind is, at all events, on a first hearing, something of a heroic virtue. He tries one, not because he wishes to compel endurance, but because he has carved out his way, and it is nothing to him whether you follow or not. There is the secret of his wonderful art: it is nothing to him if you take his score or reject it; and there follows the inevitable result that immense indifference invariably conquers those who are eager. Immense indifference, however, implies a sort of personal work which, granted a powerful brain as the origin from which that work springs, makes for ultimate triumph; and such power was certainly displayed to-day. . . . I write in this somewhat ecstatic strain because the work deserves it. . . . And such music as rises to Elgar's—to this great master's—heart is of the finest possible quality; it is of "meaning most decisive."

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE, OCTOBER 17, 1903.

Without any doubt "The Apostles" is worthy of great and admiring attention, a superb instance of English imagination and musical craftsmanship. I yield to none in my satisfaction that we have a composer so able and so masterful that he compels inquiry and commands applause. . . . I find "The Apostles" in some respects in advance of anything Elgar has previously done; as a specimen of mere mastery of material it shows a surer grasp, and though there is the same effort to impress by prodigies of polyphony, which amount to but little in the end, the effort here is more successfully made.

OBSERVER, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

As the days pass since I was one of a closely-packed and deeply attentive audience in the massive town hall the conviction increases in my mind that I was present at the birth of not only a masterpiece, but an epoch-marking work in the history of oratorio. Musically it may be described as a sacred drama on the lines of Wagner's "Parsifal." . . . That the motives are always appropriate may unhesitatingly be said; that the passages in which they are used with special purpose carry conviction is undoubted, and that the composer has gone beyond all forms and reached the bedrock of musical expression is incontrovertible.

SUNDAY TIMES, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

The choral writing in the "Apostles" is among the finest ever written, at any time, by any musician. Its difficulty, as those who know the trend of Dr. Elgar's genius will need no telling, is enormous; but the complexities he so delights in inventing are so obviously the outcome of a desire to express convictions (artistic and spiritual) that none who value sincerity in art would dare suggest that this great representative of British music should curb the fire of his Pegasus, or (to change our metaphor) attempt to trim his sails to the breeze of critical opinion. . . . "The Apostles" is real music—that is to say, music which means something; music which expresses the inner sense of the words to which it is set.

REFEREE, OCTOBER 18, 1903.

I very much doubt, however, if two-thirds of those who were present apprehended the greatness of the music they were listening to. Small blame to them, however, for the work is laid out on the same lines as Wagner's "Parsifal," and the themes have consequently to become familiar before the significance of the music can be wholly understood. That which may be said to have been apparent to all was its spirituality. It is this which gives the music its distinctive individuality. . . . The deep impression made by the work was shown by the momentary silence which ensued after the last note had died away, for although a stupendous tonal climax is worked up, the end is calm and gentle, as the spirit of the faith the music illustrates.

THE TIMES says:

expression, by Mr. John Harrison: is a 'Friedenszerählung.'"

THE STANDARD says:

"The two principal tenor solos were finely sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE DAILY NEWS says:

"Mr. Harrison, the tenor, sang with a sense of dramatic emphasis one had not expected from him, and at the same time the quality of his voice was good."

THE MORNING POST says:

"Of two tenor songs, one 'The Vision of Peace,' the other from the last act, both are modelled on Wagner; the second is the more striking. The orchestration in the first is heavy, so that the vocalist has a hard fight. Mr. John Harrison sang both extremely well."

THE DAILY GRAPHIC says:

"Two of them well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says:

"The solo parts of which were taken in first-rate style by Mr. John Harrison."

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says:

Harrison, who earned great applause by his beautiful voice and method, and his sincere and refined dramatic expression. His performances stamp him as an artist of the first rank."

THE GLOBE says:

"Two tenor solos, well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE STAR says:

"Both were sung with conspicuous beauty of voice and expression by Mr. John Harrison, who thereby showed himself more than equal to the severest of artistic tasks."

MISS ALICE NAPIER

(CONTRALTO. Pupil of Miss ANNA WILLIAMS).

GAUL'S "HOLY CITY" AND MISCELLANEOUS.

"Miss Alice Napier, the contralto, will probably not be offended if we say she would make a very fair understudy of Madame Clara Butt.
In appearance startlingly resembling the great singer, her voice at times brought its own pleasant reminder of Mrs. Kennerley-Rumford, upon whose method her style was evidently and commendably modelled."—Wilkesden Chronicle, Jan. 23, 1903.

MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT (DUBLIN). Nov. 12, 1903.

"Miss Alice Napier, who is a fine specimen of early womanhood and possesses a really magnificent voice, which is a genuine contralto remindful in some phases of the glories of Clara Butt's, sang Batten's 'Peace and Rest' and Willeby's 'The birds go North' with great beauty of tone. The young lady ought to have a very successful future."—Irish Society.

"Miss Alice Napier, whose first appearance it was in Ireland, sang 'Peace and rest' (Batten) and 'Land of hope and glory' (Elgar) in a manner that proved her to be a vocalist of the highest ability. She was also recalled for her charming singing of 'The birds go North' (Willeby)."—Freeman's Journal.

"Although Miss Napier made her first appearance in Ireland, her reputation as a contralto singer had evidently preceded her, as the warmth of her reception proved; nor were her audience disappointed, as all her songs were warmly received."—Irish Express.

"Miss Alice Napier, who made her first appearance in Ireland on this occasion, sang, 'Peace and rest' (Batten), 'Land of hope and glory' (Elgar), and 'The birds go North' (Willeby), with great refinement and richness of voice."—Dublin Independent.

"MESSIAH" (HULL VOCAL SOCIETY). MARCH 22, 1904.

"The solos by Miss Alice Napier were all acceptable, and especially successful was she in the air 'He shall feed His flock.'"—Yorkshire Post, March 23.

"Miss Alice Napier, to whom the contralto music was entrusted, sang with all the ease and style of a singer well accustomed to public appearances. Her voice is contralto of excellent and useful quality, round and open as to production, and no one but a well-trained singer could sing 'He was despised' and 'He shall feed His flock' so admirably and successfully as Miss Napier sang them."—Hull Daily Mail.

"The contralto, Miss Alice Napier, sang with great purity and style. Her rendering of 'He was despised' being most beautifully sung."—Hull Times.

"ISRAEL IN EGYPT" (ELY CATHEDRAL). MAY 5, 1903.

"Than Miss Napier, a richer contralto has never been heard in the city. She was heard to grand advantage in 'Their land brought forth frogs' and 'Thou shalt bring them in.' In the latter her exceedingly rich voice gave a very fine rendering of a difficult part."—Cambridgeshire Times.

Oratorio a specialty.

DVORÁK'S "STABAT MATER."

"Miss Maud Santley's rich voice and her appropriately dignified interpretation of the contralto music were keenly enjoyed. The fine air 'Inflammatum et Accensus,' could hardly have been more finely sung."—Sheffield Telegraph, Dec. 29, 1903.

"Miss Santley possesses a very rich contralto voice, and her rendering of 'Inflammatum et Accensus' left no doubts as to her artistic perception."—Sheffield Weekly News, Dec. 26, 1903.

"THE MESSIAH."—"Mr. J. Coleman, the basso of Lichfield Cathedral, was grand, his rich and powerful voice being heard to great effect, especially in the aria 'Why do the nations.' In this his performance was clean out of the ordinary, and was truly magnificent, it eliciting literal thunders of applause. Another especially praiseworthy aria was 'But who may abide,' the delivery of the words 'For He is like a refiner's fire' being magnetic."—Nuneaton Chronicle, April 8, 1904.

"THE BRIDE OF DUNKERRON."—"Mr. J. Coleman was an excellent representative of the Sea King. His voice, a bass of a sonorous and telling timbre, was admirably suited for the part, and he sang with animation and spirit."—Birmingham Daily Mail, April 18, 1904.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS,
 48, DYNE ROAD, BRONDESUR, N.W.
 Telegrams:—SOLOIST, LONDON.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).

(Westminster Abbey.)

Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—

"1, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14, 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH" (COLERAINE).—"Mr. Montague Borwell was the bass, and it must be said that his Elijah is a fine performance. Not a point was missing—the irony of the recitative 'Call him louder' was incisively conveyed, and the heroic and devotional sides of the fierce old Hebrew were also splendidly expressed. There are supreme traditions of this part, and it can only be said that Mr. Borwell fully rivalled the best. As the last solo work of the evening, Mr. Borwell's rendering of 'It is enough' remains memorable. You beheld a tragic figure behind the music; a figure borne down by weariness and defeat. The applause at the finish of this was wholly deserved."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 10, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (WESLEYAN CHOIRS FESTIVAL).—"Mr. Montague Borwell as the Prophet was admirably suited to the part. He has a fine voice—very musical, and with an unusual degree of dramatic force. His sarcastic emphasis in the 'Baal' music, his pleading tones in 'Lord God of Abraham,' the spirit and dash of 'Is not His word like a fire?' and the plaintive despair of 'It is enough,' were alike admirable."—Holloway and Hornsey Gazette, Nov. 6, 1903.

"ELIJAH" (BRIGHTON).—"Mr. Montague Borwell merits unstinted praise for the masterly manner in which he gave the solos allotted to Elijah. He was grandly effective in his recitatives, and aroused great enthusiasm by his superb renderings of the airs 'Lord God of Abraham' and 'It is enough.'"—Sussex Daily News, March 18, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (CLAPTON).—"The vivid portrayal of the great Prophet's work was grandly rendered by Mr. Montague Borwell, every item of his long performance receiving unstinted applause; the clear enunciation and mellow tone of his voice being well-nigh perfect. His finest effort, without doubt, was the great invocation to God on Mount Carmel, to overthrow by the test of 'the fire' in the sacrifice of the burnt offering, the false prophets of Baal. The mocking notes of derision, 'Call him louder,' &c., were followed with rapt attention and were quite the gem of Mr. Borwell's singing. Again, in the recit., 'O Lord, Thou hast overthrown Thine enemies,' he made a deep impression, while in the beautiful air 'It is enough' he has seldom been heard to better effect."—Recorder, April 15, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (BROMLEY).—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was mainly devotionism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the 'Baal' scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

Of the Royal Albert Hall, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, and Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, &c.

"ELIJAH" (CLAPTON).—"Miss Winifred Marwood, as is well known, has a soprano voice of singular purity; and the many difficult numbers which fell to her share were given with a musical charm and grace which won for her golden opinions. Her best effort, to our mind, was what has been said to be 'the finest soprano solo ever written in sacred song,' the air 'Hear ye, Israel.'"—Recorder, April 15, 1904.

"FAUST" (GOUNOD).—(GOLDSMITHS' INSTITUTE).—"In the character of Margarita Miss Winifred Marwood was all that could be desired, and gave the difficult 'Jewel' song excellently. She was also very good in the 'Prison' scene terminating with the brilliant trio for Margarita, Faust, and Mephistopheles."—Journal, March, 1904.

(BASS).

Of the Gloucester, Cheltenham, and Tewkesbury Festivals, &c

"ELIJAH." FOLKESTONE.

"So far as the principals were concerned nothing but praise can be accorded them. All were in their best form, singing splendidly all through. . . . Principal credit, however, is due to Mr. Henry Sunman, L.R.A.M., to whom fell the greater portion of the solo work. A bass vocalist of high merit, Mr. Sunman was undoubtedly the favourite of the evening, the marvellous manner in which he controlled his voice—even in the most difficult passages—claiming the admiration of every person in the hall. In the opening recitative 'As God the Lord' he merited approbation, but his rendering of the air 'Is not His word like a fire' was perfect, captivating the audience, the expressiveness with which he interpreted the music being little short of wonderful. Gladly would the audience have welcomed a repetition."—Folkestone Herald, March 26, 1904.

"Among the artists engaged, the chief honours of the evening fell to Mr. Henry Sunman, the bass, who sang the part of Elijah. Whether in prayer to Jehovah, as when the Prophet interceded for the widow's child, whether in mockery of the priests of Baal, in the moment of triumph, or in despair of soul, Mr. Sunman alike displayed a very remarkable power. His voice seemed equally adapted to every variety of emotion; and there can have been few among the audience to whom he did not bring home the tempestuous spirit of Elijah."—Folkestone Chronicle, March 26, 1904.

For terms, &c., please address, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

MR. SIVEY LEVEY

RECITATIONS AT THE PIANO.

"... Mr. Levey possesses the poetic temperament in a marked degree, and is moreover blessed with an excellent sense of humour. . . . Mr. Levey has an undoubted gift of dramatic expression, and that he is also a musician is proved by the appropriate and often striking themes with which he accompanies his recitations. He should be doubly welcome just now, when the gap left by the late Mr. Clifford Harrison, the reciter par excellence, is still waiting to be filled."—Public Opinion, February 19, 1904.

MUSICAL TIMES COMPETITIONS.

The offer of two prizes, of fifteen guineas each, for the best anthem and part-song, has had most satisfactory results so far as numbers are concerned, as no fewer than 301 compositions have been sent in, including sixty received on the last day of entry, March 31. It has therefore been found quite impossible to examine these multifarious manuscripts in time to make known the results in the present issue. We are thus regretfully compelled to defer the announcement of the awards till our June number.

FELIX WEINGARTNER.

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

No department of the interpretation of music has undergone greater development than that of orchestral conducting. As a case in point, Liszt, who has not been surpassed in his particular sphere of pianoforte playing, was at the height of his fame when the art of conducting was only just becoming known, at least in England. A man need not have passed much beyond middle life to have witnessed such time-beaters as may answer to some of the following descriptions:—The Jullienesque, the picturesque conductor; the drill-sergeant or martinet conductor, who is always worrying his players; the stodgy conductor, more fit to handle a London policeman's baton while on the beat, —though this is a reflection upon the intelligence of the Metropolitan Police; the antic-acrobatic, or contortionist conductor, who should be screened from public view; and the absent-minded conductor. Concerning one of the last named it is said that, when rehearsing the overture to 'Zampa,' he continued to beat time after the band had played the final chord! 'We have finished, sir!' the principal violinist ventured, in all humility, to remark. 'Finished!' replied the astonished batonist; 'why, I have twelve more bars!' And so on. If some of the species enumerated above are not altogether extinct, immense strides have been made in conducting technique. When to a thorough technical equipment can be added first-rate musicianship, a magnetic personality, ripe experience, and poetic fervour on the part of the conductor—an efficient orchestra being assumed—results approaching perfection may be looked for. Is not such a combination of conducting gifts to be found in the subject of this biographical sketch? There can be only one answer to this question.

Felix Weingartner was born on June 2, 1863, at Zara, on the Adriatic. The more or less accidental circumstance of his having entered the world in the capital of Dalmatia has given rise to some amusing mis-statements. A London musical critic recently said that Felix Weingartner 'is a Galician and not a German; and that between a Galician and a German there are more racial differences than between an Englishman and a Dutchman. Herr Weingartner's temperament is not at all German, really.' The 'really' must be repeated in the face of the following facts, as related by the great conductor himself to the writer of this sketch.

'My father, a native of Vienna, was a director of telegraphs under the Austrian Government. As he suffered from a chest complaint, he asked to be appointed to the southernmost station, which was Zara; this request was acceded to, and thus I happened to have been born in Dalmatia. My mother was a Silesian lady and my ancestors are German every whit. The title "Edler von Münzberg," about which you ask and which rightly belongs to me, means that I am a "noble of Münzberg." This I inherit from an ancestor who held the post of Master of the Imperial Mint at Vienna during the reign of Maria Theresa, by whom the patent of nobility was bestowed. My father died when I was four years old, and my mother then removed to Graz, where I was brought up and sent to school. I am glad,' he continued, 'to have this opportunity of clearing up the question of my nationality.' He utters an emphatic 'Unsinn' (nonsense) in recalling the statement made by a Berlin critic that he (Weingartner) could not understand a Beethoven Symphony because he was not a German!

The boy began to play the pianoforte at the early age of six. He subsequently studied under W. A. Remy (Dr. Wilhelm Mayer), one of the most successful teachers in Austria-Hungary, who numbered among his pupils Ferruccio Busoni, Wilhelm Kienzl, Reznicek, Sahla, and others. In 1881, at the age of eighteen, Weingartner entered the Leipzig Conservatorium, his teachers being Reinecke, Jadassohn and, more especially, Oscar Paul. There he composed his pianoforte pieces Op. 1 to 3, which he played at the Conservatoire concerts. Another of his student compositions was the Orchestral Serenade for strings. This he conducted (on March 12, 1883) at the sixth of a series of special concerts given at the Conservatorium to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the foundation, by Mendelssohn, of the Institution. He won the Mozart Prize, and before leaving the Conservatorium, at Easter, 1883, he was entrusted with the direction of Beethoven's Second Symphony in public. This proved to be an important event in his life, as he then and there decided to become a conductor.

Liszt, the generous-souled, had taken a fancy to the young man and invited him to Weimar. There, in surroundings delightful to an enthusiastic and gifted young musician, Felix Weingartner had the advantage of daily intercourse with the king of pianists. He met under Liszt's hospitable roof such congenial spirits as Eugen D'Albert, Friedheim, Lamond, Reisenauer, Rosenthal, and Stavenhagen. He specially remembers the overwhelming impression which Liszt's performance of the Adagio of Beethoven's 'Hammerclavier' Sonata made upon him; and like everybody who came under the magic spell of the master's great personality, he cannot find words to express his admiration of his nobility of character and goodness of heart. The fate which denied Liszt the recognition due to his creative genius, while showering unparalleled honours upon the pianoforte virtuoso, was borne with the philosophic calm and fortitude of true genius. 'I can wait,' he used to say to his friends whenever the matter was discussed. 'Well,' says Herr Weingartner, 'he has waited till after death; but his time has come at last, and in England too, if I may judge from the recent success of his "Tasso."'

At Weimar, on March 23, 1884, Weingartner's first opera, 'Sakuntala,' was produced. He then entered upon his conducting career and held appointments successively at Königsberg (as Wagner had done before him), Danzig and Hamburg. In the meantime his second opera, 'Malawika,' was produced at Munich, June 3, 1886.

In 1887 Weingartner was one of three conductors at Hamburg, where Hans von Bülow was specially engaged to conduct thirty operatic performances. The redoubtable Hans had not only greatly aged, but it soon became evident that he was extremely nervous. He only concerned himself with the orchestra, and left the singers to their own devices, while the action of the opera seemed to be felt by him as a downright hindrance to the performance. The three regular conductors—Sucher, Feld, and Weingartner himself—often had to take up positions in the wings to assist the bewildered singers with signs and cues, for, in spite of Bülow's marvellous memory, he would at opera performances simply bury his head in the score. In the concert-room however he was wonderful as usual, and there he achieved his greatest triumphs. But his mania for making speeches during concerts had already possessed him, and Herr Weingartner listened to one delivered before a performance of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, in which Bülow compared the recently deceased Emperor William I. with Mendelssohn; and Bismarck, whom he thought much the greater man, with Brahms. A short time previously, Brahms had conducted his E minor Symphony in Hamburg, and was just then the object of Bülow's idolatry.

Bülow's fondness of peculiarities in the way of tempi and nuances, which made his work so unpalatable during the last years of his life, was the cause of Weingartner's rupture with his great chief. Bülow, in newly studying and conducting Bizet's 'Carmen,' had taken the tempi at a peculiarly slow speed throughout, changing Allegros into Andantes, &c., and justified his action by the remark that he wished to 'express thereby the Spaniards' pride'! When Weingartner was suddenly called upon to conduct the opera, instead of Bülow, he naturally reverted to the composer's tempi, a step which cost him his chief's goodwill; nay, more, Bülow took an intense dislike to the independent young conductor, nor failed to show it in various ways.

In 1889 the subject of this sketch settled at Mannheim. Up to this time his conducting experiences had been associated entirely with opera, but at Mannheim he entered upon the career which has brought him so much fame—that of an orchestral conductor. After two years' activity at Mannheim, conducting opera and concerts, Weingartner in the spring of 1891 was appointed Hof-Kapellmeister at Berlin. As conductor at the Royal Opera and of the Royal Symphony Concerts he enhanced his reputation as one of the foremost conductors of the day. His third opera, 'Genesius,' was produced at Berlin on November 15, 1892. The libretto of 'Genesius,' written by the composer himself, deals with the tragic fate of the persecuted Christians at the time of the Emperor Diocletian. The music is full of dramatic energy and is masterly in its orchestration, but it failed to meet with acceptance by the Berliners, probably owing to the religious element in the work. After two performances the composer withdrew his opera; but it has since been given with success at Mannheim, Hamburg, Leipzig, Weimar and Prague. In 1897, owing to ill-health, Weingartner resigned the conductorship of the Royal Opera, Berlin, but he retained, and still holds, the office of conductor of the Royal Symphony Concerts in the German capital, an office to which he is elected by the members of the orchestra. Upon partly relinquishing his duties at Berlin he made Munich his headquarters: there, in that art-environed city, he resides and conducts the famous Kaim concerts.

Felix Weingartner made his first appearance in England on May 17, 1898, when he conducted one of the Wagner Concerts given at Queen's Hall under the auspices of Mr. Schulz-Curtius. The famous conductor received a warm welcome in the columns of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Here are its words, glowing with genuine appreciation:—

Herr Felix Weingartner made his first appearance in England, and we came under the magnetic influence of a leader of men and a poet amongst conductors. Weingartner is great, of that there can be no doubt after his superb performances on May 17. It only needed the opening Adagio of the 'Freischütz' Overture (No. 1 on the programme) to show that no ordinary wielder of the baton stood before us. What are his strong points? He seems, above all, a thoroughly sound and sane musician, bent on reproducing the great master's ipsissima verba, so to speak, and imbuing them with their fullest beauty and nobility. He inflicts no far-fetched 'new readings' upon us, nor is he a tempo rubato faddist when dealing with composers to whom rhythm was—as it is still, and has been since the world began—of the very essence of music. His rhythmical accuracy is enchanting; wonderful elasticity, combined with absolute clearness and perfection of detail, distinguish his readings of such strongly rhythmical pieces as Berlioz's Overture 'Carnaval Romain' and the Finale to Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Another of his strong points is beauty of tone. Never have we heard more euphonious combinations of wondrous sounds than he conjured up in the awfully solemn Prelude and Finale to 'Parsifal' and the ravishing slow movement of the Symphony. Nor was there a moment throughout the concert when the orchestra sacrificed beauty of tone for mere noisy 'effect.' In short, performances like those of the 'Freischütz' and 'Carnaval Romain' Overtures, the 'Parsifal' selection, and the A major Symphony have not been heard in London for many a day; and when it is remembered that the conductor had to deal with an orchestra perfectly strange to him, his triumph (he was recalled three times at the end of the concert) must be considered complete.

A word may be added respecting the physical aspect of his conducting, for it is a pleasure to follow Herr Weingartner's movements. They combine the dignity and calm of Dr. Hans Richter with the quicksilver alertness and exuberance of Mr. Henry J. Wood, and to watch him draw a long slow-time crescendo out of the orchestra, and lead up to some great climax, is a fine sight and sufficient to explain his influence over his players.—THE MUSICAL TIMES, June, 1898.

Herr Weingartner had never visited London previous to 1898. Three years later he again found his way here when he conducted—at Queen's Hall, on May 2, 1901—his orchestral poem 'Das Gefilde der Seligen' ('The Fields of the Blessed'). Since then he has paid an annual visit, and on each occasion has increased his reputation. In 1902 he was the subject of a leading article in The Times,—an unusual circumstance—in which the writer referred to him as 'one of the most impulsive and essentially musical interpreters now before the public. There is scarcely anything in the music he conducted last week that he does not seem to appreciate in the fullest degree, and his mastery over the orchestra is colossal. . . . He has made on many hearers a strong impression as a man who, with a consummate mastery over his orchestra, a subtle ear for instrumentation, and an exhaustive knowledge alike of classical and of recent music, has retained the healthy enthusiasm of some such childhood as Mozart's.' These words admit of no disputation. Something of the same impression seems to have been made in America during the conductor's recent visit to the United States. Mr. H. E. Krehbiel, the special correspondent of THE MUSICAL TIMES in New York, writing in our issue of last month, said: 'Herr Weingartner, for whom the Philharmonic Society set aside the traditions of decades and gave a concert outside the subscription, made so profound an impression on the musical life of the American metropolis that an effort will doubtless be made to bring him here permanently, or for a term of years.'

In the course of a pleasant chat with Herr Weingartner during his sojourn in London to conduct the recent Kruse Festival, we ask the distinguished conductor to give his opinion of our orchestral players. 'They are very good,' he replies, 'intelligent, willing and courteous; but one can feel that they are not used to playing together as an organic body. In Berlin,' he adds, 'I not only have four rehearsals for my concert, but my men habitually play as one organization under one conductor, to the obvious advantage of the ensemble. I must say however that Professor Kruse has been very good in giving me all the rehearsals he could.'

Now let us see what one of our most experienced orchestral players thinks of the subject of this sketch. He says: 'When Herr Weingartner takes us through a work at rehearsal we feel that he already knows exactly what he wants, and moreover that he has the power and knack of getting it without any undue fuss or worry; all is calm and peaceful with him at rehearsal. At the performance he is like one hypnotized, and with the power to impart the spell to those playing under his baton; and, while always retaining absolute control, he permits the individual player who for the moment has the more important subject to feel that he can play with ease and comfort. It is always a great pleasure to play under Herr Weingartner's direction.'

The mention of the Sheffield Chorus to Herr Weingartner incites him to enthusiasm upon their wonderful achievements. 'Good, excellent!' he says; 'and good larynx,' pointing to his throat. 'I have never heard such splendid choral singing anywhere.' And then, after a moment's pause, he adds—'Wonderful!' It may be interesting to state that the choral rehearsal which Herr Weingartner held at Sheffield occupied only ninety minutes, although the works were 'The Choral Symphony' and 'The Dream of Gerontius,' so well had Dr. Coward prepared his trusty choristers. 'I know about Dr. Coward's career,' he says, 'and I was so pleased with the singing of his Sheffield Chorus that I intend to dedicate to them and their conductor two eight-part choruses, with orchestral accompaniment, that I have just composed.' Thus does so eminent a foreign conductor emphatically endorse all that has been said in these columns concerning the attainments of the full-voiced and intelligent singers from Sheffield and their genius conductor.

As a composer Herr Weingartner can point to a good record of some forty published works. These cover a wide field of creative activity. Of his four operas, three ('Sakuntala,' 'Malawika,' and 'Genesius') have already been mentioned. 'Orestes'—produced at the Stadt-Theater, Leipzig, on February 15, 1902—is a Trilogy, the three sections, Agamemnon Choephori, and Eumenides, forming one representation. 'Orestes' has been given at Leipzig, Stuttgart, Frankfort, and Nuremberg, while performances are to be given next winter at Mannheim and Munich. Two Symphonies, in G and E flat, have to be placed to the credit side of the account. The Adagio of the latter has for its principal subject a theme worthy of Beethoven in its extended melos—a proof that the gift of writing a long-drawn strain, and one that is beautiful withal, is not yet extinct. Here is the tender tune in all its unaffected simplicity:—

Adagio, ma non troppo, cantabile. (Strings only, without Double-Basses.)

Both the Symphonic poems, 'King Lear' and 'Das Gefilde der Seligen' ('The Fields of the Blessed') have been performed in London under the composer's own direction—the former on May 17, 1898, the latter on May 2, 1901. The orchestral compositions also include a Serenade for stringed orchestra. In chamber music there are three String Quartets,—in D minor, F minor, and F major—and a Sextet for Pianoforte and Strings. Several pieces for pianoforte solo complete the instrumental creations. The vocal music consists of a large number of songs, and the two eight-part choruses (MS.) to be dedicated to the Sheffield Musical Union. As a painstaking and conscientious editor Herr Weingartner has given ample proof of his industry in the monumental edition, in collaboration with M. Charles Malherbe, of the works of Berlioz,—a great favourite of the composer-conductor-editor—published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel. We give a complete list of Herr Weingartner's compositions:—

His versatility is not confined to the chief work of his life, namely, that of conducting, nor composing, but is prominent in his literary attainments. In addition to several articles contributed by him to musical journals, he is the author of the following pamphlets:—

1. Die Lehre von der Wiedergeburt und das musikalische Drama. Leipzig.
2. Ueber das Dirigieren. Berlin, 1896.
3. Bayreuth, 1876-96. Berlin, 1896.
This has been translated into English by Lily Antrobus, and published by Messrs. Weekes and Co.
4. Die Symphonie nach Beethoven. Berlin, 1898.
This appeared in an English form—'The Symphony since Beethoven'—in the Contemporary Review of February and March, 1899; and an English version will be published in a separate form. A French translation has been made, and one in the Dutch language is being prepared.

Of special interest are the views of Herr Weingartner as expressed in his Beethoven pamphlet. We give a few extracts therefrom. In regard to the mighty musician, the composer of the 'immortal nine,' he says:—

I would first of all establish the fact that not one of the symphonies composed since Beethoven has attained, let alone surpassed, the value of one of his, although many of them contain excellent music, and some display genius.

Papa Haydn's genial strains are pleasantly referred to with the affection of a true-hearted son:—

Enchanting masterpieces, sprung from his childlike and sunny mind, which, like all productions of true genius, will live for ever and outlast all so-called 'schools.'

'G' (Sir George Grove) might have written the following concerning Schubert:—

He was the lyric musician κατ' ἐξοχήν. Whatever he wrote, the most serene as well as the most tragic work, seems, as it were, imbued with that infinitely soft, melodic element, which always lets us perceive his figure as if through tears of gentle emotion. A blissful warmth emanates from his music. Only think of the great Symphony in C major! . . . I cannot conceive how it is that there are still people so ill-humoured as to think this symphony too long, nay, even to ask for cuts to be made in it. I am not of their opinion, and I own that whenever I hear this work well conducted, or when I conduct it myself, I always experience the most happy sensations, and am absolutely intoxicated with music. It produces on me the effect as of flight through a bright ether.

A comparison between Schubert and Beethoven is thus fancifully expressed:—

In the greatness and power of his sentiment, united to the tender, lyrical element, which runs through his works like a sacred thread, Schubert appears as the noble and, as it were, female complement of Beethoven; the two great symphonies, in which his important personality is perfectly represented, are the only ones which approach those of Beethoven.

And, lastly, the remarks on Schumann's orchestral technique, or its shortcomings, are not only interesting but to the point:—

In place of the great and broad adagio of the Beethoven symphony, we find in Schumann graceful, melodious, lyrical intermezzi, which would suit the pianoforte far better than the orchestra. Indeed, if a Schumann symphony be well played as a pianoforte duet it is far more effective than in the concert hall. . . . His instrumentation is so thick and clumsy that, were one to play strictly according to his direction, no expressive orchestral performance would be possible. You may believe my experience as a conductor that nothing is so troublesome as the performance of a Schumann symphony, because almost all nuances of sound and the accentuation of the leading parts must be obtained through the conductor's own initiative, so that the composer's intentions, which come out clearly enough on the pianoforte, may also be recognized in the orchestra, and the performance may not be devoid of light and shade.

One cannot be in Herr Weingartner's company without very soon becoming conscious of his remarkable personality. Strength of purpose and amiability of disposition are blended in that mercurial temperament. Energy and alertness are strong characteristics of this leader of men and poetic-souled musician. His clear-cut features when in repose might convey the impression of a stern nature beneath that pale face; but no one can laugh more heartily than he, and the smile that now and again brightens his countenance is one that is not easily forgotten. His hobbies—he took a keen delight in adding this word to his limited English vocabulary—are walking and mountain-climbing, 'and I love the classics, Beethoven and the rest,' he adds as, with a hearty hand-shake, he utters a cordial Auf Wiedersehen!

The portrait of Herr Weingartner, which forms one of our Special Supplements, has been taken specially for this biographical sketch by Messrs. Russell and Sons.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.

'We address'd ourselves [at Lincoln] to heare the Cathedrall prayers, and see the ancient monuments and rarities of that stately and magnificent Minster, which is the grace and beauty of the whole City, and fayrely built on a high hill, commanding a pleasant prospect of the adiacent country, neere 20 mile about, and within ken of the sea.

'Heere wee heard their solemne seruice. The Organs, with other Instruments, suited to most excellent voyces, were all answerable to such a famous Cathedrall.*

Beautiful for situation, Lincoln is one of the most beautiful of our English cathedrals. Like Durham, Ely, and St. Albans, it enjoys the advantage of being set on a hill, a position which not only gives added dignity to its trio of noble towers, but displays its stately proportions to the best advantage. The history of the sacred edifice may be briefly set forth. Remigius, the earliest Norman bishop of Lincoln, built the first cathedral on this site; it was ready for consecration in 1092. Some fifty years later a fire 'fouly disfigured' the building; but a still greater calamity occurred in April, 1185, when a violent earthquake, felt throughout the whole of England, 'split the Cathedral in two from top to bottom.' In 1192 the first stone was laid of the Choir and Eastern Transepts. During the first half of the thirteenth century the Great Transepts were completed, and the Nave was gradually extended westwards. The Angel Choir, an architectural gem of the first water (of which more anon), dates from 1280; the Cloisters some sixteen years later. Thus this fair fane, built of durable Lincoln stone, has stood, in its completed glory, for 600 years.

Let us go round about the towers thereof in order to obtain some impressions of so graceful a mother-church. One naturally starts from the west front, which, although in the nature of a screen, is very impressive. In the centre will be seen a grim-looking, solid block of masonry, 100 feet wide, of 'stern, almost savage plainness'—the remains of the first Norman cathedral. Some curious early sculptures stretched across the screen have as their subjects: The Expulsion from Paradise, Adam and Eve digging, Noah building the Ark, Daniel in the Lions' Den, &c. The western towers (each 206 feet high) were originally surmounted by timber spires, which remained in situ till 1807. A previous attempt to demolish these erections resulted in a riot on the part of the protesting citizens. This disturbance was not quelled until the bellman perambulated the city with the following message of peace:—

Whereas there has been a tumult for these two days past, about pulling down the two west spires of the church; this is to give notice to the people of this city, that there is a stop put to it, and that the spires shall be repaired with all speed.

'After which,' we are told, 'the mob with one accord gave a great shout and said, "God bless the King."' The central tower—in height 271 feet—also had a timber spire until it (the spire) was destroyed by a tempest in 1548. An earlier central tower fell in the year 1237, under remarkable circumstances. Bishop Grosstête had been calling the cathedral clergy to account for their laxity. One of the canons publicly, from the pulpit, protested against the action of the Bishop, and as this aggrieved divine uttered the words: 'If we were to be silent, the very stones would cry out for us,' the central tower came down with a crash, burying several people in the ruins. The tower however was soon rebuilt, and through the many changes of nearly 700 years it stands to this day in all its magnificence as one of the finest in the kingdom. It contains 'Great Tom,' a bell weighing 5 tons 8 cwt., in size the fourth in the kingdom; the hammer which strikes the hours weighs 224 lbs.

Walking by the south side of the Cathedral we notice the Galilee Porch, not, as at Ely and Durham, at the western end of the church, but placed at the south-west corner of the great transept. The lovely south-east porch is unique among English cathedrals. The Bishop's Palace is on the other side of the road. Adjacent thereto is the interesting group of habitations called the Vicars' Court, wherein resided the Rev. Luke Flintoft, a Priest Vicar from 1703–14, and the composer of the best of minor double chants. The flying buttresses of decoration of the stone-work, with pinnacles in profusion—all these contribute to produce a picture of exquisite charm.

If the interior, viewed from the Nave, seems at first to be a little disappointing, owing to the lowness of the vaulting and the uniform height of the entire building, there are some rich compensations. In the Great Transept the two large, round windows at once attract attention. They are known as the 'Dean's eye' and the 'Bishop's eye'—the former, on the north, facing the Deanery, the latter, on the south, facing the Bishop's Palace. The interpretation of these optically-designated windows is that as Lucifer comes from the region of the north, the Dean's eye must be on the watch for of interest are the double arcading, and the two columns in the eastern transepts, richly ornamented with crockets placed between the shafts. The Choir originally had an apsidal termination. The Angel Choir, built between 1255 and 1280 to receive the shrine of the saintly St. Hugh, forms the retro-choir. It belongs to the Transition period, and is the earliest example of geometrical work. The Triforium is of exquisite design, its spandrels being filled with choirs of angels, which give the name to this fascinating portion of the Cathedral. In strong contrast to the angels with their expanded wings is the grim-looking figure, squatting under a corbel, known as the 'Lincoln Imp,' a truly characteristic specimen the approach of so undesirable a visitor; while the Bishop's eye turns towards the sunny south, the region of the Holy Spirit, whose sweet influence alone can overcome the wiles of the wicked one. The 'Dean's eye' furnishes a magnificent example of early thirteenth-century stained glass.

The Choir is the glory of Lincoln Cathedral. It was built by that 'very excellent and wonderful man,' the master-builder Bishop, St. Hugh, and completed in 1200. It is the earliest known example of pure lancet, or Early English, free from any trace of Norman influence—indeed, the pointed arch was born at Lincoln. Special features of the facetious fancy of mediæval workmen. The great east window, considered to be the finest of its style in the kingdom, is of eight lights and of faultless proportions. In its refined elegance, decorative treatment, and delicacy of finish the Angel Choir can hardly be paralleled.

The Chapter House, dating from the early part of the thirteenth century, is in perfect harmony with the rest of this richly-decorated sanctuary. In shape a decagon, with two windows in each bay, it is one of the earliest of the series of polygonal chapter-houses in England. The Cloisters and Vestibule, on the north side of the Cathedral, date from 1296. They lead to the Cathedral Library, a fine long room designed by Wren in 1674, and naturally of a very different style of architecture from that of its Gothic surroundings. The library, which contains about 8,000 volumes, includes several old English Bibles and books of devotion, temp. Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Mary, in addition to a valuable manuscript of Old English Romances circa 1430-40, under circumstances that would now be regarded as outrageous. The Earl Spencer of that day (circa 1820) had for librarian the Rev. Dr. Thomas Frognall Dibdin, the elder brother of Charles Dibdin, the sea-song composer. Dr. Dibdin, who was a well-known bibliomaniac, had a roving commission from his nobleman master to secure all the rare books he could lay his hands upon, in order to enrich the Earl's library at Althorpe. He

In former times the library was rich in Caxtons, but, alas! they disappeared nearly a century ago, so managed to get the right side of the Dean and Chapter as to induce them 'to sell all the Caxtons and other early prints, and to replace them with more modern works of which they stood in need'! At the same time Dr. Dibdin appears to have gathered a 'Lincolne Nosegay' of 'certaine bokes,' doubtless for Lord Spencer. The following

Before considering the music and musicians of Lincoln, reference may be made to one or two of its most famous bishops. The building prelates—Remigius, and St. Hugh, the founder of the present Cathedral—have already been mentioned, ‘honourable mention’ for those sacred lyrics with which he so greatly enriched the worship-song of all sections of the Christian church, e.g., the oft-sung hymns beginning :—

‘Hallelujah ! hallelujah !
Hearts to heaven and voices raise’
‘Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost’
‘Hark ! the sound of holy voices’
‘O day of rest and gladness’
‘O Lord of heaven and earth and sea’
‘Father of all, from land and sea.’

In turning to matters strictly musical, mention must first be made of the Precentor, that important office now being held by the Ven. Archdeacon Bond, and so has Robert Grosstête (Bishop from 1235 to 1253), who, though of lowly birth, became one of the greatest scholars of his day and ‘a wise and practical reformer of clerical disorders.’ Bishop Fleming (1419–31) was the founder of Lincoln College, Oxford, a seat of learning closely knit to the Cathedral, and founded ‘to defend the mysteries of the sacred page against those ignorant laics who profaned with swinish snouts its most holy pearls.’ John Wesley was one of the most distinguished alumni of Lincoln College, Oxford, and, in our own day, Mr. John Morley. Coming to later times, the poet-bishop Christopher Wordsworth (1868–85) must have who, in 1902, succeeded Canon H. R. Bramley, of Christmas Carol fame. The choral body of the Cathedral consists of four Priest-Vicars, —a very ancient foundation—nine Lay-Vicars or singing men, two supernumeraries and sixteen choristers. In regard to the last-named, the number of actual choristers is only four. Instead of surplices they wear vestments which are really remnants of the mediæval choral copes, with the addition of sleeves, as shown in the accompanying photograph. The remaining juveniles of the choir are twelve Burghersh Chanters, so named from the revenues derived from the suppressed Burghersh Chantry, and a variable number of supernumeraries.

In olden times cathedral choristers were not neglected as they were in the greater part of the last century. At Lincoln, for example, we find that in 1477 William Horwode, Vicar, was appointed to instruct them in the science of singing, to wit: 'playnsonge, pryksonge, faburdon, diskant, and cowntor'—the last-named probably counterpoint—'as well as in playing on the organ, and especially those whom the master shall find apt to learn in the "Clayecordes."'*

At the present time the choristers—sixteen in number, are well cared for. They are boarded and receive an excellent education in the Lincoln Cathedral Choir School, which is under the direct management of the Dean and Chapter. The new organs for the Chapel of St. John the Baptist and in repairing the great organs in the Choir. Fourteen years later—in September, 1442—the Dean and Chapter unanimously agreed that organs of a better kind should be put up in the great Choir before the ensuing Christmas, and a 'bill' was drawn up between the Chapter and one Arnald Organer, of Norwich, by which the latter covenanted to carry out the work for the sum of five marks. The next reference is in the year 1635, when a pension of 40s. per annum was granted to Thomas Coats, of Stamford, 'for repairing and keeping in order and tune the organs in the Church.' In 1663 a Mr. Derby, at 'worke' on the organ, was 'abused' by Mr. Mudd, organist, as we shall presently see.

head-master, Mr. G. H. Cowburn, and his assistant are both University graduates, while the musical education of the boys is under the personal supervision of Dr. G. J. Bennett, organist of the Cathedral.

We must go back 600 years to find the first mention of an organ in the Cathedral records.* In the year 1311 a fee of twenty shillings was paid to Thomas de Ledenham, Vicar, for taking care of the organs, blowing and cleaning them! On April 24, 1428, the Chapter met and decided that nine pounds should be expended in purchasing

The chapter books of August 27, 1702, contain this entry:—

Pactum cum Gerardo Smith de organis reparandis et amovendis juxta articulos, ad id compositos, conclusum fuit.

It would be interesting to know to what part of the Cathedral the organ was removed. A print in Dugdale's Monasticon shows the instrument placed on the north side of the choir, in the last bay before the eastern transept, the choir organ-case and keyboards overhanging the stalls. Perhaps the screen position was adopted at this time (1702), but nothing definite can be discovered on this interesting point. In January, 1729, it was decreed 'that the organ be repaired by Mr. Anthony Parsons, organ-builder'; and, in the following month, Master John Rance, chorister, was reproved for throwing stones and bruising the organ-pipes taken out to be cleaned and repaired. In 1826 William Allen built a new organ (enclosed in the present case), which was enlarged by his son in 1851. This organ gave place to the present fine four-manual instrument, erected by Father Willis in 1898 at a cost of nearly £5,000, exclusive of the case; it was opened on St. Hugh's Day (November 17) in that year. A full account of the opening service, at which recitals were given by Sir Walter Parratt, will be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1898.

The first mention of an organist—i.e., one who held that office exclusively—is in the year 1439, when John Ingleton was appointed. Without enumerating the names of the chief musicians who held office during the next hundred years, we may proceed to make mention of Lincoln's greatest organist, William Byrd, 'a Father of Musicke,' as he is called in the 'Cheque Book of the Chappel Royal.' Byrd, 'bred up to music under Thomas Tallis,' held the organistship from 1563 to 1569. On the latter date he was sworn in a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, although his successor (at Lincoln) was not appointed until December, 1572. A Chapter Act of September 29, 1570, decreed that the organist was 'to set the tune before the commencement of the Te Deum, and the Cantic of Zachary at morning prayer, and at evening prayer before the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis; and to accompany the anthem.' The behaviour of some of the old-time organists of Lincoln does not seem to have been above reproach. For example: Mr. Thomas Kingston, in the year 1611, was arraigned before the Chapter 'for beating the boys and calling Mr. Dye, the Master of the Choristers, an ass'! The reprimand Mr. Kingston then received seems to have had little or no effect upon his conduct, as a year later, and in 1615, he was further admonished, the charge against him being:—

He ys verye often drunke and by means thereof he hath by unorderly playing on the organs putt the quire out of time and disordered them.

This tipsy 'unorderly' player was almost immediately replaced by John Wanlesse, the author of a Litany, at a salary of £20 per annum. The organist after the Restoration was a Mr. Mudd, who seems to have acquired the inebriate habits of Mr. Kingston—habits, it should be added, that in those days were by no means confined to the organist of the Cathedral staff. On March 14, 1663, the Precentor was under the painful necessity of writing to the Dean (Honywood) in these terms:—

Mr. Mudd hath been so debauched these Assizes, and hath so abused Mr. Derby [an organ builder], that he will hardly be persuaded to stay to finish his worke unlesse Mudd bee removed. And I have stuck in the same Mudd too; for he hath abused me above hope of Pardon. I wish you would be pleased to send us downe an able and more civill organist.

Two days afterwards the Precentor had to repeat his alcoholic indictment against the muddled Mr. Mudd. In a letter to the Dean he said:—

Yesterday Mr. Mudd shewed the effects of his last weeke's timpling, for when Mr. Joynes was in the midst of his sermon, Mudd fell a singing aloud, insomuch as Mr. Joynes was compelled to stopp; all the auditorie gazed and wondered what was the matter, and at length some neere him, stopping his mouth, silenced him, and then Mr. Joynes proceeded; but this continued for the space of neere halfe a quarter of an houre. So that now wee dare trust him no more with our organ, but request you (if you can) to helpe us to another; and with what speed maybe.

To Mr. Mudd succeeded a foreigner named Andrew Hecht, Hight, or Height. In the late Dr. Hopkins's MS. organ-specification book (now in the possession of the present writer) he is noted down as 'a Lewbecker, in Germanie.' Herr Hecht was doubtless imported by Dean Honywood, who probably made the organist's acquaintance during the Commonwealth and while sojourning in the Low Countries, where he collected his splendid library. Hecht composed two anthems (MS.), 'Out of the deep' and 'God is our hope,' which are preserved in the Cathedral library. He was buried in the Cathedral on March 31, 1693. His son, Thomas, was admitted organist in 1693 at a salary of £30 per annum, but he declined to undertake the duty; he soon after became organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, a post he held from 1695 to 1734.

George Holmes, organist from 1704 to 1721, has found a place in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' He composed the Burial Sentences (which are still sung at Lincoln); a Harpsichord Suite; one of the St. Cecilia's Day Odes; and a toccata for single or double organ is also attributed to him. In June, 1731, the organist, Charles Murgatroyd, was ordered to 'play a short voluntary before the Second Lesson'; and in 1771 Mr. Lloyd Raynor, organist, had to appear before the Dean and Chapter, when he was 'arraigned and reproved for playing one anthem while Mr. Binns was singing another'. The statement that Reginald Spofforth, the gleewriter, resigned the organistship in 1789 (as stated in the 'Life' of that composer) is evidently wrong, and there is no record of his ever having been appointed. Coming to later times we find that two organists between them held office for the long period of 101 years—George Skelton, who reigned fifty-six years (1794-1850), and John Matthew Wilson Young, compiler of the Lincoln Psalter, chief musician during forty-five years (1850-1895). It is a curious fact, by the way, that no organist of Lincoln Cathedral has died at his post for the past 148 years—i.e., since 1756—the vacancies having been otherwise caused.

The present organist is Dr. George John Bennett. He was born at Andover, May 5, 1863, and from 1872 to 1878 sang as a chorister in Winchester College Chapel. Having gained the Balfe Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, he studied at that Institution under G. A. Macfarren and others.

DR. GEORGE J. BENNETT,
ORGANIST OF LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.

(Photograph taken specially for this article by Harrison, Lincoln.)

He was then enabled, through the kindness of the late Mr. Henry Littleton (Novello & Co.) to continue his musical studies in Germany. During his three years' sojourn abroad he was first a pupil of Kiel and Heinrich Barth at the Berlin Hochschule der Musik, and afterwards for two years at Munich, his teachers being Rheinberger, for composition and organ, and Bussmeyer, for pianoforte.

He took his doctor's degree (at Cambridge) in 1893, and, after holding various organ appointments in London, he was chosen organist of Lincoln Cathedral in 1895 upon the resignation of Mr. J. M. W. Young. In 1882 he qualified for the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music in 1887, and in the following year to a professorship of harmony and composition at his alma mater. He has acted as an examiner for musical degrees at Cambridge (1897-8-9) and Durham (1899, 1900) Universities; he has also examined for the Royal College of Organists (of which he is a member of the Council), and is an examiner to the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. In his official capacity as Cathedral organist he ably conducted the Lincoln Musical Festivals of 1896, 1899 and 1902, and had much to do with the successful carrying through of the new organ scheme and the opening of the instrument in 1898. As conductor of the Lincoln Musical Society since its formation in 1896, Dr. Bennett has done good work beyond the walls of the Cathedral, to which the long list of choral and orchestral works performed during the eight years of the Society's existence bears full testimony. The Lincoln Orchestral Society, also conducted by him, is a flourishing organization of artistic import. Dr. Bennett's compositions, in which refined musicianship and melodic gifts are happily blended, include the following works:—

Serenade for orchestra and Jugendträume Overture (Crystal Palace, 1887); Festival Evening Service in A, with orchestral accompaniment (composed for the Dedication Service, St. Paul's Cathedral, 1890); Easter Hymn, for soli, chorus, and orchestra (Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, St. Paul's Cathedral, 1895); Cymbeline Overture (Philharmonic Society, 1895); Suite in D minor, for orchestra (Lincoln Festival, 1902); Festival Te Deum, and Mass in B flat, both for soli, chorus, and orchestra; church and organ music; pieces for pianoforte; songs; part-songs; Choirboy's Elements of Music (Novello's Primers), &c.

For kind help rendered in the preparation of this article, acknowledgment is due to the Rev. Canon A. R. Maddison, M.A., F.S.A., Priest-Vicar and Librarian of Lincoln Cathedral, and to Dr. George J. Bennett, organist and choirmaster.

DOTTED CROTCHET.

The forthcoming Music Loan Exhibition of the Worshipful Company of Musicians promises to be a very important event. It will be held, by kind permission, in the Hall of the Fishmongers' Company, London Bridge, in June and July, and will be opened on June 27 by the Prince of Wales. The main object of the Exhibition will be to show the progress of the art of music since the last Charter was granted to the Company three hundred years ago. An interesting feature will be a course of daily lectures, with musical illustrations, on various matters connected with the art, these discourses to be delivered by well qualified experts in their particular departments. A member of the Company has offered several money prizes for various compositions—songs, pianoforte, organ, pianoforte and violin, a part-song—particulars of which will be found in our advertising columns (p. 283). The loan section will be particularly rich in treasures lent by various public bodies and private individuals. Finally, the Exhibition is under the distinguished patronage of the King and Queen, and the Prince and Princess of Wales.

WAGNERIAN MUSIC IN ENGLAND.

A LETTER WRITTEN TO WAGNER BY EDWARD DANNREUTHER.

[Twenty-four years ago Wagner asked Mr. Edward Dannreuther, his London friend and host, to write a letter on 'Music in England' for insertion in the master's journal, Bayreuther Blätter. A compliance with this request resulted in the following communication,—'Ein wahres Cabinetstück,' as Wagner called it—which appeared in the February-March, 1881, issue; in German, of course. The letter throws a curious light on the aspect of musical doings in England circa 1879-81, and furnishes proof of the prophetic insight of the writer. These presents, apart from the subject-matter, justify the insertion of Mr. Dannreuther's interesting epistle in these columns.—ED. M.T.]

Friends abroad have repeatedly asked: 'What has been the result in England of all the stir in matters musical during the last ten years? What about the discussions in periodicals, the Wagner Society's doings, the concerts at St. James's Hall and the Albert Hall? What has England got from Bayreuth, or Bayreuth from England?' To which one must candidly answer: 'Very little as yet, one way or another, though there may be a good deal to come.'

In London we have had much waste of printed paper, many orchestral performances of variable excellence, superb at times, indifferent at others, and a few downright failures where vocalists were concerned; enormous expenditure, and, all things considered, the vast means employed and the energy brought to bear, curiously little advantage to the funds at Bayreuth—an effective addition to which was the immediate object of our exertions. This is the plain truth about the external aspect of things, of which the English members of the Bayreuther Patronatsverein are fully aware. But it may be well to point out that there are aspects other and more important than financial ones, under which 'Music in England' looks bright as on the morn of a new day, and whereat it appears more than probable that the spirit of Bayreuth is about to come in closer contact with English culture. The changes indeed which are taking place with regard to the relation of music (let us say Beethovenian music, for fear of being misunderstood) to the civilization of England, are much deeper and more extensive than is generally supposed. We are in confusion, it is true; but we are undergoing steady and very rapid amelioration. And it is evident, to those amongst us who watch and compare, that some of the widest and most far-reaching changes in the work of our younger musicians spring from impulses given by the Bayreuth master at some period or other of his career.

In Shakespeare's time, and earlier, Great Britain had its music; an indigenous and surpassingly lovely people's song, extinct now, or nearly so in England proper, but still breathing on the hills of Scotland and Wales, and in Ireland; and artistic music of a high order, both ecclesiastical and secular, derived from the Netherlands and from Italy in the first instance, but stamped with the genuine Elizabethan stamp, as much as the manners, the poetry and the architecture of that age. And that music is alive to this day; the anthems of Tallis and Orlando Gibbons are still to be heard in the cathedrals; the madrigals of Wilbye and part-songs of Morley are familiar to many a provincial choir. As the national character persists, so the spirit of English music has proved ineffaceable, ineradicable. It was the outcome of English feeling, of manners, and even of physical characteristics. Then, as now, the typical English gentleman appeared reticent, almost shy, firmly self-confident, brave, active, adventurous—free, in a word, loving fresh air and sunshine and the high aspects of nature. It lay dormant during the Puritan days and the frivolous period of the Restoration (Purcell, of course, excepted); under the Georges it arose again to meet Handel's master mind; and it has now come in contact with Bach, Beethoven, Wagner and Brahms.

Under the bewildering complications of English life, with the enormous wealth and the closely packed population possessing every degree of culture and non-culture, ambiguous elements of course exist in plenty and are inevitable. There is much vapid and sentimental stuff to be heard in churches and concert-rooms; and now and then one may even come across downright vulgarity at theatres and music-halls. Free trade in theatrical matters has encouraged the importation of a mass of deleterious rubbish from Paris and elsewhere, and speculation upon whatever of vulgar tendency there may be is perhaps more rife latterly than it has ever been before; yet the true and good lives on for all that, and the type remains high-hearted and intelligent as it always has been.

In some respects it might be feared that English civilization is absorbing music, good, bad, and indifferent, far too rapidly and indiscriminately. The craving for music has in fact increased so much that the lower and lower middle classes are eagerly grasping at supplies of very questionable excellence.* The steady growth of minor theatres and music-halls, a class of 'amusements' the staple of which is the 'musical farce' and the 'comic song'—both clumsy adaptations or imitations of French originals—is really an evil. But its balance and cure is vigorously at work. From Cornwall to the Hebrides, innumerable choral societies exist, and are on the increase in the metropolis as well. Continental musicians have no conception of the amount and really good quality of the work done in this quiet way. Take the smaller choral associations of Yorkshire, Lancashire, or Wales, for instance: they are seriously in earnest about their music, and their meetings are anything rather than a convenient bureau de mariage, as it has been whispered such things are apt to be. It is no exaggeration to state that there are in the United Kingdom fifty thousand men and women who could meet together and sing the choruses of the 'Messiah' without rehearsal. These singing societies among the lower middle classes generally seem to act as a counterpoise to much that is ugly and depressing in their daily occupation, and in the close mental atmosphere in which they live. They sing Handel mainly; they are beginning to sing Bach; and who knows but that the 'Passion' and the B minor Mass, and even Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis,' may ere long become household words with them, as the 'Messiah' is already?

Nothing can excel the spontaneous response a high-class English audience makes to true music. In the vast arena of the Albert Hall, at one of the afternoon concerts, six thousand persons heard a fragment of the love scene from the second act of 'Tristan.' Perhaps not above sixty of those present had ever heard a note of the work, or even knew of its existence. There was a rapture of silence, and when the last chord had died away, a burst of applause—overwhelming, irresistible. It was as at Bayreuth where a similar storm burst forth after the 'Ride of the Valkyries,' and one wondered how a typical German public, in a typical German concert room, would have yawned at 'Tristan and Isolde,' and whether, some day, the master might not get an answer from London to the queer question (Was ist Deutsch?) he asked when 'Lohengrin' roused Italian enthusiasm at Bologna, and he called to mind the forlorn fate of 'Tristan' on the German stage.

Here, then, with the gentlemen of England, where hearts beat high and heads are clear, true enthusiasm is at hand; here the spirit of German 'Music' comes in contact with the spirit of English culture. They are old friends and have often met before under many a guise, as when Goethe studied Shakespeare and read Scott and Byron; when Coleridge translated 'Wallenstein'; Shelley, 'Faust'; or Carlyle, 'Wilhelm Meister.'

Schopenhauer somewhere says that nature appears to have brought forth Goethe as a counterpoise to Kant, under whose sole weight German humanity would have sunk oppressed. By the same token it might be asserted that music has sprung forth to light up the world with beauty, when its aspect without such light has become well-nigh unbearable.

The Národní listy, a newspaper published in Prague, contained in a recent issue a lengthy reference to the article by Mr. W. W. Cobbett on 'Czech National Opera' which appeared in our issue of February last. We give the first paragraph literatim et verbatim for the edification of our readers:—

HUDBA.

+ V únorovém sešitě angl. hudební revue „The Musical Times“ uveřejnil pan W. W. Cobbett nadšený článek o české opeře. Podáv úvod o českém probuzení národním a vývoji české hudby, dochází k významu Smetanova díla a ke zprávě o cyklu mistrových děl v Praze v Národním divadle. Píše: „Kdo chce poznati mistra důkladně, musí zajet do Prahy, kde jeho opery se provozují umělci vesměs domácími—sbor, orchestr, sóli—všichni rodilí Češi, od prvního do posledního.

A MUSICIAN'S EPITAPH.

Ah! what avails, when wrapped in shroud and pall,
Who jigged, who fiddled, or who sang the best!
What are to me the crotchets, quavers all—
When I have found an everlasting rest?

In the biographical sketch of Dr. Edward MacDowell which appeared in our last issue, a footnote reference (on p. 222) was made to the first performance of Tschaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor. This event took place at Boston, Mass., in the Music Hall there, on October 25, 1875. Hans von Bülow was the pianist on that occasion, the concert being the fifth of a series given by him. Mr. B. J. Lang conducted the following programme:—

PART I.
Overture—"Jessonda"	Spohr.
ORCHESTRA.
Grand Concerto (Op. 23) in B flat (Piano and Orchestra)	Tschaikowski.
HANS VON BÜLOW.
PART II.
Sonata quasi Fantasia (Moonlight Sonata)	Beethoven.
HANS VON BÜLOW.
Overture—"Prometheus"	Beethoven.
ORCHESTRA.
Grand Fantasie (Op. 15) in C major	Schubert.
(Arranged for piano and orchestra by Liszt)
HANS VON BÜLOW.
Wedding March	Mendelssohn.
ORCHESTRA.

The programme contained the following information—hardly true in regard to the composer's not having heard his work, though he may have listened to a performance in private, without orchestral accompaniment:—

The above grand composition of Tschaikowski, the most eminent Russian maestro of the present day, completed last April and dedicated by its author to Hans von Bülow, has NEVER BEEN PERFORMED, the composer himself never having enjoyed an audition of his masterpiece. To Boston is reserved the honour of its initial representation and the opportunity to impress the first verdict on a work of surpassing musical interest.

Hans von Bülow sent Tschaikovsky a telegram announcing the brilliant success of the work, a piece of news which naturally gratified the composer. But just then Tschaikovsky happened to be very short of money, and it was not without some compunction that he spent all he had in answering the message. The Concerto was repeated at a matinée given on October 30. The orchestra during the engagement was small—e.g., only four first violins. The Concerto was well received, and one critic discovered that the first movement was not in 'the classical concerto spirit.' For the above information we are indebted to the kindness of Mr. H. J. Storer, of Boston, Mass.

Dr. Edward Elgar has been elected a Member of the Athenæum Club under Rule 2—"the election of men distinguished in literature, science and art, without the usual formalities"; and Sir Charles Stanford has been elected a Member of the Berlin Royal Academy of Arts. Thus English Music is honoured both at home and abroad.

The following is from the Globe:—

At the Clerkenwell County Court, a pianoforte tuner informed the judge that there are more tuners in lunatic asylums than members of any other trade. We hope this is not true, but we fear that in the suburbs the number of cracked pianos is increasing on quite a five-fingered scale.

To this we may add that the pianoforte tuner's familiarity with the instrument may cause his nerves to be overstrung. Anyone taking up the occupation should be well equipped with pianofortitude.

The second performance of Dr. Elgar's 'The Apostles,' in New York, on March 24, by the New York Oratorio Society, under the able direction of Mr. Frank Damrosch has called forth some very gratifying notices in the New York Press. Equally gratifying is it to hear of the splendid success of Miss Muriel Foster during this her first visit to the United States. We give a few extracts of American opinion concerning the Oratorio itself and the gifted vocalist who sings so beautifully the music assigned to Mary Magdalene.

The Oratorio Society brought its thirty-first season to a brilliant close at Carnegie Hall last night in the second performance it has given this winter of Edward Elgar's 'The Apostles,' which aroused such interest at its first production a month ago. There was wisdom in Frank Damrosch's decision to repeat the work, partly because of the excellent condition of the chorus, which its difficulties served to attest, and particularly because of the better understanding of the oratorio itself obtained by re-hearing.—Herald.

It was entirely justifiable that the Oratorio Society should devote the last concert of its season to a repetition of Dr. Edward Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles,' which it gave some weeks ago at a special benefit performance. The work itself is one that deserves speedy repetition and further study, on the part not only of the executants, but also of the listeners; for its elaborate scale, the novelty of its style, and the very extensive means of expression the composer employs make exacting demands upon both alike. There was evidently a considerable interest to hear the work again, and there was a large audience present.

'The Apostles' gave an effect of greater continuity and directness than it did upon its first hearing. This was partly, no doubt, owing to the improvement in the performance; but partly also to a greater familiarity with its style and the insight into its complexities gained through the repetition.

Whatever may be thought of 'The Apostles,' its originality and strength cannot be denied, nor the glowing sincerity with which it is written. Quite apart from the technical mastery and the command of modern resources with which it is achieved, it is work in spirit and in style such as no other living master could produce. Its method of treatment gives a new significance and new possibilities to oratorio.—Times.

The performance last night was excellent. It served to introduce to this public an English contralto, who was selected by Dr. Elgar as the 'original representative of Mary Magdalene. She is Muriel Foster, and she interested the audience greatly. Miss Foster is another of those uncommon contraltos to be found only in England. She is tall and handsome, and she has a voice of extraordinary quality and power. She sang the music of Mary Magdalene with a tremendous sweep of passion and with touches of infinite tenderness. . . . She suited the part to perfection.—Sun.

A great contralto voice, not flawless in quality by any means, but always of compelling power and expressiveness, literally lifted that second half of Part I., entitled 'By the Sea of Galilee,' to a new plane of oratorio performance. . . . The desolate woman's 'Woe is me,' was a moving prayer.—Evening Sun.

The wisdom of the ancients, even in music, the youngest of the arts, how wondrous wise it is! Take, for example, so eminent a father of English music as William Byrd. Towards the close of the sixteenth century he issued a book entitled :—

Psalmes, Sonets, & songs of fadnes and pietie, made into Muficke of fūe parts : whereof, some of them going abroad among diuers, in vntrue coppies, are heere truly corrected, and th' other being Songs very rare & newly compofed, are heere published, for the recreation of all fuch as delight in Mufick :

By William Byrd, one of the Gent. of the Queenes Maiesties honorable Chappell. 1588.

WILLIAM BYRD.

(From 'Anthems and Anthem Composers,' by Mr. Myles B. Foster; by the Author's kind permission.)

In language no less quaint than persuasive, Byrd therein gives an octave of reasons why everyone should learn to sing. Here they are, together with the wishful couplet which forms a rhyming coda :—

Reafons briefly fet downe by th' auctor, to perfwade every one to learne to fīng.

First, it is a knowledge eafely taught, and quickly learned, wher ther is a good Mafter, & an apt Scoler.

2. The exercife of fīng is delightful to Nature, and good to preferue the health of man.

3. It doth firengthen all parts of the brest, & doth open the pipes.

4. It is a finguler good remedie for a stutting & ftamaring in the fpeech.

5. It is the beft meanes to procure a perfect pronun- ciation, and to make a good Orator.

6. It is the onely way to know where Nature hath beftowed the benefit of a good voyce : which gift is fo rare, as ther is not one among a thoufand that hath it : & in many that excelent gift is loft, becaufe they want Art to exprefse Nature.

7. There is not any Muficke of Instruments whatfo- euer, comparable to that which is made of the voyces of men, when the voyces are good, & the fame wel forted and ordered.

8. The better the voyce is, the meeter it is to honour & ferue God there-with : and the voyce of man is chiefly to be employed to that end.

Omnis ſpiritus laudet Dominum.

Since fīng is fo good a thing

I wiſh all men would learne to fīng.

Mr. Robert Steele has done an excellent piece of bibliographical work in a valuable illustrated monograph entitled :—

THE EARLIEST ENGLISH MUSIC PRINTING, a description and bibliography of English printed music to the close of the sixteenth century, by ROBERT STEELE.

London : Printed for the Bibliographical Society at the Chiswick Press, December, 1903.

From the information so clearly set forth in this compilation, and its copious supply of facsimiles of pages from early printed books, much may be learnt. In Chapter I., 'Methods of early music printing,' the following classification is given :—

1. Blank spaces left for the music (both lines and notes), which is filled in by hand.
2. Printed lines, with notes in manuscript.
3. Stamped notes, lines in manuscript.
4. Printed notes, lines in manuscript.
5. Stamped notes on printed lines.
6. Notes and lines cut on a block as in illustration.
7. Printed notes and printed lines (a) two printings (b) one printing.

These methods in the evolution of music-printing are lucidly explained and examples of their adoption given. Chapter II., 'The printers of English music books,' mentions the impetus given to music-printing in this country by the accession of Elizabeth. Within a few weeks of her coming to the throne she issued a book of injunctions to the clergy, one of which relates to music in churches. This injunction of good Queen Bess reads :—

49. Item, because in diuers Collegiate, and also some parish Churches, heretofore there hath ben lyuynge appoynted for the maynteynauce of men and children, to vse singing in the church, by meanes whereof, the lawdable science of musicke hath ben had in estimation, and preserued in Knowledge: the Queenes Maiestie, neyther meanyng in any wyse the decaye of anye thing that myght conueniently tende to the vse and continuance of the sayde science, neyther to haue the same in any parte so abused in the church, that therby the common prayer shoulde be the worse vnderstand of the hearers, wylleth and commaundeth, that fyrst no alteration be made of suche assignementes of lyuynge, as heretofore hath been appoynted to the vse of syngyng or musicke in the Church, but that the same so remayne. And that there be a modest distinct songe, so vsed in all partes of the common prayers in the Church, that the same may be as playnly vnderstanded, as yf it were read without syngyng, and yet neuerthelesse, for the comfortyng of suche that deliight in musicke, it may be permitted that in the begynnyng, or in the ende of common prayers, eyther at morning or euenyng, there may be song an Hymne, or such like songe, to the prayse of almightie god, in the best sort of melodie and musicke that may be conueniently deuised, hauing respect that the sentense of the Hymne may be vnderstanded and perceyued.

As Mr. Steele says : 'The immediate result of these injunctions was to encourage the use of the metrical psalter,' with which the name of John Day is so worthily associated. The bibliographical section proper of the book contains about 200 entries of publications with music type, issued between the years 1495 and 1600, a period covering the sixteenth century. The following quaint title may serve as a specimen entry :—

The Actes of the Apostles, translated into Englyshe Metre, and dedicated to the Kynges moste excellent Maiestye, by Christofer Tye, Doctor in Musyke, and one of the Gentylnen of hys graces moste honourable Chappell, wyth notes to eche Chapter, to syngne and also to play vpon the Lute, very necessarye for studentes after theyr studie, to fyle theyr wyttes, and also for all Christians that cannot synge, to reade the good and Godlye stories of the lyues of Christ hys Appostles. 1553. Colophon: Imprinted at London by Wylliam Seres dwellynge at the signe of the Hedghogge.

A well-compiled 'synopsis of known and doubtful editions'; a list of 'Ghosts'; 'Some titles from authentic sources'; together with an Index, complete a publication of undoubted value, and one that reflects the greatest credit upon its compiler. The printing of the book leaves nothing to be desired, and Mr. Steele is to be congratulated upon having accomplished so satisfactorily and to such good purpose what must have been to him a labour of love.

Young British composers who have had to bewail their fate in not getting their works performed may now take courage. They have a munificent benefactor in Mr. S. Ernest Palmer, a gentleman who has given very substantial proof of his interest in the creative musical gifts of his fellow-countrymen by founding 'The Royal College of Music Patron's Fund.' The objects of the Fund are thus officially stated:—

1. The selection by expert musicians and the performance at concerts given for the purpose, either at the College or elsewhere, of orchestral and choral works of composers being British subjects.
2. The selection and performance of ensemble and solo music, whether vocal or instrumental, by such composers.
3. The assistance of musical performers, being British subjects, in procuring an appearance before the public.
4. The provision out of surplus income, if any, of travelling scholarships for pupils of the College (being British subjects) of exceptional ability.

Although the Fund is to be primarily applicable for the benefit of past or present students of the Royal College of Music, full power is given to extend its benefits to any other persons being British subjects. We understand that the amount of the Fund is £20,000, which will bring in about £600 per annum. An announcement of the first concert will be found on the front page of the present issue.

Still further encouragement is given to British-born composers in the valuable Pianoforte Quintet Prize Competition generously offered by Mrs. Ada Lewis, to which we may again call the attention of our readers. The prize is the substantial sum of fifty guineas, and the conditions of the award are set forth on page 288.

Sixty years have come and gone since Joseph Joachim, as a boy of thirteen, played—and worthily played—Beethoven's Violin Concerto at a London Philharmonic concert under Mendelssohn's inspiring conductorship. The presence of the great violinist in the 'smoky nest' which has so cordially welcomed him for more than half-a-century, furnishes the opportunity of celebrating in a befitting manner the Diamond Jubilee of his first appearance in England. On Monday evening, the 16th inst., at Queen's Hall, it is proposed to present Dr. Joachim with his portrait, painted by Mr. John S. Sargent, R.A., and an address. Mr. Balfour is expected to preside over this interesting function should his parliamentary duties permit. The presentation ceremony is to be followed by a concert, for which the Queen's Hall Orchestra has been engaged, and in which it is hoped that the hero of the evening will take part both as soloist and conductor. The Hon. Treasurer of the Joachim Diamond Jubilee Fund is Mr. Edgar Speyer, 7, Lothbury, E.C.

Church and Organ Music.

The final chorus is directed to be sung 'With spirit. The quaver figure, first introduced at bar 14, appears always in this form, the altered notes being indicated by asterisks—

They shall obtain joy

That glorious progression of chords—like a range of majestic mountains vying with each other in magnificence—at the end of the movement was originally written thus (organ part only):—

The absence of C natural in the sixth bar from the end will be noticed; but whether Wesley inadvertently omitted to insert that accidental in his manuscript, or whether he intentionally left it out, cannot now be determined. In the Leeds (the first printed) copy the pedal notes of this masterly passage are written in octaves.

The last movement—the inexpressibly beautiful setting of 'and sorrow and sighing shall flee away'—has been altered least of all: it seems to have been a direct inspiration, that needed no improving hand. The changes are purely technical: the lowest notes in bars 5 to 9, and 37 to 41, were originally assigned to the bass voice, not to a second tenor as now printed, and the G natural (bass) in bar 30 was written F double sharp. At bar 23 the minim B in the soprano part is dotted (like in the accompaniment as now printed), and it is followed by crotchets ^E/_B for first and second soprano, but this additional B does not appear in the accompaniment. The final chord has no low E in the bass vocal part; and in the autograph and Leeds copies Wesley re-introduced the organ accompaniment earlier,—at the second half of bar 45—possibly to assist the soprano soloist.

Before calling attention to the orchestrated version of 'The Wilderness,' a word or two may be said in reference to No. IV. in the list of authorities (see p. 171) upon which the foregoing remarks have been based—a proof copy of a freshly-engraved edition, bearing the post-mark 'Gloster, May 14, 71,' and addressed to a proof-reader.

This copy (folio), now in the possession of the present writer, contains in its margins some amusing comments by Wesley that may be quoted. He scratches through the word 'soli' at the beginning, and says: 'No soli, a piece in 4 parts cannot be solo; add, or verse for four voices.' At bars 26, 27, and 28 of remark.—S. S. W.' The last query, placed above bars 27-29 of the final quartet, reads: '1st and 2nd in unison [octaves]?'; which elicited this comment of the composer's: 'I don't know what this refers to.—S. W. Oh, it means treble and alto. All right.'

The orchestral score of 'The Wilderness' does not contain any flights of instrumentation such as would be indulged in by a present-day youth steeped in Wagnerian-Straussian modernities. Wesley is satisfied with strings, the usual wood-wind, four horns, trumpets, three trombones, and drums; there is no organ part, nor are there any indications where the instrument, upon which the composer was so masterful a performer, is to be used, if at all. In the opening movement the strings are mostly employed, with just a tender horn note here and there, and a few bars for the flutes and clarinets. The oboes are not introduced till the bass solo, wherein the wood-wind gets busy with the vigorous accompaniment which gives vivacity to this fine movement. As may be expected, pizzicato indications are not lacking in the bass strings, and the upper strings assume some independence. The first and second horns have many bars to count, while the third and fourth horns share in the silence of the remainder of their brass colleagues and the drums.

In the quartet section the wood-wind instruments rest until bar 13. A fine effect is made of a crescendo (strings and wood-wind) in bars 23-25, attaining to a ff at bar 25—the modulation into C. At the fourth beat of bar 74 the trombones enter ff ('wake up,' Sir George Grove would have said), in a thoroughly Beethovenish manner. No less 'unbuttoned' is the drum-roll (piano) on G sharp, which alone accompanies the vocal phrase 'And a highway shall be there'; to this succeeds another drum-roll (on B flat), which, with the full orchestra, accompanies 'the unclean shall not pass over it'—the drums, hitherto silent in the anthem, being tuned to G sharp and B flat respectively. Exceedingly impressive are the massive staccato chords played between the pauses of this noble choral recitative. The final bars of the quartet are delicately scored for flutes, clarinets, and horns (1 and 2).

In the last chorus the trombones and drums are very sparingly used until bar 49, when they begin to get exuberant on their way to the word 'joy' (bar 72), at which point the full power of the orchestra is turned on with thrilling effect. Here the first violins become quite animated in their quaverish energy, while the drum-roll of twelve bars (72-83) on B—indicated to be played 'ff, moderately loud'!—adds to the tumult of 'no uncertain sound.'

The last movement is accompanied almost entirely by the strings and a solo horn pianissimo (holding a B for sixteen bars), with a very sparse use, towards the end, of the flutes and clarinets. The oboes are silent throughout this ethereal ending, and so are the bassoons, except in the five concluding bars; in bars 32-33 the connecting notes ^{AG}_{FE} are given to the clarinets an octave higher than in the printed version, above a sustained B of the horn.

'The Wilderness' was first performed with orchestral accompaniment at the Birmingham Musical Festival, September 8, 1852. The soloists on that occasion were Madame Clara Novello, Miss M. Williams (afterwards Mrs. Lockey), Mr. Charles Lockey, and Herr Formes, while Wesley himself conducted his poetically-conceived anthem 'The Wilderness.' The beautiful music failed, however, to gain the favour of London musical critics. Their adverse verdict gave rise to a long and heated correspondence in the Musical World and elsewhere. Time, however, has reversed the judgment passed upon this work of real genius.

the bass solo, in answer to the proof-reader's query: 'Does the harmony agree where pencilled [at the half-bars]?' Wesley writes: 'Yes, certainly.' At the beginning of the quartet the proof-reader ventured to remark, 'No expression in the small-note part,' to which the composer retorts: 'I don't see any necessity for any mark of p or f, if you mean that. An accompanist does not play loud in such a case, nor even a band.' A pair of octaves between treble and bass (in bar 48 of the quartet) is thus diplomatically pointed out: 'Do you like the C and F in treble and bass?' The composer, without comment, thereupon altered the time-values of two notes in order to remove the offending 'octaves.' At the end of the quartet we find this remark: 'Soli ending in two voices,' doubtless referring to the two tenor parts; to which observation Wesley laconically replies: 'I don't understand this

A CURIOUS SPECIMEN OF MUSIC-PRINTING.

In the splendid music library belonging to Mr. James E. Matthew is a little tractate of eight pages, in size 6 x 4 inches, entitled:—

It is rather rare to find white notes printed on a black ground, and this, dated 1544, may be one of the earliest specimens. In England a later instance may be found in a review of Hummel's 'Grand Sonata for pianoforte and flute' (in A), which appeared in The Atlas of November 4, 1827, wherein two musical examples are given in white notes on a black ground.

Mr. Henry J. Wood gave an interesting address on choral music, at a social meeting of the Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs, on the 23rd ult., at Highbury. The singing of Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson, Mr. Harry Child, and the Canorus Vocal Quartet, and the violin playing of Mr. W. H. Reed, added to the attractions of a pleasant evening.

A well-known figure in the musical life of Cambridge has been removed by the death of Mr. GERARD FRANCIS COBB, an event, we regret to record, which took place at Cambridge on March 31. Born at Nettlestead, October 15, 1838, he was educated at Marlborough College and Trinity College, Cambridge, where (in 1861) he took a first class in the Classical and Moral Science Triposes. He became a Fellow of his college in 1863 and six years later Junior Bursar, a position he held for twenty-five years. As chairman (from 1877 to 1892) of the University Board of Musical Studies and President (from 1874 to 1883) of the University Musical Society, Mr. Cobb did much valuable work for music in Cambridge in a public capacity; but his influence was no less potent in the welcome he extended and the kindness and encouragement he showed to young music lovers who frequented his hospitable rooms in Trinity. Mr. Cobb was a prolific composer, his settings of twenty of Rudyard Kipling's 'Barrack Room Ballads' being specially successful. A keen cyclist and long-distance rider, Mr. Cobb was one of the originators and the first president of the National Cyclists' Union.

A HOLIDAY VISIT TO PARIS.

That music is not entirely at a standstill during the Easter holidays is evident from the fact that performances of Berlioz's 'La Damnation de Faust' were announced within a few days of one another by two of the principal Societies of Paris. I was present at that given by the Lamoureux Chorus and Orchestra under Chevillard's direction on the 7th ult., at the Trocadéro. The orchestra, who played with great brilliancy and certainty, secured the usual success in the 'Hungarian March' and the 'Dance of Sylphs.' The soloists from the Opéra were good, and the chorus (who remained seated throughout the performance), although small in number compared with our English societies and with voices of rather poor timbre (especially the sopranos), made up for this defect to some extent by the enthusiasm which they threw into their singing.

On the following Saturday I had the opportunity of seeing Daudet's play 'L'Arlésienne' at the Odéon Theatre, with Bizet's incidental music, the orchestra and chorus of 150 performers being under the dignified and masterly control of Colonne. This charming work—pronounced a failure at its first performance in 1872 and not revived until thirteen years later—has now gained a strong hold on the Parisian public; and, considering the popularity of the Orchestral Suites founded on the music, it seems likely that an English adaptation of the play would be successful. Two of the orchestral entr'actes had to be repeated, and the lovely Adagietto, referring to the earlier love of the elderly Balthazar and Renaude, made also a considerable effect. One listened in vain for the tuneful Carillon which forms the last movement of the first Orchestral Suite: it may be that Bizet did not include it in the stage version.

At the last Lamoureux Concert of the season, on the afternoon of Sunday, the 10th ult., Miss Fanny Davies made a successful appearance in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto before a large and enthusiastic audience, and was thrice recalled. An ambitious but somewhat incoherent Poème for Violin Solo and Orchestra, by Henri Lutz, played for the first time, had a mixed reception, but the band were very successful in Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, and even more so in the Prelude and closing scene from 'Tristan.'

At the Opéra Comique on the following day Massenet's rather dull one-act opera 'Le Portrait de Manon' was followed by an excellent rendering of Auber's amusing 'Le Domino Noir,' a work which, although produced nearly seventy years ago, is still full of charm and freshness.

With the performance of Gounod's 'Faust' on the 13th ult. at the Grand Opéra (the 1,293rd performance of it there!) I was greatly disappointed. The Marguerite neither in voice nor in other respects realized one's expectations, and the Faust of Rousselière, although better, was marred by his difficulty in producing his upper notes. The scenic arrangements and the ballet were very effective; but on the other hand the choruses behind the scenes were not clear. The performance of the orchestra left much to be desired, it being generally too loud and lacking in refinement and expression, especially in the first two acts. It was indeed surprising to see the conductor commence to beat time while some of the band were still audibly tuning their instruments, and to see other players slipping into their seats after the music had already begun. This occurred at the commencement of the opera, and again after some of the intervals. All these performances were attended by crowded audiences.

On the Sunday after Easter, I was present at High Mass at the fine Church of St. Sulpice, which has a reputation for its rendering of plain-song. The choir, comprising an unusually large number of surpliced men and boys, is placed at the east end of the church before the altar, with a conductor and a small organ for accompanying the singing. The huge five-manual organ by Cavallé-Col, placed far away and high up in the west gallery and only used at intervals in the service, is presided over by the eminent composer Charles M. Widor. His harmonies to the plain-song, and his improvisations, whilst full and interesting are distinguished by great taste and restraint. During the offertory he played the first movement from his 'Symphonie Romain' in B minor (Op. 73), and the Finale from the same work at the end of the service, in both movements of which the principal theme is founded on a plain-song melody.

Lastly, a visit to Père-Lachaise Cemetery—that vast and well-kept burying-ground on the outskirts of the city—afforded an opportunity of seeing the graves of Auber, Bizet, Boieldieu, Cherubini, Chopin, Rossini, and other masters, whose works keep their memory green for all time.

ENTHUSIASM IN EXCELSIS.

THE SHEFFIELD MAKE.

One has only to read the musical criticisms which appear day by day in the London newspapers to discover differences of opinion, oftentimes very conflicting, as to the merits, or demerits, of this or that performance, artist, and so on. But no discordant voice marred the chorus of praise bestowed upon the magnificent singing of the Sheffield Musical Union at the recent Kruse Festival, and to which we make detailed reference in another column. Moreover, this just tribute to the sons and daughters of song from Sheffield has been as genuine and generous as it was richly deserved. When to this can be added the mighty voice of public opinion—'the great B.P.'—in unison with a number of expert critics,—all of them dead in tune, so to speak, in their concerted eulogy—there cannot be the shadow of a doubt that Dr. Coward and his colleagues achieved an unqualified and a triumphant success.

It may be asked, 'How are such results obtained?' 'What is the secret of those Sheffield singers' success?' This duet form of question elicits a trio answer—voice, Coward, enthusiasm. The first of these is more or less common property in the West Riding of Yorkshire and in Lancashire—'good larynx,' as Herr Weingartner says. The second and third concomitants are intertwined, so correlated, in fact, as to be absolutely inseparable—Coward and enthusiasm. There is no need to recall what has more than once been said in this journal concerning Dr. Coward's chorus-training genius, his poetic temperament, or even his unfailing enthusiasm. Suffice it to say that he, with his strong magnetic personality, has the power of charging his full-voiced choir with that temperamental enthusiasm with which nature has so liberally endowed him. Let us take a peep behind the scenes at the preparation made for the visits of the Sheffield Musical Union to London, in order to give some idea of their enthusiasm. This we are enabled to do through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson, the treasurer and librarian respectively of the Society, in the hope that it may interest our readers. We may take for our purpose the second visit of the 300 Sheffield singers on the 20th ult., when Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of Sirens' and Beethoven's great Mass in D were performed. First, the rehearsals for these two works—both of them masterpieces—were thus set forth in the official 'Orders of the day' (or the week):—

Monday, April 11.	St. James's Buildings.	Sectional.
Tuesday „	12. Nether Schoolroom.	Full.
Wednesday „	13. Ditto (morning).	Sopranos only.
„ „	13. Ditto (evening).	Full.
Thursday „	14. Ditto.	Full.
(Conducted by Herr Weingartner.)
Saturday, April 16.	Nether Schoolroom.	Full.
Monday „	18. Nether Chapel.	Full.
Wednesday „	20. Queen's Hall, London.	Final.

Secondly, the railway journey to and from London, and the operations there: here is the time-table of that long day of twenty-four hours (April 20):—

A.M.

5.0 Members will be able to travel by the early ordinary cars to the Midland Station (Sheffield).

5.40 Train—kitchen, dining-car, and five corridor carriages—leaves Midland Station.

6.30 Breakfast served in train.

9.5 Arrive at St. Pancras. Proceed to Queen's Hall.

10.0 Full rehearsal with principals, band and chorus.

P.M.

7.45 Singers assemble at Queen's Hall.

8.15 Concert.

(April 21.)

A.M.

12.35 Return train leaves St. Pancras. Supper served en route.

4.20 Arrive at Sheffield.

The above instructions not only furnish proof of enthusiasm in excelsis on the part of those vociferous visitors from Sheffield, but bear full testimony to the administrative skill of the Society's executive. Through the friendly offices of Dr. McNaught, and by the kind permission of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the Royal Academy of Music was placed at the disposal of the ladies of the chorus as a temporary Club during their two visits to London.

Lastly, the brilliant achievements of the Sheffield choralists in the greatest city of the world more than justify the opinions expressed in these columns nearly five years ago and often repeated: That, judged from the highest standpoint, they are unsurpassed in their particular art-sphere, and that Dr. Henry Coward is more than ever the master chorus-master.

BIRD MUSIC.

An interesting paper on the above subject was read by Mr. J. S. Shedlock before the members of the Incorporated Society of Musicians (London Section) at 20, Hanover Square, on the 9th ult. With regard to the origin of music, Lucretius was quoted, who said that the idea of it was taken from the singing of birds. Reference was made to the attempts to express the notes of birds, notably those of Kircher in his 'Musurgia Universalis' (1650). The definite notes of the Cuckoo naturally attracted musicians, as may be seen in the very early canon 'Sumer is icumen in.' As an illustration of vocal cuckoo-music, the madrigal 'The Nightingale,' by Thomas Weelkes, from the composer's 'Ayers or Phantasticke Spirites,' published in 1598, was sung by Messrs. Walter Coward, Otto Dene, and George Stubbs. The lecturer alluded to many interesting pieces composed for the harpsichord. He mentioned Frescobaldi's 'Capriccio sopra il Cucho,' published at Venice in 1626 in the 'Primo Libro di Capricci,' and gave a few bars to show the character of the music. Then, as further specimens, were played (on the pianoforte) an interesting 'Capriccio Kuku' by Johann Caspar Kerl, a composition with which Handel, judging from his 'Nightingale and Cuckoo' organ concerto, was acquainted; Claude Daquin's rondo 'Le Coucou'; and the concluding symphony of a song from Purcell's 'Fairy Queen,' in which 'cuckoo' notes are prominent. Nightingale music was represented by Handel's 'Sweet bird that shun'st the noise of folly,' sung by Miss Maude Willby; Quail, by Schubert's song of that name; and Dove, by Handel's 'With plaintive notes,' from 'Samson,' sung by Miss Kate Cherry.

Mr. Shedlock next touched upon the cries of the Cock and Hen, and mentioned that William Gardiner, a stocking-maker, of Leicester, in his 'Music of Nature,' published in 1832, regarded the opening bars of the third movement of Beethoven's 'Eroica' symphony as 'obviously derived from the cackling of the hen'—a quotation which evidently amused the audience.

Of the cock-cry the lecturer gave two illustrations, both from Bach—the one a clever fugato movement with the 'cock-a-doodle-doo' as the principal theme, and with the 'cuckoo' notes as counter-theme; the other was from the 'St. Matthew' Passion. The moment when Christ addresses Peter, foretelling his denial before the third crowing of the cock, would seem a dangerous moment for a realistic effect; but 'Bach with consummate mastery just suggested the crowing, without interfering with the solemnity of the scene.'

After a brief account of birds in opera—not forgetting the sparrows in 'Rinaldo,' and the account given of them in The Spectator—Mr. Shedlock spoke of pet birds of great musicians, in which of course Wagner prominently figured. One anecdote was about young Hanslick, the well-known and still living musical critic, who called on Wagner in the early Dresden days for the purpose of interviewing him; the continual screeching of the composer's pet parrot interfered however with the conversation. 'How can you stand that noise?' asked the visitor. 'Oh,' replied Wagner, 'I am used to it; it does become too loud at times, but I am compensated by having a wife who doesn't play the piano.'

After the part-song 'The Wood Minstrels' (Mendelssohn) had been sung by the Misses K. Cherry and Annie McBride, and Messrs. O. Dene and George Stubbs, the lecturer, in conclusion, mentioned some well-known musicians who bore ornithological patronymics, e.g.: J. C. Nightingale, a former organist of the Foundling; Sir George Martin, Sir Walter Parratt, William Byrd, and the esteemed accompanist Mr. Henry R. Bird. He might have added Dr. Crow, late organist of Ripon Cathedral; Arthur Cock, organist of Exeter Cathedral, c. 1593; Francis Peacock, of Aberdeen; W. M. Rooke, the Irish composer, and others. But perhaps he feared his audience might twit him with having set before them too large an aviary.

Mr. Shedlock, having been so successful with birds, should now turn his attention to animals: he will find a good beginning in John Bull, Mus.D., Oxon.

A festival dinner in aid of the Royal Normal College and Academy for the Blind, Upper Norwood, was held at the Hotel Cecil on the 21st ult., when Lord Howard de Walden presided. The toast of the evening, 'Success to the College' was proposed by Sir William Collins, who said:—'No sorrow was more acute than that which came to one who had to contemplate the lot of those to whom no skill could restore vision. The Normal College catered for some of those suffering from blindness, and those who had had the opportunity of listening to the refined musical performances of students trained at Upper Norwood knew that a great and a good work was being done.' The Chairman announced subscriptions amounting to £1,790. During the evening students from the College ably performed a selection of music.

Reviews.

Keep those eyes. Duet for soprano and tenor. Words by Thomas Moore. Music by S. Coleridge-Taylor.
The Singer. Words by Edward Rose. Music by Eaton Fanning.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Satisfactory duets for soprano and tenor are a somewhat limited quantity, and it was a happy thought to adopt this form for a setting of Moore's daintily amorous poem. The voice parts are dramatically conceived, and the sotto voce remarks of the lady contribute an element of piquancy and hint a gentle denial that means consent. The pianoforte accompaniment has also a tale to tell, and adds to the significance of the song.

The text of 'The Singer' is a free adaptation of a poem by Beranger, and its pattern has been cleverly preserved by Mr. Edward Rose. The lines also contain the dignity of resignation, and the expression of faith in Omnipotent goodness lifts the song into a high plane. Dr. Fanning's music is instinct with sincerity, and contains several simple touches that accentuate the element of romance in the lines. The singer should be a contralto.

Suite Venitienne. For Orchestra. Composed by W. H. Reed. Full Score and Pianoforte Arrangement.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

Mr. Reed is to be sincerely congratulated upon his courage in writing an orchestral work so simple in structure, so unpretentious in scope, so barefacedly 'musical' as this Suite. He pours out his charming themes, harmonizes them simply, accompanies them lightly, and contents himself with being a musician pure and simple rather than a purveyor of tremendously 'deep' but desperately dull problem scores. A composer who writes as spontaneously as Mr. Reed will always have an audience glad to let the sound of his grateful music 'creep in their ears.'

His Suite was one of the great popular successes of the Autumn series of the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts. 'Popular night' audiences at these concerts are always glad to welcome a composition by a member of Mr. Henry J. Wood's famous orchestra. But the favour extended to this work was quite exceptional, and proved once more that tune, rhythm, clearness and directness never fail to rouse an audience to an expression of genuine delight.

A glance at the orchestral score suffices to show the practised hand. The writing for the stringed instruments is excellent throughout. Thus it follows that, as regards effective scoring, half the battle is won, for good scoring is not to be thought of without good string-writing. Mr. Reed has not been an orchestral player since his boyhood for nothing! In the disposal of his 'colour' generally he is ever guided by rules of the strictest economy consistent with euphony and effectiveness. There are some delightfully 'light' pages of scoring in the work which are nevertheless among the most effective, using the word in the best sense. When the composer wishes to suggest the noise and merry-making of a continental carnival he can on the other hand be as sonorous as any resounding Russian. As a specimen of bright, fanciful, pellucid orchestration, the work can be strongly recommended to students and all who place the right value upon the art of writing for the orchestra.

The opening movement, 'Approaching Venice,' starts with a dainty wood-wind theme above a light string accompaniment of reiterated quavers that might suggest the waves lapping the ribs of the steamer from which perhaps our composer first beheld 'the Queen of the Adriatic':—

The pretty tune suggests no particular depth of feeling. Being a cool, enlightened Englishman, it behoves Mr. Reed to assume an air of indifference, even in 'approaching Venice.' But the artist within him will come out, and something like impatience stirs in the persistent semiquaver triplets of a short marziale, poco meno mosso. In fact, he soon works himself into a fortissimo outburst of excitement. Away with assumed indifference! This is Venice—Ruskin's, Browning's, Wagner's Venice! The land of song invites to song. So here goes! Violas and violoncellos shall sing it—and now violins, violoncellos, wood-wind and horns shall repeat the strain, and violas twine garlands of busy semiquavers round it.

II. Viola & Cello. f cantabile.

The composer seems to fancy this mood, and gives himself up more and more to 'singing'; in fact, his song themes grow increasingly impassioned. Can this be love? Love at first sight? Those appassionato triplets above excited string tremolos in 2-4 time may mean much!

III. Fl. VI. & Horns.

All too soon, our young enthusiast checks his ardour. He duly returns to order and conventionality, i.e., his first subject, for all the world as if the Canale Grande were Tenterden Street and the Bridge of Sighs reminded him of Westminster Bridge, and of the sighs which as a student he heaved over certain music primers. The movement runs its appointed course smoothly and prettily, and with effective changes in the orchestration until, via an unexpectedly pensive Coda, we reach a quiet end.

Of the second movement, 'Serenade,' we need only quote the melody of the chief subject. Indeed, it is the only subject, a modification of it taking the place of a second subject proper—

IV. Allegretto moderato.

Here again the scoring is remarkably dainty (though moments of rich sonority are not lacking), and the accompaniment teems with pleasing devices suggestive of the twanging of mandolines and guitars. Of a truth there is not a dull note in these tuneful and utterly unaffected pages.

The third piece, 'Gondola Song,' occupies the place of the slow movement. It begins, after twelve introductory bars designed to create the requisite 'romantic' atmosphere, with this tender theme:—

V. Allegretto grazioso. con molto espress.

The pause before the final pp 'call' has a fascinating effect of which Mr. Reed makes excellent use. A gaily tripping second subject for the wood-wind appears in due course and continues for a considerable time. After the regulation repeat of No. 5 (not without plenty of variety in 'working,' climactery and orchestration) the aforesaid 'tripping' subject returns in the Coda and brings this sweet 'Song' to a placid and contented end.

The Finale, 'Carnival,' is by far the most important of the four movements, both in scope and contents. With ff harp triplet arpeggios flying athwart rapid tremolos in strings, triangle, and tambourine, with wood-wind and horns blaring out a crisp 'call to arms,' the fun begins. The short, sharp phrases are breathless with excitement. Faster and faster they fly; all the furies in the modern symphony orchestra are let loose in a short fff tutti leading to two explosive A minor semiquaver chords. Then a sudden pause. The revellers range themselves for a dance; flute and clarinet join in starting the captivating measure. A cachuca!

VI. Tempo di Valse.

This is worked up to another ff tutti in which Mr. Reed's knowledge of orchestral climax is well demonstrated. Gradually the dancers seem to tire, but only of dancing! A general love-making is a sweet substitute even for the delights of the cachuca. Here is Mr. Reed's love song—

VII. Andante non troppo.

This is also subjected to development and, with a charming second strain, to some very chaste orchestration. However, carnival flirtations are soon forgotten. The dance is the thing. So the revellers resume their steps, and soon are whirling once more in a maze of strepitous sound and giddy gyrations. Then without pause they are thrown out of the swinging 3-4 rhythm back into the maddening 2-4 Allegro vivo of the opening 'call to arms,' after which a strenuous Coda, founded on the said 'call' and worked up into a veritable riot of sound, brings the movement to an appropriately brilliant end. Altogether a charming and most effective work.

Little Lady of my Heart; April Love. Words by Ernest Dowson. Music by Cyril Scott.
[Metzler & Co.]

The first of the above songs is a simple ditty, innocent as childhood of studied effect, but possessing grace and charm. 'April Love' sounds a deeper note, and the philosophy is distinctly masculine. The music is simple and tasteful.

Henry J. Wood. By Rosa Newmarch.

[John Lane.]

This book is the first of a series entitled 'Living Masters of Music,' initiated and edited by Mrs. Newmarch, the author of the present volume. The remaining 'masters' in the scheme, as at present arranged, are Richard Strauss, Edward Elgar, Paderewski, Alfred Bruneau, and Dr. Joachim—all of them on the sunny side of fifty, except Dr. Joachim, of whom a full biography has already been published. In the introduction to her monograph on Mr. Wood, Mrs. Newmarch states that she writes in a manner 'frankly egotistic in tone': this is perfectly true. As one reads these eighty pages of unrestrained hero-worship one is constantly reminded of the injunction sent out by the editor of 'The Dictionary of National Biography' to his contributors—an injunction which the late Canon Ainger pithily expressed in the words: 'No flowers, by request.' But Mrs. Newmarch weaves garlands of adulation in praise of her friend, and, judged from this standpoint, no fault can be found with the way she has discharged a task that must have been most congenial to her. Of early-life biography there is very little, the first twenty-five years of Mr. Wood's career (1870 to 1895) occupying only six pages of the book. Therefore much the greater part of the volume is devoted to those conducting achievements which have made Mr. Wood famous. The list of works performed by him and the Queen's Hall Orchestra for the first time in London or England between the years 1895-1903 is not only useful for reference but bears testimony to the enterprise and industry of the clever conductor who forms the subject of these enthusiastically-written pages.

Organ Music. By various composers.

[Novello and Company, Limited.]

In three pieces, severally entitled 'Pastoral Melody,' 'Lament,' and 'Festal Commemoration,' Mr. John E. West gives further proof of his creative versatility. The first of this trio of pieces is an oboe theme, though not on the conventional drone bass, in B flat; the second mourns in the doleful key of D minor; while the third is an imposing Allegro maestoso in the key of F, with a relief section in D—three good pieces. Mr. William Faulkes has written some jubilant strains in his 'Scherzo Symphonique Concertante' (in C, triple rhythm) which have the merit of not being exacting from an interpretative point of view: the trio theme, in F, adds to the attractiveness of this useful 'out' voluntary. From the pen of the same composer we have a Prelude and Fughetta in F minor. The Prelude contains much semiquaverous energy and some double pedal notes, the latter involving wide stretches. The diatonic subject of the fuge and its subsequent treatment will doubtless prove acceptable to players of technical ability. Spring is here—and here is Mr. Alfred Hollins with a 'Spring Song.' To it is extended a hearty welcome. Why? Because it is so genial in its allegretto melodiousness. Its main and May-like theme (in A flat) and its second subject (in E flat) are Hollinsesque to a degree—just the sort of strains that remind us that 'the winter is past . . . the flowers appear on the earth, the time of the singing of birds is come.' It will not be long before this piece blossoms out into the full flower of popularity.

Dr. Basil Harwood has followed his well-known 'Dithyramb' with six additional pieces in various styles (Op. 15, Nos. 1 to 6). The first is a simple 'Communion' (in F) on the hymn-tune 'Irish.' To this succeeds an Interlude in D, a soft movement of oft-changing rhythm. 'Pæan'—No. 3 of the set—is not only the most extended, but shows a master hand. It is difficult to play, but nowadays that may be in its favour. Those who heard Sir Walter Parratt perform this brilliant piece at the opening of Messrs. Walker's organ at York Minster last year will remember its undoubted effectiveness. The organist of Christ Church, Oxford, seems to have a penchant for the organic treatment of hymn-tunes; and has he not an excellent model in the king of composers for the organ, J. S. Bach? A 'short postlude for Ascensiontide' on the 'Old 25th' Psalm-tune and an Andante tranquillo on the hymn-tune 'Bedford' are excellent specimens of such treatment of the people's song in the sanctuary. In both pieces the words of the hymns usually associated with the tunes are printed above the notes of the canto fermo. This is a good idea; but why was not the original triple form of 'Bedford' chosen, instead of the tinkered duple version by Gardiner, the Leicester stocking-maker? 'Requiem Æternam,' in which the plain-song melody is introduced, completes this set of organ pieces which give further proof of Dr. Basil Harwood's artistic earnestness, inventive faculty, and skilled musicianship.

Dr. Eaton Fanning's vigorous Scherzo in D minor (arranged for the organ by Dr. Pearce) is brilliant and effective without being difficult: the Trio, in the tonic major key, is a delightful tune, and the piece is one that is likely to speedily find its way into recital programmes. The latest instalment (Book 35) of the 'Village Organist' is on the familiar lines of this useful series. The original contributions are a 'Berceuse in A,' by Mr. John Pullett; an Andantino calmo, by M. Franco Leoni; a 'Minuet and Trio,' by Dr. S. J. Rowton; and a 'Thanksgiving,' by Mr. Myles B. Foster. Book 36 opens with twelve short interludes, in various keys, by Henry Smart. To these succeed three different sets of accompaniments—by Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. Varley Roberts, and Sir George Martin—to the Lord's Prayer and the Creeds. The practical utility of this compilation to church organists is obvious.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

DR. ELGAR'S 'THE APOSTLES.'

'When in doubt, play Elgar' might well become the watchword of Choral Societies, if events continue to march with the avalanche-like rapidity and accumulative force shown during the last twelvemonth. The echoes of the Covent Garden Elgar Festival had scarcely died away when, at Queen's Hall, many hundreds had to turn back disappointed who clamoured to hear 'The Dream of Gerontius' at the Kruse Festival. And now Dr. Elgar's great biblical oratorio 'The Apostles' has been received with enthusiastic acclamation by one of the largest audiences that ever flocked to the brooding nagian Albert Hall to hear a novelty. It might be suggested that 'curiosity' is mainly responsible for the eagerness displayed by the belated Londoners. But curiosity is quickly satisfied. It does not require four performances of 'Gerontius' nor two of 'The Apostles' to appease the superficial dame. There must be that in the oratorios which appeals to more powerful instincts. They must possess qualities which are capable of making a direct appeal to the imagination and the great heart of the people. The music must somehow sway their emotions. However mysterious and inexplicable the process, the effect must be strong and the impression lasting. That in the case of so strikingly original a work as 'The Apostles' present opinions may differ as to its place in the history of our Art is assuredly a most healthy sign.

The performance of 'The Apostles' by the Royal Choral Society at the Royal Albert Hall on the 21st ult., without doing perfect justice to the music, had many good points. The first part was sung with evident appreciation and even enthusiasm, while the pitfalls of Dr. Elgar's intricate rhythmical combinations were successfully avoided. The prologue went with superb swing and augured well for the remainder of the performance. That the singers did not prove absolutely successful must have caused them grievous disappointment, for they had evidently rehearsed strenuously and well under the Society's enthusiastic conductor, Sir Frederick Bridge. Their lapses from true pitch in the great Judas scene may be put down to the vastness of the building, which makes it difficult to distinguish subdued and sombre orchestral cues. Other minor blemishes seemed due to over-zeal rather than lack of understanding. Some of the great tutti produced a magnificent effect and stirred the vast audience deeply. The soloists were the same as at Covent Garden, viz., Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Messrs. John Coates, Kennerley Rumford, Andrew Black, and Ffrangcon-Davies, and they surpassed even their previous splendid efforts. Dr. Elgar conducted, and received a great ovation at the conclusion of a memorable evening.

PROFESSOR KRUSE'S MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The courage and tenacity of purpose exhibited by Professor Kruse in tempting fortune by organizing another series of concerts at Queen's Hall, after the inadequate encouragement he experienced last year, deserve the hearty recognition of all interested in the progress of the art in the Metropolis. A fine orchestra, consisting chiefly of Philharmonic players, led by Mr. W. Frye Parker; a great and inspiring conductor, Herr Felix Weingartner, of world-wide fame; the most highly-trained large chorus in the country, Dr. Coward's unique Sheffield Choir (the Sheffield Musical Union); soloists of the front rank; and a broad, eclectic programme—such were the main features of the scheme of Professor Kruse's Second Musical Festival, begun on the 9th and ended on the 20th ult. There were seven concerts in the series.

At the inaugural concert given on the afternoon of the 9th ult. 'The Dream of Gerontius' and Beethoven's 'Choral Symphony' constituted the programme. As neither of these works calls for criticism it is only necessary to remark upon the performance. It is no disparagement of the solo-singers, and other resources engaged, to say that the main interest of the overwhelming audience attracted to the concert was in the choir. Much was expected from the Sheffield choralists, and it must be recorded that they not only justified their great reputation but altogether surpassed their previous records. Their performance, especially in Dr. Elgar's work, was an extraordinary exemplification of the possibilities of choral technique. Whether in the matter of extreme delicacy,—which in the semi-choruses sometimes approached ultra-refinement—the startling, sardonic realism of the Demons' Chorus, or the imposing climaxes of the great chorus 'Praise to the Holiest in the height,' the execution was fascinatingly perfect and thrillingly expressive.

Herr Weingartner's treatment of the orchestral portions of the score displayed, as was expected, a sympathetic insight into its significance and revealed its manifold beauties. Some of the tempi adopted were quicker than usual—too quick we venture to think—and the pianos generally of the band were not quite in focus with those of the choir. Nevertheless, many impressive effects were realized. The introduction to the second part was exceptionally effective. An interesting feature of the performance was the first appearance of Mr. Gervase Elwes in the part of Gerontius. This gentleman during the short time he has been before the public has made great progress. His voice is perhaps limited in variety of timbre, but he contrives to infuse intense earnestness, artistic refinement, and considerable interpretative power into his readings. The part of Gerontius is one of the most difficult of modern creations. It is therefore a great tribute to the capacity of Mr. Elwes that he came through the ordeal so successfully. Mrs. Harriet Foster, a singer new to London, sang the part of The Angel. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies gave his now familiar rendering of the bass solos. At the close of the performance Dr. Elgar had a great reception and Dr. Coward was also enthusiastically received. The performance of the Ninth Symphony was an exceptionally fine one. Herr Weingartner is at his best in Beethoven. The slow movement was beautifully played, and other well-known effects were brilliantly brought out. It was remarkable that the Sheffield Choir attacked the trying chorus parts with the greatest freshness. Altogether the occasion was one to be remembered. The soloists in the Symphony were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Elwes, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, and Mr. Henry J. Wood was the organist.

'Papa' Haydn stood first on the programme of the second concert (on the 11th ult.) with his genial 'Oxford' Symphony, as daintily presented as it was warmly welcomed. Herr Weingartner made no pauses between the movements, to the advantage of the continuity of the work; but one would like just breathing-space, if only the votaries of applause would permit. Mr. Mark Hambourg gave a strenuous rendering of Tchaikovsky's oft-played Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor; and Liszt's symphonic poem 'Tasso,' and Brahms's Second Symphony, both finely performed, completed an enjoyable programme.

Four classic composers of the first half of the nineteenth century 'filled the bill,' on the 13th ult., the third concert of the series—Schumann, with his 'Manfred' Overture; Spohr, with his 'Gesangsscene' Violin Concerto (soloist, Professor Johann Kruse); Weber, with the 'Oberon' Overture, composed during his fatal sojourn in London in 1826; while Schubert was worthily represented by his noble Symphony in C, a work first introduced into England by Sir August Manns at the Crystal Palace forty-eight years ago, when, on account of its 'heavenly length,' it was played in two instalments, on succeeding Saturdays, April 5 and 12, 1856. The performance of the Schubert Symphony was a veritable triumph for Herr Weingartner and his orchestra, and delightful indeed the exhilarating interpretation proved to be.

Mendelssohn occupied a large portion of the programme on the 16th ult., the fourth of Professor Kruse's music-makings. The concert opened with the Overture and Scherzo from the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music. The first was perhaps a little stiffly given, but the Scherzo left little to be desired as an example of refined orchestral playing. Herr Weingartner himself seemed to be satisfied, even to the extent of asking his excellent players to stand in response to the well-deserved approval of the audience. Professor Kruse played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto with artistic restraint, the Andante being rendered with true poetic feeling. The remainder of the programme included Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' Overture and Mozart's Symphony in C, known as the 'Jupiter.' The perennial beauties of the last-named work—how refreshingly welcome it always is!—were well brought out under Herr Weingartner's sympathetic baton. Three songs with orchestral accompaniment, composed by the conductor and artistically sung by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, lent variety to the afternoon's music.

Ancient and Modern characterized the programme of the fifth concert (on the 18th ult.)—the ancients being represented by Bach, the moderns by Tchaikovsky, Hugo Wolf, and Stanford. In Bach's Suite in B minor, for flute and string orchestra, Mr. Fransella ably played the solo instrument, and Professor Kruse performed the old Cantor's Violin Concerto in A minor and Sir Charles Stanford's Suite for Violin and Orchestra (Op. 32). Hugo Wolf's Italian Capriccio and the inevitable 'Pathetic' Symphony were included in the scheme.

On the following evening (the 19th ult.) a Wagner concert was given, in which Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Frederic Austin distinguished themselves as vocalists. The orchestral pieces were the 'Meistersinger' Overture, the 'Lohengrin' Prelude, and the Prelude and Liebestod from 'Tristan.'

At the last concert (on the 20th ult.), as at the first, the Sheffield chorus triumphed. With the exception of Dr. Elgar's 'Variations on an Original Theme' (for orchestra), which opened the evening's music, the programme was entirely choral. It was a graceful act on the part of Professor Kruse and Herr Weingartner to ask Dr. Coward to conduct Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and as the renowned Sheffield chorus-master made his way to the rostrum he received a very hearty greeting from the audience. All the artistic finish and poetic feeling so inseparably associated with the Sheffield singers were evident in their soulful rendering of Sir Hubert's stately setting of Milton's noble words: for example, the manner in which the initial word 'Blest' was sung left no doubt upon one's mind as to the state of a certain 'pair of sirens.' Dr. Coward gave his own particular reading of the music, and his excellent choir faithfully responded to his inspiring leadership.

Beethoven's Mass in D—that wonderful creation of a mighty genius—then followed. The terribly high notes which therein abound—in the soprano part especially—were sung with dauntless courage by Dr. Coward's choir, and the manifold difficulties that beset the singer—soloist and chorist—were overcome with apparently the greatest ease. The soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederic Austin, successfully came through their trying ordeal, and Herr Weingartner gave further proof of his conducting skill. Mr. W. S. Jessop, a Sheffield organist, rendered good service at the organ. At the close of the performance Herr Weingartner, Professor Johann Kruse and Dr. Coward received a gratifying ovation from an appreciative audience. Professor Kruse has announced his intention of giving another Festival next year.

THE WESTMORLAND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Progress has marked the Westmorland competitions from the beginning, but after eighteen of these annual meetings it would seem rather difficult to maintain continued advance. This has however been done ever since the small beginnings of the Festival as a village competition, till it has become a county event, and the mother of many others throughout the land. What distinguishes these competitions, and others modelled on similar lines, from another and baser kind is that their educational aim has never been lost sight of. Even the concerts, though now of high artistic merit, are planned so as to form object lessons, in which as large a number of competitors as possible may take part. This year, by an even greater enterprise than had been shown before, Mr. Henry J. Wood and a selection of forty-eight members of the Queen's Hall Orchestra were engaged to take part, and it need hardly be added that the quality of the performances gained by the co-operation of so highly organized a body. Yet I do not think that the excellence of the performance was the only, or yet the chief advantage which accrued from this spirited policy. It was rather in the splendid drilling which Mr. Wood gave the chorus, not only at the full rehearsals, but at the sectional rehearsals which he had attended. His practical hints on the elements of breath management, voice production, and the like, were of the greatest value, and how widespread would be the influence he thus exerted may be imagined when one remembers the number of centres from which the chorus are recruited. In 'Elijah,' which was given on the opening day, Thursday, the 14th ult., the chorus was formed of choirs from nine different centres; while on the following day choirs from seven entirely different centres assisted in the concert—for I understand the two Kendal choirs that took part were separate organizations. One result of this system is a choir of rather unwieldy dimensions, but any drawback which may be involved is amply compensated for by enabling so many to take an active part in the preparation and performance of important works.

'Elijah' is the first full-blown oratorio attempted at Kendal, and its choice under these circumstances needs no defence, while on the second evening some choral music of great interest was given: Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; three of Brahms's Trios for female voices, accompanied by horns and harp; the same composer's Rhapsody for contralto solo and male-voice chorus; and Stanford's setting of Browning's Cavalier Songs for baritone soloist and male-voice choir. The spirit and precision Mr. Wood secured were remarkable, and showed the contagious nature of his enthusiasm, while the playing of his valiant band of forty-eight in Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and other orchestral pieces was not only technically excellent, but had a breadth and force which made it difficult to realize the small size of the force. The tone of the three double-basses, Messrs. Waud, Winterbottom, and Maney, in particular, was of a sonority that made me count them, not once nor twice, so difficult was it to realize that they had not some obliging confederates hidden away—in spite of the inherent difficulty of ambushing a double-bass! In 'Elijah,' Mr. Santley took his old part, and sang with much of his old fire, the other principals being Miss Georgina Dupuis, the Hon. Norah Dawnay, and Mr. Gervase Elwes, all of whom sang with marked refinement and a welcome disinclination to put into Mendelssohn's music more 'emotion' than it can well bear. The double quartet, which consisted entirely of local singers, was placed just behind the orchestra, a plan adopted at the Sheffield Festival by Mr. Wood, with a result which I for one unreservedly admire, since it not only differentiates the singers from the four principals, but gives them a sense of remoteness which is in exact keeping with the angelic utterances put into their mouths. Miss Dawnay appeared also on Friday evening, singing the solo in the Brahms Rhapsody with admirable taste, and Mr. Francis Harford, besides his part in the Cavalier Songs, added to the gaiety of the concert on the Children's Day (Saturday) by his spirited rendering of some quaint folk-songs. Miss Evangeline Florence sang at this concert with her accustomed finish and charm. Mr. Rathbone, the very useful chorus-master, conducted this last concert most ably.

Coming to the competitions,—which are after all the mainstay of the Festival, though of course of less general interest to the outside public—these presented no very novel features, but were on the lines which long experience has shown to be of the greatest educational value. The instrumental classes were, as might be expected, less satisfactory in their results than the vocal classes, but it is well to recollect that one ought not, in one sense, to gauge the utility of these competitions by the excellence of the results, for the greater their imperfection, the more is there a necessity for the object-lessons they afford. The speculative and highly interesting folk-song competition produced eight competitors. None of their 'finds' were of exceptional interest, but Mr. Frank Kidson, of Leeds, who acted as judge in this class, had no difficulty in awarding the prize to the Rev. T. Heelis, Vicar of Crosthwaite. In the chief choral class emulation had been intensified by the chance afforded of winning for the first time the 'Kendal Corporation Challenge Bowl,' which affords a welcome proof of the interest which the Festival has awakened. One is glad to see public bodies able to appreciate the great educational work that is being carried on by volunteers who however willing, deserve a little substantial help in their labours. In this and similar classes there was some excellent singing, and it is worthy of notice that it is found possible to produce such results without money prizes; the prizes given at Kendal being, with but one exception, of an honorary nature; certificates, or 'challenge' prizes, which are retained only for the year. The one exception is the Novello prize of five guineas which goes to the choir gaining the highest aggregate of marks, and which this year went to Kirkby Stephen, while the honour of being the first to retain the Challenge Bowl was awarded to Sedbergh.

The children's choirs showed in many instances the result of very imperfect teaching, but in sight-reading, which is of such obvious value as a means to thorough musicianship, they did well. Mr. Rathbone, who adjudicated upon all the sight-reading,—choral and solo, juvenile and adult—reported a distinct advance, and mentioned the suggestive fact that, whilst in the preliminary trial the tonic sol-faists were to the front, the adherents of staff notation more than overtook them when a more exacting test, to which words were added, was put before them. This only accords with one's impression that Tonic Sol-fa is a Royal Road, but does not take the student the entire length of his journey. Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of York Minster, was the principal judge, and added materially to the value of his judgments by the practical hints with which he accompanied them. In the by no means easy but rather thankless task of accompanist, Miss C. Bigge, an amateur well known in Yorkshire, rendered excellent service.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

London and Suburban Concerts.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A memorable feature of the concert given by the students of the Royal Academy on March 29 at Queen's Hall was a vocal scena by Mr. Hubert Bath, a setting of Mrs. Frances Hemans's 'Invocation.' The music is dramatically conceived and testifies to melodic invention, and its effectiveness is enhanced by the clever use of the organ and harp in the orchestral accompaniment. Mr. Daniel Richards sang meritoriously, and the work so greatly pleased the audience that the composer was twice called to the platform. Mr. E. Rowsby Woof is to be praised for his conscientious and neat violin-playing, and Miss Dorothy Purser deserves commendation for her rendering, from memory, of the 'Air des Adieux' from Tchaikovsky's 'Joan of Arc.' It was interesting to hear Berlioz's Fantasia on 'The Tempest,' which was effectively performed under the skilful direction of Sir Alexander Mackenzie. Other students who took part and deserve encouragement were Miss Margaret Bennett and Miss Dorothy Grinstead (pianists), Miss Gwladys Roberts and Mr. David Brazell (vocalists), and Mr. B. Walton, O'Donnell (violincellist).

JOACHIM QUARTET CONCERTS.

An immense and enthusiastic audience gave an unusually warm reception to Dr. Joachim and his excellent colleagues—Professors Carl Halir, Emmanuel Wirth, and Robert Hausmann—as they made their way to the specially erected platform in the centre of St. James's Hall on the 23rd ult. The afternoon's music—the first of a series of seven concerts—consisted of three string quartets by three masters of Chamber music, Haydn (in D minor, Op. 76, No. 2), Mozart (in D major, Köchel No. 575), and Beethoven (in B flat, Op. 130). All these were delightfully played—phrasing, dignity, emotional warmth and true artistic feeling being happily combined in each interpretation. It would be almost invidious to single out any movement for special mention, but the Cavatina of the Beethoven Quartet was magnificently rendered. The veteran leader and those associated with him again proved that in ensemble playing their performances are unsurpassed.

The Finsbury Choral Association concluded its twenty-fifth season on the 14th ult. with Mackenzie's 'Bride' and Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride.' The singing of the choir was excellent, displaying good attack and plenty of light and shade, and the orchestra was as usual admirable. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Frederic Austin, the baritone being specially good. It is sufficient to say that, as Mr. Allen Gill was conductor, an excellent performance was assured.

The annual concert of Mr. Edward G. Croager's Musical Society took place at the Hampstead Conservatoire on the 12th ult. Prominent features in the programme were Bridge's 'Flag of England' and Dr. G. J. Bennett's 'Easter Hymn,' an interesting and musicianly composition. The choir and orchestra took part in these works efficiently. Miss Edith Patching and Mr. Henry Holyoake were the solo vocalists, Mr. Charles Schilsky (solo violin), Mr. F. A. W. Docker (solo organ), and Mr. Charles Fry contributed recitations. Mr. W. T. Croager was an able accompanist, and Mr. Edward G. Croager conducted with watchfulness and energy.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on the 20th ult., the work creating a great impression. The choir and orchestra carried out their arduous duties with much efficiency, and the solo vocalists were Madame Gillespie, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. C. Stewart Gardner. The Overtures 'Rienzi' and 'Die Zauberflöte' were included in the programme. Dr. Charles E. Jolley ably conducted.

The Streatham Hill Choral Society (Mr. E. J. Quance's Choral Society) gave a successful concert at the Brixton Hall on the 19th ult., at which Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' and Mendelssohn's 'First Walpurgis Night' were performed. The choir, who sang excellently, were well supported by a professional orchestra, with Mr. W. Henry Dyson as leader. The solos were ably rendered by Miss Fanny Chetham, Mr. Samuel Masters, and Mr. Fred B. Ranalow. Mr. Frank Grant was at the organ. Mr. Edwin J. Quance conducted, and is to be congratulated on the good results obtained by his choir.

The Lewisham Choral Society performed Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha' complete on the 14th ult. at the Court Hill Schools. The choir sang with much credit, and there was a small but efficient orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. Arthur Walenn, the last-named artist being specially excellent. Mr. Frank Idle conducted with care and skill.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' and Mendelssohn's 'Loreley' on the 16th ult. at the Crystal Palace, under the painstaking conductorship of Mr. Arthur Fagge. The chorus-singing was of a high order of merit, the voices being fresh and resonant, and the two works received a fine rendering. The solo vocalists, Miss Ida Soldi, Mr. Henry Beaumont, and Mr. George Chais, sang earnestly and artistically. This enterprising suburban Society deserves every encouragement.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

New York, April 7, 1904.

There has been a lull in the musical activities of the American metropolis during the last fortnight, and it has been possible to take a retrospective glance over the local field and note some of the doings in other centres.

The regular season of opera at the Metropolitan Opera House being at an end, the company has been 'on the road,' in professional parlance. It is now in Boston, where it was received with apathy and where the venture—which has been unprofitable ever since the regular season came to an end—will culminate. There have been sporadic financial triumphs in one or two of the cities which have been visited, but on the whole the provincial tour has been costly to the management and will lead to a change of plans next season, when, as like as not, 'Parsifal' will be used to create an interest in the enterprise in other large cities as it was used this season in New York.

Our concert season has also practically reached its conclusion, the last significant affair of the kind having been the brace of Philharmonic meetings which Dr. Richard Strauss conducted on March 25 and 26. The Strauss Festival, after woful vicissitudes, came to an end on March 21 with the fourth orchestral concert, at which the composer's latest work, the 'Symphonia Domestica,' had its first public performance. The great technical difficulties in the work, coupled with the inferiority of the band provided for the Festival, made a postponement of the final concert necessary, and compelled the management to abandon its expressed purpose of giving two hearings to the new composition. To discuss the 'Symphonia Domestica' adequately would require more time, space, and patience than are at my disposal here. About 2,000 occupants of free seats made a fine demonstration of enthusiasm after the performance, but the critical expression in the newspapers on the following morning was one of disappointment, even on the part of the champions of the composer. The Festival was a failure, but Dr. Strauss's participation in the concerts of the Philharmonic Society—at which, in addition to some of his own works, he conducted a performance of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony—was received with enthusiastic plaudits. Dr. Strauss is now also 'on the road,' conducting his compositions in concerts of the Chicago and Cincinnati Orchestras (having already visited Pittsburgh and Philadelphia for that purpose) and playing accompaniments to his songs sung by his wife at private parties. He went to Boston with the Philadelphia Orchestra and gave two successful concerts.

From Chicago comes the gratifying news that all danger of the disruption of the Symphony Orchestra—founded thirteen years ago, and which has ever since been under the direction of Theodore Thomas—has passed away. At last accounts all but about 100,000 dollars of the fund of 750,000 dollars, which is to be applied to the erection of a hall and the placing of the Orchestra on a permanent basis, had been subscribed, and, with the consent of the subscribers, work was to be begun at once under the conviction that the impetus which the undertaking will receive from the building operations will soon bring in the required balance.

My next letter will probably contain a report on the biennial Festival to be held from May 11 to 14 in Cincinnati. In its programmes Mr. Thomas has made large space for Dr. Elgar. His 'Dream of Gerontius' will fill the greater part of the third concert, on May 13, and orchestral pieces and songs of his will be heard also at the second and fourth concerts. The first concert will be devoted wholly to Bach—the Orchestral Suite in B minor and the Mass in B minor; the last will be given up to Beethoven—the Solemn Mass in D and the Symphony in D minor. The solo singers at the Festival will be Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Madame Schumann-Heink, Mr. William Green, and Mr. Watkin Mills.

Dr. Elgar's 'Apostles' had a second performance at the hands of the New York Oratorio Society under the direction of Mr. Frank Damrosch on March 24. There was notable excellence at the first performance, but additional study on the part of the choir and orchestra and the participation of Miss Muriel Foster (who is winning golden opinions throughout the States and Canada) lifted the repetition to a still higher plane.

On March 29 the New Haven Oratorio Society and Professor Horatio Parker accomplished a noble task in the performance of Bach's 'Passion according to St. Matthew.' The Oratorio Society has been in existence only since last October, and had already given one concert devoted to 'The Messiah.' To sing the Bach work (which had to be learned ab initio) creditably was a large achievement under the circumstances and speaks volumes for the zeal of Professor Parker and his singers. There were, as can be surmised, experienced singers in the choir, though the 'Passion' was new to all of them. The Oratorio Society is the successor of the Gounod Society, which cared for the choral cult in New Haven under the customary discouraging conditions for many years. Professor Parker has now brought all the dignified musical activities of New Haven under the protecting regis of Yale University, which has given them magnificent housing in the new Woolsey Hall, a building containing one of the largest and finest organs in the country.

H. E. KREHBIEL.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, April 16.

The concert season of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' ended with a performance of Beethoven's 'Missa Solennis.' The solo parts were entrusted to distinguished opera-singers—a most suitable proceeding considering that Beethoven's treatment of the voices in this work is in the modern style rather than that of the concert-room. Ferdinand Löwe, who has been conductor of the Society for four years, is retiring, and therefore received a special ovation. As conductor of the orchestra of the Concert Society he occupies a more important post; that Society he himself founded, and, having won for it a high reputation, he intends to devote himself entirely to its interests. Among other works which he has introduced at these concerts is Hugo Wolf's symphonic poem 'Penthesilea,' a youthful work full of life, splendid colouring, and showing, as a matter of course, the strong influence of Wagner. The stage performance which he gave of Mendelssohn's juvenile work 'Die Heimkehr aus der Fremde' deserves mention; the pleasing, modest opera was received in a friendly and sympathetic manner. At the close of the season of subscription concerts Löwe and his orchestra went on a tour—first to Reichenberg, a large manufacturing town in German Bohemia, where a festival was held, then to Graz, Agram, Laibach, Trieste, and Venice, everywhere being received with enthusiasm. At Venice a memorial concert was given in the Vendramini Palace, in which Wagner drew his last breath twenty-one years ago.

The enterprise of the two societies 'Dreizehn Linden' and 'Camisius' deserves mention, because, as a rule, societies specially devoted to church music keep within a limited sphere. The former produced Rheinberger's 'Christophorus,' a noble and ably written work, though not displaying sufficient variety and temperament; the latter, Romberg's formerly so celebrated and still popular 'Lay of the Bell.' A praiseworthy performance was given by the pupils of the Conservatorium of Saint-Saëns's Oratorio 'Le Déluge,' under the direction of Von Perger. The work has not been heard here since the composer conducted it at the Court opera. Von Perger's own work 'Das stählerne Schloss,' recently performed at a Singakademie concert, has now been produced at the 'Jubiläum' Theatre, and, as it contains dramatic, epic and lyric elements, it creates a better effect on the stage than in the concert-room.

In commemoration of the death-day of Brahms, the Tonkünstlerverein gave a special musical evening. The F minor Quintet was performed by Ferdinand Löwe and the Fitzner Quartet. A small society has been formed for the preservation of the house in which Brahms lived, which remains as it was at the time of his death, and the management entrusted to several personal friends of the eminent composer.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

'Spring comes slowly up this way': Though slow its approach is sure, and as it comes nearer organized music becomes rarer—such is the fashion here. It is true organ recitals and band promenades will continue for a short time yet, and after them the curtain rings down till autumn.

The Philharmonic Society announces the performance next season of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' and the chorus have begun the study of their difficult part.

The Queen's College Musical Society closed its season of Chamber Concerts on the 19th ult., the artists being Mr. Montagu Nathan, Miss W. Burnett, Mr. Clyde Twelvetees, and Dr. Lawrence Walker.

An effort is in progress to have a Constabulary Band established here, and there seems no reason why Belfast should not have this advantage as well as Dublin.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Halford Society's concerts came to a close on March 29, when the Town Hall was fairly filled with an audience courageously prepared to listen to a Strauss programme. The works submitted were 'Also sprach Zarathustra' (first performance here), and 'Ein Heldenleben,' given for the third time by this Society. Both compositions were exceptionally well rendered, the orchestra being reinforced for the occasion. As an interlude the scene 'Wotan's Abschied und Feuerzauber,' from 'Die Walküre,' was included, with Mr. Andrew Black as vocalist. The concert was of notable excellence, and Mr. Halford conducted in a masterly manner.

On the 14th ult. the Festival Choral Society concluded its season with a performance of Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles.' The composer was present, and the Town Hall was crowded. The vocal principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Marie Brema, and Messrs. John Coates, J. Campbell McInnes, Francis Braun and Ffrangcon Davies. The honours of the performance rested with the chorus. The Prologue was most impressively delivered. Mr. Perkins gave efficient aid at the organ, and Dr. Sinclair conducted. There was a remarkable demonstration at the close, and Dr. Elgar had to appear on the platform and receive a further ovation.

On the 21st ult. the City Choral Society gave a first performance here of Liszt's oratorio, 'The Legend of St. Elizabeth,' with Madame Sobrino, Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. Campbell McInnes, and Mr. Francis Harford as principals. The principals did well, and the performance on the whole was good. Mr. Beard and his forces came in for well-merited applause at the close.

The Saturday Popular Concerts in the Town Hall have been of varied character, and do not call for notice apart from the concert given by the Choral and Orchestral Association on the 16th ult. The works performed were Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron' and Haydn's 'Spring' (from 'The Seasons'), the latter revived after a lapse of many years. The soloists were Miss Amy Kendal, Mr. Henry Plevy, and Mr. James Coleman. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted.

The Midland Musical Society's annual performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' took place in the Town Hall on the evening of Good Friday, and attracted the usual overflowing audience. The rendering—with Miss Amy Kendal, Miss Evelyn Ball, Miss E. Draper, and Messrs. W. J. Ottey, Cyril Garth, and Walter Morgan as principals—was much above the average. Mr. A. J. Cotton conducted. The same day Spohr's 'Calvary' was performed at Wretham Road Church, and Gaul's 'Passion Service' at St. Augustine's Church, Edgbaston.

The musical matinées at the rooms of the Royal Society of Artists were resumed on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack, and the Students' Choral Concert of the Midland Institute School of Music took place the same evening. The programme of the latter event comprised Bach's great Magnificat in D, and Beethoven's Choral Fantasia, with Miss Olive Rider as the solo pianist. The vocal solos were entrusted to students, and the whole performance was highly creditable. Mr. Granville Bantock conducted. The Turner Opera Company commenced a three-weeks' season at the Grand Theatre on Easter Monday. In addition to a round of familiar works, the repertory included Stephen R. Philpot's two-act opera 'La Gitana,' produced on the 13th ult., and Dibdin's 'The Waterman,' with Mr. Turner as Tom Tug, was revived after a lapse of some years.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the second concert for the season of the Bristol North Choral Society, on March 26, there was a large attendance in the Victoria Rooms. Under the direction of Mr. James Bending excellent interpretations were given of Sir Hubert Parry's 'A Song of Darkness and Light' and Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle.' The soloists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. George A'Beckett, and Mr. Percy Holt. Choir and band numbered about 300, the leader of the orchestra being Mr. F. S. Gardner.

The Choral Society of the Young Men's Christian Association on March 28 gave its annual concert in the spacious Hall, St. James's Square. Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' was given, with the Misses Eveline and Katharine Gerrish and Miss Margaret Sambrook soloists, and Mr. Charles Fry reciter. The orchestra was led by Mr. Harold Bernard, and Mr. W. A. Barter conducted. A creditable performance of the work afforded much gratification to the large audience assembled.

On the 5th ult. the Midsomer Norton and District Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Walter J. Kidner, of Bristol, performed 'Elijah' in the extensive Drill Hall before a numerous audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Perry (Bristol), Miss Bessie Grant (Frome), Mr. James Dempster (Eton College Choir), and Mr. R. T. A. Hughes (Bruton). A small but efficient band was led by Mr. Harold Bernard, choir and instrumentalists numbering 100. The oratorio received a creditable interpretation, and most of the choruses went smoothly.

The Clevedon Philharmonic Society at its Spring Concert on the 6th ult. gave a performance, in the Public Hall, of 'The Wedding Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha' from Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' The soloists were Mrs. Charles Slade (Bristol), Mr. F. E. Shellabear (tenor from the Lord Mayor's Chapel, Bristol), and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge (bass, Wells Cathedral). Mr. F. S. Gardner was leader of the band, and Mr. Edward Cook (Bristol) directed a performance which possessed much merit.

The Brislington Choral Society on the 13th ult. gave a performance of Barnby's sacred idyll 'Rebekah' in the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, at Knowle. Mr. Allan Acton was the conductor, and Mr. W. Tapp held the principal first violin. The large audience present appeared much impressed with the work, which was carefully presented.

The Bristol and Clifton Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. E. Pavey, gave a concert on the 16th ult. at the Victoria Rooms. Among the compositions rendered were Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' Overture, the last two movements of his 'Scotch' Symphony, Grieg's 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' and a selection from Gounod's 'La Reine de Saba.' These were well rendered by an orchestra of ninety performers, led by Mr. Ernest Lane. Mr. Edward Cook's choir contributed some part-songs, and there were vocal solos by Miss Edith Evans and Mr. Montague Worlock.

MUSIC IN DEVON AND CORNWALL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

PLYMOUTH.

A review of the second half of the musical season in Plymouth must begin with a notice of the performance of Gounod's 'Redemption,' on February 27, by the Guildhall Choir, conducted by Mr. H. Moreton, the borough organist. The Choir sang with brilliant yet sympathetic quality of tone; and the soloists were Miss Alice Simons, Mr. Gwilym Richards, and Mr. Graham Smart. The last concert of the season was given on the 16th ult., when the first two sections of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha' received a rendering which, though poetical and good in execution, hardly equalled the previous performance. Miss Winifred Wynne and Mr. Charles Knowles were the principals. The only other choral concert of note has been a performance of Handel's 'Samson' at a Festival of Wesleyan Church Choirs, which did honour both to the chorus and to the conductor, Mr. David Parkes. Mr. Charles Saunders sang the tenor solos with dramatic fervour, and Madame Aston (soprano) made a good impression on her first visit to Plymouth.

Turning to instrumental music, notice must be taken of the efforts of three talented sisters, the Misses Smith, to arouse a taste for chamber music by giving a series of three subscription concerts (January 14, February 11, and March 10), at each of which a work new to the district has been introduced. The interpretation of these—Tschaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, the G minor Pianoforte Quartet of Brahms, and the D minor Trio of Arensky—showed the executants to be possessed of genuine artistic refinement of feeling, and the appreciative audiences which attended the concerts proved that the musical public are ready to take interest in such a commendable effort.

Orchestral music has received prominence at Mr. Frank Winterbottom's Symphony Concerts at Stonehouse, February 16, March 18, April 19. At the third concert an Introduction and Caprice, described respectively as 'Edipus in Colonos' and 'Une Nuit de Sicile,' by a Russian lady composer, the Baroness Ella Overbeck, were given, and the compositions gave proof of strong imaginative power.

EXETER.

The Western Counties Musical Association is doing important and commendable work. Its aim is to amalgamate the numerous small country choral societies and concentrate results in one combined performance, thus providing an incentive for practice and an opportunity for gauging the progress made. On April 7 these combined forces held a Festival at Exeter, conducted by Dr. D. J. Wood, the chorus representing choirs from Exeter, Tiverton, Torquay, Broadclyst, Okehampton, Exmouth, Northtawton, Mid-Devon and Winkleigh. In spite of the difficulty of obtaining combined rehearsal, the results proved that choral music is conscientiously studied in the country districts. The works given were 'St. Paul,' 'The Death of Minnehaha,' and 'Phauidrig Crohoore,' the choir being at their best in Coleridge-Taylor's Cantata.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Choral music in North Devon is in an advanced stage of cultivation. Space will not allow me to mention all that has been done in this district, but reference must be made to performances of 'St. Paul' at Northam (March 2) and Ilfracombe (March 15); of the 'Hymn of Praise' at South Molton on April 3; of 'Joan of Arc' (Gaul) at Lynton on April 10; and of a good miscellaneous programme given by the Torrington Choral Society on April 27. The Ilfracombe concert was perhaps the most ambitious, and credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Theodore France, for the well-executed rendering—devotional and frequently dramatic—which he gave of 'St. Paul,' the principals (Miss Linford Brown, Miss Gladys Christoe, Mr. Sidney Harper and Mr. S. J. Bishop) being thoroughly in sympathy. An excellent orchestra was led by Mr. Bernard Hahn.

The Torquay Musical Association (orchestral and choral) is not large in numbers, but deserves special credit for the high-class character of the works chosen for presentation and for the good quality of performance within the limitations of circumstances. Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' has occupied the members and conductor (Mr. T. H. Webb) during the latter half of the session, and very impressive was the rendering given thereof, on March 22, with Madame Emily Squire, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. Arthur Woodbridge and Mr. Gregory Hast as principals.

Newton Abbot Choral Society gave Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' on January 21, Mr. W. J. Bown conducting.

CORNISH CHORAL SOCIETIES.

Brief mention only can be made of the many societies in this far-west county, which are however actively engaged in the cultivation of choral music.

'The Creation' was given at Launceston on January 28, the Society (conducted by Mr. C. S. Parsonson) concluding the season with Walthew's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' and a miscellaneous programme. Under the baton of Mr. A. H. Baker, 'Elijah' was given at Bodmin on February 11; and on the same date the fifth concert of the Choral Society of Tywardreath and district consisted of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' conducted by Mr. L. H. Elford.

The Society at Saltash, directed by Dr. George Meadows, is vigorous and in good condition, and on February 10 gave a praiseworthy performance of Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner.' On the following day Looe Society, which is well qualified to a good position among the country Societies, gave two concerts under Mr. Harold Lake, consisting of the 'Messiah' and miscellaneous pieces.

The little Society at Torpoint must not be overlooked, for it is making conspicuous progress, and the rendering given of Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' on April 6 was most creditable. On April 13 the Liskeard Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. C. Faull, gave a concert recital of 'Maritana'; and the combined choruses of Truro and Falmouth Philharmonic Societies, directed by Mr. Herbert Sanders, gave a highly interesting performance of 'Elijah' on April 12, the principals being Miss Edith Blight, Miss Laura Smith, Mr. Albert Collings and Mr. Dan Price.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its fifth and last concert for this season on March 29. The attendance was very large, no doubt to the fact of the concert being held in the evening instead of the afternoon, as well as to the attractiveness of the programme, which included the 'Prelude and Apprentices' Dance,' Act iii. 'Meistersinger'; 'Epithalamium,' 'Lohengrin'; 'Siegfried Idyll'; 'Funeral March,' 'Götterdämmerung'; and 'Walkürenritt,' all by Wagner, in addition to Beethoven's 'Leonore' Overture No. 3, Mozart's Symphony in D, and Tchaikovsky's 'Rococo' Variations. Signor Esposito conducted the concert with his usual marked ability. The violoncello solo in the Tchaikovsky piece was played with much artistic feeling by Mr. Clyde Twelvvetrees, who received quite an ovation at its conclusion.

The Orpheus Choral Society gave its last concert for the season on March 22, and under the skilful conductorship of Dr. J. C. Culwick gave very fine renderings of the various items, which included 'Ye singers all' (Waelrent), 'Hush'd in death' (Hiles), and 'A Love Symphony' (Percy Pitt), the last-named being sung with exceptionally beautiful feeling and tone. Miss Queenie Eaton and Mr. F. Moore Mease were the vocalists; and M. Henri Verbruggen, the violinist of the evening, played two movements from a sonata by Dr. Culwick.

Miss Mabel Love (violinist) and Miss Annie Lord (pianist) gave a recital recently in the Leinster Lecture Hall; they were assisted by Madame Shellard-Jones, vocalist.

During Holy Week performances were given in St. Patrick's Cathedral of Spohr's 'Calvary' and Gounod's 'Redemption,' and many of the parish churches had performances of Maunder's 'Penitence, Pardon, and Peace,' and Stainer's 'Crucifixion.'

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second concert of the Choral Union, on March 21, was devoted to 'Israel in Egypt.' The Society is strong in numbers, and is thus enabled to give the necessary breadth and power to the great chain of choruses which characterizes this work. Mr. Collinson conducted an excellent performance, and a good local band—partly professional, partly amateur—rendered loyal aid. The soloists, Misses Agnes Nicholls, Edna Thornton, Sara Maconochie, and Mr. Charles Saunders were all successful.

Another good choral performance was that of Elgar's 'King Olaf,' on March 30, by Mr. Kirkhope's choir. The choralists had the assistance of some first-rate soloists—

Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Burnett—and an admirable band, led by M. Henri Verbruggen. All concerned worked heartily in the interests of a very competent and satisfying reading of Dr. Elgar's beautiful work. Among minor choral concerts, perhaps the most important was that of the choir of the North Morningside United Free Church on March 31, under the conductorship of Mr. A. Scott Jupp. In Stainer's 'St. Mary Magdalene' and a miscellaneous programme the choir showed the results of much careful training; and both pleasure and variety were afforded by the singing of the soloists, Misses Dalziel and Daisy Robertson and Messrs. Stronach and Young.

A very interesting and well-attended recital was that of Miss Marion Richardson, an excellently-trained and artistic local soprano. The vocal portion of the programme numbered no fewer than twenty-one items of various nationalities, covering a wide field of expression and novelty. Very important assistance was rendered by Miss Mabel Barrons, who played pianoforte solos by Scarlatti, Brahms, and Liszt with technical skill and artistic insight. The singer was much indebted to Mr. Nicol Affleck for his admirable accompaniments.

The programme of the last Amateur Orchestral Society's Concert was one of its most ambitious efforts, and included the 'New World' Symphony of Dvorák. Ambition was justified by success, and the Society increased its fame. The lady vocalist, Miss Gwladys Watson, sang charmingly.

Another hard-working orchestral trainer is Mr. George W. Lingard, and of the various organizations of which he is conductor one of the most flourishing is the St. Andrew Amateur Orchestral Society. The concert on the 7th ult. was quite a success, and the 'Rosamunde' Overture, Haydn's Twelfth Symphony, and the Andante from Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony received renderings which were surprisingly good for amateur instrumentalists. Miss Clarice Loughton was the solo pianist.

The Edinburgh Society of Musicians entertained at dinner, on the 9th ult., Mr. Franklin Laubach, a former President, on the occasion of his leaving for Canada, where he intends in future to reside. The President referred in warm terms to Mr. Laubach's successful professional career and excellent personal qualities, and presented him on behalf of the members with a cheque for forty guineas. Mr. Laubach feelingly responded. A feature of the musical programme was the performance by many leading musicians of Mr. Laubach's well-known Toy Symphony on Scottish airs—an extremely clever and humorous composition.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Musical activity increases in Stroud, where the local choral and orchestral Societies combined to give an excellent performance, on the 14th ult., of the Rev. H. E. Hodson's 'Golden Legend.' The revival of this interesting work, which was published by Messrs. Novello anterior to the production of Sullivan's cantata founded on the same subject, has recently been referred to in THE MUSICAL TIMES, and other Societies may have their attention directed to this effective composition. Under the direction of Mr. Tidnam the music was done full justice to, and the composer who was present expressed himself grateful for the resuscitation of his work. The solo parts were sung by Mrs. Somers-Cox, Miss Amy Maynard, Miss Minnie Embrey, Miss Lill-Smith, Mr. Seth Hughes, Mr. D. Rice, Mr. M. James, and Mr. Paul Edmonds. The concert was well attended, and the Societies are doing good work in the district.

Mr. A. H. Gibbons is doing similar service to music in Cirencester, where Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the Choral Society, on the 13th ult., before a large audience, in the Corn Hall. Mr. E. G. Woodward led the band, and Mr. Barnes rendered useful service at the organ. The soloists were well chosen: Miss Helen Jaxon, Miss Wood, Mr. G. W. Brierley, and Mr. Francis Harford, and the choruses were sung with taste and spirit.

The Gloucestershire Orchestral Society has made rapid strides both in numbers and efficiency under Mr. A. Herbert Brewer's conductorship during the short period of its existence. The band, which is drawn very largely from amateurs in the county, numbered on the occasion of the annual concert, given in the Shire Hall on the 12th ult., over 100 players. A varied programme, capitally performed, included Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' Overture; Mr. Brewer's Idyll, 'Springtime'; Beethoven's Eighth Symphony; Berlioz's 'Dance of the Sylphs,' and Hungarian March; and what was not the least attractive feature of all, the 'Suite Venitienne,' composed by Mr. W. H. Reed, the leader of the Society's band. Mr. Reed, who conducted his charming Suite, was most enthusiastically received and so was his work. Mr. Dalton Baker sang several songs in his usual finished style, and Mr. Reed played, as a violin solo, Sarasate's 'Zigeunerweisen.' The concert was from all points of view an unqualified success.

The season of the Gloucester Choral Society was brought to a conclusion with what is called 'the President's Concert' on the 19th ult. Mr. Joseph Bennett provided an admirable programme, in which the following artists took part: Madame Ella Russell, and Miss Dorothy Maggs (pianist), and Messrs. Ffrangcon-Davies, Alfred Gibson (violin), F. Griffith (flautist), and Charles Fry (elocutionist). It was a veritable feast of good things.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Waterloo Choral Society—one of the most vigorous of local organizations—gave a successful concert in the Alexandra Rooms, Blundellsands, on the 9th ult. The works rendered were Goring Thomas's Cantata 'The Swan and the Skylark' and Mendelssohn's 'Loreley.' Under the able direction of Mr. J. W. Appleyard both received effective and artistic treatment.

The Grange Road (Birkenhead) Presbyterian Church Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Dallas Norris, gave a commendable rendering of 'Elijah' on the 19th ult. The principals were Miss Harriette Green, Madame Alexander, and Mr. Walter H. Wyatt.

The St. Cecilia Choral Society, Birkenhead, like that of Waterloo, performed on March 26 'The Swan and the Skylark' (Goring Thomas) and 'Loreley' (Mendelssohn), giving careful interpretations of both works, and winning especial favour by their treatment of the last-mentioned.

The Welsh Choral Union, aided by Madame Sobrino, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Lloyd-Chandos, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, gave an admirable performance of 'Elijah' on March 30, in the Philharmonic Hall, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies singing the part of the Prophet with his usual fine and dramatic insight.

A choir of 700 voices assembled in St. George's Hall on the 19th ult., on the occasion of the Welsh Methodist Psalmody Festival. Mr. Tom Price conducted the Festival and Dr. A. L. Peace was at the organ. Nearly thirty choirs were engaged, and the six months' rehearsal had not been in vain.

Amongst other concerts since my last letter have been the Pilots', the last Harrison Concert of the season (at which Madame Melba appeared), the visit of the Kneisel Quartet and the annual Scottish Concert.

Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' were given at the Philharmonic on March 26 by the Hallé Choir with splendid effect. Miss Lillie Wormald, Madame Annie Walker, and Mr. Harold Wilde were the principals. During this concert the most interesting début in Liverpool of Miss Dorothy Bridson occurred. Miss Bridson has close family associations with the city, and her performance was watched with keen interest. She was accorded, rightly, a most enthusiastic greeting; and her violin playing is remarkable for purity of tone and breadth of effect.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Pension and Benevolent Fund of the Hallé Orchestra represents the most important of the steps taken in recent years for the purpose of giving greater stability to the institutions of musical Manchester. The Fund, which originated in a suggestion made by Dr. Richter, has now been in existence some four or five years, during which it has been slowly but steadily increased by voluntary contributions and by the proceeds of the annual concert at the end of the subscription series. Just recently it has been formally reconstituted, with a committee representing the interests most nearly concerned, namely, the Hallé Committee and the personnel of the Orchestra. There is every prospect that the business connected with it will be properly managed, and it is hoped that in about four years' time from now the Fund may begin practically to serve its purpose. An unexpected piece of good fortune was the practical patronage of Her Majesty the Queen by a donation of £100 accompanied by a graceful letter to the conductor. So far as is known here, this is the first Fund of the kind to be established in England. Its probable bearing on future developments is obvious.

At the special concert given in aid of the Fund in question the services of the conductor, though not those of the Orchestra and soloists, are given gratuitously. This year a Wagnerian programme was decided upon as the most suitable for the purpose, which was twofold—to draw a good house for the benefit of the Fund and to display the Orchestra at its best. In both respects the concert (given on March 24) was completely successful. The playing was magnificent in familiar concert selections from the 'Flying Dutchman,' 'Tristan,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Parsifal,' 'Walküre,' and 'Götterdämmerung.' Mr. Webster Millar—the best of the singers trained here—gave a performance of the 'Preislied' so good as to increase his already considerable reputation. His success with the public was unequalled, and Dr. Richter—not too easily satisfied where 'Meistersinger' is concerned—gave the performance his warm commendation. Miss Brema once more gave the terribly trying vocal part in the scene that culminates in the suttee of Brünnhilde.

For the opera recital on March 26 in the Whitworth Hall, by students of the Royal Manchester College, Mozart's 'Magic Flute' was this year chosen. The general level of the performance was good, but there was nothing of conspicuous merit, except the Tamino of Mr. Webster Millar and the Papageno of Mr. Frank Barker—both pupils of Mr. Acton. At the concluding Brodsky concert of the season, on the 20th ult., there was an enormous audience—larger even than usual—in consequence of Lady Hallé's presence and co-operation. That distinguished violinist, unsurpassed by artists of her own sex, was associated with Dr. Brodsky in a model rendering of Bach's Concerto for Two Violins. All profits on these concerts are devoted to the Students' Sustentation Fund, and there is reason this year to expect a somewhat better result than usual.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Northumberland Orchestral Society, under the baton of Mr. J. H. Beers, commendably revived Gade's little-known Fourth Symphony at their annual concert on March 21, an additional item of interest being 'Eventide,' from Dr. G. J. Bennett's Orchestral Suite in D minor.

At the concert of the Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society (our oldest organization), in pursuance of the apparent policy of presenting standard or previously-performed works, Cherubini's Mass in C formed the principal feature; while the Postal Telegraph Choral Society—whose very name is suggestive of modernity—showed great boldness in venturing upon Dr. Elgar's 'King Olaf.' Both Societies were assisted by local orchestras, and the conductors were respectively Mr. J. E. Jeffries and Mr. J. Hutchinson.

It is a striking commentary upon the public musical taste of a town of one hundred thousand inhabitants, that the performance of a legitimate choral work by the only choral Society should involve financial loss, and that a concert performance of operatic music should attract a house. Such is the repeated experience of the South Shields Choral Society (Mr. M. Fairs), whose recent programme of lengthy extracts from 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin' drew a very large audience.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union, under the able direction of Mr. N. Kilburn, performed on the 12th ult. Dvorák's highly original 'Spectre's Bride,' and there was an interesting quasi-novelty in the shape of Mozart's Concerto for Flute and Harp, the solo portions of which were played by Mr. A. W. Arlom and Miss Florence Walton. Other praiseworthy choral performances were those of Gounod's 'Faust' at Stockton, and Barnett's 'Ancient Mariner' at Middleton St. George, both under the baton of Mr. Arthur Wilson.

At Mr. Andrew Bevan's second chamber concert in Sunderland on March 24, the concert-giver joined with Miss Adela Verne in the presentation of Beethoven's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in G (Op. 30) and Grieg's Sonata in F (Op. 8).

The Tynemouth Amateur Vocal Society gave their second Invitation Concert in the Palace on the 13th ult., when Goring Thomas's 'Sun Worshippers' and the 'Spring' section of Haydn's 'Seasons' were performed. The choir and orchestra were efficient; and Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Harry Dearth, and Mr. Henry Plevy were the solo vocalists; and Mr. M. Faris conducted.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The month has been a busy one among the smaller city and district choral and instrumental bodies. Its most important happening was the concert of the Sheffield Choral Union, a well-managed and enterprising body which has progressed exceedingly during the season just closing. Mr. J. Duffell directed excellent performances of Cowen's 'Ode to the Passions,' Sullivan's 'Thanksgiving Te Deum,' and some Wagner selections.

The Walkley Musical Society gave a meritorious performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' under Mr. H. Brown, and the 130 choristers of the Heeley Musical Union (Mr. M. Tomlinson) gave an excellent account of the choral music in Gadsby's 'Lord of the Isles.' Successful concerts have also been given by the musical societies at Ecclesfield (Mr. T. Brameld), at Tideswell—where a well-studied performance of 'Elijah' was given under Mr. H. Middleton—and at Heeley, where an excellent orchestral society is directed by Mr. W. Chapman. The St. Barnabas Choral Society (Mr. H. Bruster), a suburban body, also gave an enjoyable concert.

The Sheffield Orchestra, directed by Dr. Coward, gave a concert in the Albert Hall on the 21st ult., playing an admirable programme, which included Tschaikevsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. After a season of suspended animation the reappearance of this fine local professional orchestra was very welcome, and it is most earnestly to be hoped that its revival will be permanent. Mr. John Dunn contributed some violin solos.

Mr. J. H. Maunder's Lenten cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was performed at Fulwood Wesleyan Chapel on March 27. The choir consisted of thirty voices, the composer himself presiding at the organ, and the excellence of the choral singing reflected much credit on the conductor, Mr. J. W. Ibberson, who is organist and choirmaster of the chapel.

LEEDS.

By a singular coincidence Leeds can boast of performances of three of Bach's most notable choral works within a week. On March 23 the Philharmonic Society introduced the colossal B minor Mass at the last of the joint Philharmonic and Subscription Concerts. Exceptional pains had been taken in preparing this great and exacting work. By the generosity of the President of the Society (Mr. C. F. Tetley), the entire chorus were taken over to Manchester for the purpose of full rehearsal with the Hallé Orchestra; the conductor, Sir Charles Stanford, had been ably seconded by his chorus-master, Mr. Fricker, and the result was a sense of security I have never before felt in a performance of the Mass. The general characteristic was brilliance. There was the comfortable assurance that the singers were at home in their task; and the Kyrie, though as solemn as it should be, had none of the lugubriousness that results from the imperfect intonation which so often accompanies it. The principals were Miss Kate Anderson, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. John Harrison, and Mr. Watkin Mills, who, if not ideally fitted for their task, sang artistically and in some cases effectively.

On March 28 the 'St. Matthew' Passion was given, according to annual custom, at the Leeds Parish Church, under Mr. Alfred Benton's direction; and on the 29th the 'St. John' Passion was appropriately given at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, a church of unique interest, built by a Leeds alderman in Stuart times, the interior of which is made picturesque by richly-carved oak fittings of the same date. The 'St. John' Passion had been introduced to Leeds at this church in 1876; but this was its first revival, and, after a very creditable rendering under the organist, Mr. Albert Jowett, it is to be hoped that the work will not be again shelved. On the same day a still more antique version of the Passion was given at the Church of St. Chad, Leeds: a selection from the Four Passions of Heinrich Schütz, following the arrangement in Messrs. Novello's Octavo Edition, but slightly expanding it so as to include the narratives of the Last Supper and the Crucifixion, which the Vicar, the Rev. W. H. Stables, who is himself an able musician, translated for the purpose. One might have expected that the interest of such archaic music would be chiefly, if not entirely, antiquarian, but there is a simple and direct expressiveness about the music that gives it freshness even after nearly two and a-half centuries. It was reverently and expressively sung under the direction of the organist, Mr. Percy Richardson. In each of these Passion services the forces employed were practically local; in the last instance the regular choir of the church were entirely responsible for the performance. At the Parish Church and at St. Chad's a conductor was dispensed with; in the other case Mr. Jowett conducted, Mr. Fricker acting as organist.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The York Musical Society, inspired by its energetic conductor, Mr. T. T. Noble, essayed Brahms's 'German Requiem' on March 22, which is no doubt the most exacting work the Society has attempted. Choral singing is not so much the 'daily bread' of the eastern half of the county as of the western manufacturing districts, so that Mr. Noble had his difficulties, and, if they were not entirely surmounted, the result was encouraging. The singing of the principals, Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. Dan Price, was thoroughly artistic. In the little city of Ripon—where the watchman blowing his big horn at the curfew hour reminds one so pleasantly of 'Die Meistersinger'—the Cathedral organist, Mr. C. L. Moody, has, like his colleague of York, worked hard to create some local enthusiasm for good music. On March 31, at a special service in the Cathedral, he conducted an interesting performance of the 'St. Matthew' Passion. Members of the Cathedral choir sang all the solo parts, save the contralto, which was sung with artistic feeling and a finished technique by Mrs. H. M. Bower, a Ripon amateur, who entered completely into the spirit of the work and of the occasion. Mr. C. W. Perkins, of Birmingham, was most useful at the organ, having apparently mastered the difficult acoustics of the building, and variety of colour was added by the use of pianoforte (Mr. H. Lines) and drums (Mr. Gordon Cleather). On the 8th ult. Mr. Moody transferred his activity to the concert room, where the Ripon Choral Society gave Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.' The latter was new to Ripon, and, as it is one of those things which improve on acquaintance, the plan was adopted of giving it twice—at the beginning and close of the concert. Hans von Bülow, as is well known, adopted this method with the Choral Symphony, and it was first followed by Dr. Elgar at one of the Worcester concerts which he conducts. It is an expedient which has all the advantages of an 'encore' without its disadvantages, for the repetition of a work of moderate dimensions is not unwelcome to any earnest musician, and coming at the close of the proceedings it allows for the previous exodus of all who are, for various reasons, content with a single hearing. The chorus sang brightly and knew their work well, and the orchestra were fairly efficient though of small dimensions. Mr. Brearley sang the 'Onaway' song with great charm of voice, and Mrs. H. M. Bower introduced a song by the conductor which she sang expressively.

The Huddersfield Subscription Concerts, which range over the whole field of art, and sometimes step outside it, ended brilliantly on March 29 with an orchestral concert at which Dr. Richter conducted two important works of Tschaikevsky:

the almost inevitable 'Pathetic' Symphony, and the much less hackneyed Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, of which a very fine performance was given, the soloist, Mr. Fred Dawson, playing with splendid verve and fire. The Symphony was no less sympathetically played, and as a detail it may be of interest to record that Dr. Richter returned to his earlier habit of conducting the five-four movement throughout. Miss Agnes Nicholls sang a very remarkable soprano air from Mozart's 'Seraglio' making exceptional demands upon the singer, including an enormous range, to all of which she proved equal. At the concluding concert of the Middlesbrough Musical Union, on the 13th ult., Dvorák's 'Spectre's Bride' was given. The chorus sang with remarkable ease and refinement, and the performance was altogether of a high order. The principals, Miss Ethel Wood, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Burnett, were all excellent. Mr. Kilburn introduced in the miscellaneous part of the programme a curiosity in the shape of Mozart's Concerto for Flute and Harp, a work 'written to order' and consequently not very deeply felt, but characteristic and interesting. The soloists were Mr. Alom and Miss Walton.

Foreign Notes.

BADEN-BADEN.

In 1862, at the inauguration of the theatre, there was performed Berlioz's 'Béatrice et Bénédict'—an opera which the French master had specially written for the occasion—and conducted by him in person. In commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth a tablet has been placed in the theatre.

BERLIN.

The programme of the last Joachim-Quartet concert of the present season consisted of Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1), Schubert's grand Quintet in C (Op. 163), and, for the first time here, Stanford's Quintet in C minor (Op. 86).

BRUSSELS.

The Joachim Quartet gave a 'Beethoven' festival at the Cercle Artistique towards the end of March, i.e., with the sixteen quartets of the master performed in the course of four evenings. At the close of the cycle M. Van der Bruggen, Minister of Fine Arts, came forward and announced to the eminent violinist that at the proposal of the Government the King, wishing to perpetuate the remembrance of those splendid soirées, and to honour the great artist, created Dr. Joachim Commander of the Order of Leopold.—Madame Blanche Marchesi achieved great success in the rôle of Elisabeth in an excellent performance of 'Tannhäuser' at La Monnaie.—The programme of Ysaye's third concert was devoted to Russian music. It included Rimski-Korsakoff's 'Russische Ostern,' Glinka's overture to 'Russlan and Ludmilla,' Glazounow's 'Moyen-Age,' and Tanéïew's overture to 'Orestie.'

COLOGNE.

Otto Lohse, the Strasburg conductor, has been appointed successor to Professor Kleffel at the Stadttheater of this city.

HELSINGFORS.

A Violin Concerto in D minor by Jean Sibelius was performed for the first time by Victor Novacek at a concert devoted entirely to works of this composer.—Dr. Elgar's Orchestral Variations were played here for the first time at a symphony concert under the direction of Robert Kajanus. The interesting programme included a Symphony in A by the late Kalinnikow, and César Franck's 'Rédemption.'

LUCCA.

Luigi Boccherini, the contemporary of Haydn, and like the latter a prolific composer, was born in this city on February 19, 1743, and died at Madrid on May 28, 1805. The centenary of the distinguished composer's death is to be duly celebrated here next year.

PARIS.

The directors of the national archives have just published an inventory of the royal archives under Louis XIV., Louis XV., and Louis XVI.—i.e., of all papers and documents concerning the royal châteaux and palaces (Louvre, Tuileries, Versailles, Marly, Fontainebleau, Compiègne, &c.), the Menus-plaisirs, and among other things, the Opéra and the Comédie Italienne. The classification of these documents has been entrusted to the architect, M. de Curzon, who has written a valuable preface, and also furnished a general alphabetical index.—M. Tournemire has won the prize of 10,000 francs offered by the city of Paris for a musical composition. His score is entitled, 'Le sang de la Sirène.' Honourable mention is made of M. Pierné's 'La Croisade des enfants,' and a sum of 3,000 francs has been awarded to him.

RATISBON.

Richard Strauss will conduct the second Bavarian Festival which is to be given here, May 22—24. Among the works to be performed are: Bruckner's Ninth Symphony, with the Te Deum, Liszt's 'Graner Mass,' and Strauss's 'Hymnus a 16.'

ROME.

Perosi's latest oratorio, 'The Last Judgment,' was produced at the Teatro Costanzi last month. The Pope having expressed a wish to hear the work, it was also performed at the Vatican.

VIENNA.

Salomon Sulzer, reformer of the Jewish service of song, was born on March 30, 1804, and the hundredth anniversary of that event has been duly celebrated. Sulzer at the age of eighteen was cantor at Nohmenes in the Vorarlberg, his birthplace, but in 1826 he went to Vienna, where for the long period of fifty-six years he was active as a reformer. He was also highly esteemed as professor of singing at the Conservatorium, to which post he was appointed in 1845. Schubert's setting (to Hebrew words) of the Ninety-second Psalm for baritone solo and mixed chorus was published in Sulzer's 'Schir Zion.'

WEIMAR.

An opera in three acts entitled 'Buddha,' by Max Vogrich, has been produced here with success, under the direction of Krzyzanowski.

Miscellaneous.

Mr. Tobias Matthay writes: 'May I point out a little slip of the pen occurring in that very kind review you gave of my work "The Act of Touch," as it might lead to a misconception of my teachings? Your reviewer quotes me as saying, that "The more rapid the key-depression the harsher is the quality" of the sound. Instead of "rapid," this should read "sudden." For my teaching is, that the difference in key-attack between sympathetic and harsh quality consists in the key-depression being more gradual or more sudden respectively; whereas it is the degree of loudness that is determined by the rapidity of the descent.'

The University of McGill at Montreal has established a Conservatorium of Music within the University, the organizing and direction of which have been placed in the hands of Mr. Charles A. E. Harriis, of Ottawa. The Conservatorium will be opened next September with a staff of thirty professors and accommodation for 500 students. All the pupils will be prepared for the examinations of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music. Students will also be prepared in the Conservatorium for the degrees of Bachelor and Doctor in Music, which degrees are to be granted by examination at McGill.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. A. K.—The question you raise, though not new, is an interesting one—the re-orchestration, here and there, of the classics in music. With regard to your first reference—Schubert's great Symphony in C, twenty-four bars before the end of the first movement—in an ordinary orchestra, wherein the wood-wind is not doubled, the melody of the theme is assigned to one flute, one oboe, one clarinet, and one bassoon, as the horns do not play the tune in its entirety. But as the accompaniment is thundered out by trumpets, trombones, drums, and strings, all playing their loudest, the noble strain is practically obscured. Schubert never heard his Symphony performed, or he might have altered the scoring at this point; moreover, his wood-wind instruments may have been coarser and more penetrating in tone; and, on the other hand, his strings, brass, &c., less sonorous than those of our day. Therefore, in such a case, and in order to realize the obvious intention of the composer, it seems justifiable for conductors to judiciously reinforce the means for bringing out the melody, as Herr Weingartner and other conductors, in a spirit of true reverence, are in the habit of doing. We may support this opinion by analogy. Old-time composers for the organ registered their pieces according to the instruments then in vogue. For instance, William Russell, in one of his Voluntaries, directs that a melody played on a swell reed should be accompanied by two diapasons of the great organ! Supposing present-day organists (playing on a modern organ) were to follow out Russell's injunction literally, the result would be a caricature of the composer's intention—the letter, not the spirit. The other point you raise shall be looked into and, if anything definite is discovered, it shall be reported upon in our next issue.

G. STRING.—Beethoven's Posthumous Quartet in B flat (Op. 130) is said to have been performed for the first time in England on March 26, 1836, nine years after the date of its publication. The occasion was the second of some Quartet Concerts given at the now defunct Hanover Square Rooms, the performers being Henry Blagrove, Gattie, J. H. B. Dando, and Charles Lucas. The Morning Post, in a notice of the concert, regarded 'uncertainty' as one of the characteristics of the composer, and in illustration thereof compared Beethoven to 'a fiery steed broke loose, galloping onwards until he comes to four cross-roads; there he waits for a moment, neighing and snorting, while his pursuers are totally at a loss to imagine which way he may turn; and if they fancy he inclines towards the right, it is a hundred to one that, by a sudden start off, he turns to the left.' This equestrian comparison may be epitomised in a word—'unbuttoned.'

H. T. (Capetown).—'The Devil's Opera' (by G. A. Macfarren) was produced at the English Opera House, afterwards the Lyceum Theatre (now recently demolished) on August 13, 1838. The libretto was by George Macfarren, father of the composer. The latter records that 'on a radiant Sunday, June 3 [1838], my father and I walked up and down Alfred Place [near Tottenham Court Road, where they then resided] conjecturing incidents, and welding them into a story, in all of which the devil was necessarily conspicuous.' The principal personage in the opera is mute throughout, but he indulges 'in evolutions, sursauts, and legerdemain.'

H. M. G. (1).—For exercises and studies suitable to your pupil see Plaidy's Technical Studies, Köhler's Studies (Op. 151), and Czerny's (Op. 599). You will find Kunz's Two Hundred Canons (Op. 14) invaluable in more ways than one. (2.) As to how many hours a day 'an average pupil' should practise in order to qualify for the Licentiatehip of the Royal Academy of Music, it would all depend upon the average and the pupil. It is not so much the actual time spent, but the mental application combined therewith that speeds the process of preparation.

CYMRO.—The entrance and tuition fees for a student's first year at the Royal Academy of Music would amount to about £40; each succeeding year, thirty-three guineas. Residence and maintenance in London for thirty-six weeks in each year would, of course, be extra. It is desirable to pursue a course of study for not less than three years at the Institution.

E. W. B.—The song by Marzials, entitled 'My love has come' (a setting of Christina Rossetti's words 'My heart is like a singing bird') is published by Messrs. Boosey and Co. Your other inquiry—'Devonshire Folk-Songs'—doubtless refers to 'Songs of the West,' by Baring-Gould and Fleetwood Shepherd; these are published by Messrs. Methuen and Co.

DOUBLE BAR.—The incident to which you refer is related of Hans von Bülow. On one occasion he was publicly presented at a concert with a laurel wreath. He placed that green tribute of homage under the pianoforte, at the same time saying that while he was much obliged, he was not a vegetarian.

SCALE.—The diatonic scale is of Greek origin, having been introduced about the middle of the sixth century B.C. Why the Greeks constructed it in the manner they did is a matter of conjecture. Any reliable text-book will give you information concerning the tetrachordic construction of the modern major scale.

J. P. H.—Add to your list the 'Sonata Form' primer, by W. H. Hadow, and 'A Course of Harmony,' by Bridge and Sawyer. Your coach should be able to tell you as to your prospects in passing your examination in December. We sincerely hope you will, and with honours.

ANXIOUS.—The turn on B flat in the trio section of Schubert's Scherzo in B flat (pianoforte) should be played—B flat, C, B flat, A natural, and B flat. The repetition of the Scherzo finishes the piece.

GAILLIV.—Theodore Baker's Biographical Dictionary of Musicians, to be obtained of Mr. Charles Woolhouse, Wardour Street, Soho.

E. L. G.—You had better submit your old violin to Messrs. W. E. Hill and Sons, 140, New Bond Street, who will give you an expert professional opinion on its value.

D. L.—'The Harmonisation of Melody,' by Professor Armes, is a book published by the Royal College of Organists, Hart Street, Bloomsbury, at one shilling net.

SECRETARY.—We can only suggest that you should advertise.

L. M. H.—Make application to some reliable concert agents. Your accompaniment qualification should help you.

IGNORANT.—The double sign ten. over a note indicates that it is to be firmly pressed and held its full length.

G.—Buda-Pesth.

BEETHOVEN

AND HIS

NINE SYMPHONIES

BY GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

PRICE, CLOTH, GILT, SIX SHILLINGS.

"I recognise it, without the smallest hesitation, as one of the most important and valuable among recent contributions to musical literature. . . . The best informed of professional musicians may learn a great deal about the master-works of Beethoven from Sir George Grove, whose wide reading and acute perceptiveness have enabled him to marshal an astonishing array of facts, and whose intimate acquaintance with the spirit of the master has qualified him to throw light upon pages which, to many, are still obscure. . . . I must be satisfied with the remarks already made, earnestly recommending all who recognise Beethoven's greatness as shown in his immortal Symphonies to obtain Sir George Grove's volume, and walk in the luminous paths through which he is ready to conduct all who trust his guidance."—Daily Telegraph.

The first system of the musical score for 'CHRISTUS FACTUS EST.' It consists of four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in G major and 4/4 time. The lyrics are: 'us - que ad mor - tem, mor - suf - fered, and was bu - ried, He suf -'. The piano accompaniment is in G major and 4/4 time, with a melody in the right hand and a bass line in the left hand. The system ends with a double bar line.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS

WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Single Specimen copies sent post-free to the Clergy and Organists, on application to the Publishers direct, at the following prices: Hymns, with Tunes, 2s. : Hymns only, 8d.

PREFACE.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason, the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern, so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

The lack of certain well-known hymns in that book and the need of extra hymns for certain occasions are often felt. This is clear from the fact that many supplemental appendixes and leaflets are now used with it, particularly books for mission services, children's use, and other special occasions.

It may be said by many that we already have too many hymns, and that a large number are most unsuitable. There is no subject upon which persons differ more thoroughly than the suitability of different hymns. No two people will ever agree as to all the hymns in any collection. The only way of dealing satisfactorily with this problem seems to be to give a comprehensive compilation, together with guidance as to the character of each hymn. Hence, in the index of first lines a letter has been prefixed to each hymn giving an indication as to its characteristic—whether a hymn of direct praise, a prayer, or sentimental, historical, etc., etc. Those who object to hymns of any particular class can, therefore, easily avoid their use.

Guided by these two principles, hymns have been included for the following reasons:—

1. Hymns which, being in constant request, are inserted, not necessarily because of their merit, but rather because they have been found to be of real use in many cases.

2. Since the formation of other hymn books, much greater prominence has been given to music in connection with Choral Celebrations, and with this has grown a want of more hymns, especially short ones of one or two verses for different parts of the service.

3. So also has there grown a demand for further hymns on Almshousing, for Processionals of a greater length than usual, for Harvest, Flower, and Mission Services, besides other special occasions.

4. Finally, it is felt by very many to be a mistake to accustom children to the use of a Children's hymn book which will be discarded when they have grown older. Far better is it to accustom them at once, when young, to love the hymn book which they will use in after life. For this purpose a few more children's hymns than are supplied in other books seem to be wanted.

MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS

BY

AGNES HONORIA LEEDS,

LICENTIATE OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

108 pp. Oblong Folio, profusely illustrated in colours, bound in coloured paper board covers, cloth back, price 7s. 6d.

"MY FIRST PIANO LESSONS" is a book which appeals to the minds of children between the ages of four and eight. Knowing the love which these little folks have for pictures, and the educational value of pictorial aids in imparting knowledge to those of tender years, the author has embodied in the present work a system of teaching notation by means of illustrations of familiar objects, a method which she has employed for many years with the greatest success. The scheme is entirely systematic and progressive, and by its means the child-pupil is led to form an actual friendship with the individual notes.

With regard to the value of notes, the method followed is that of grouping them into one FAMILY—the members of which become personally known to the pupil—the value of each note being clearly indicated by its degree of family relationship. Thus we have "Mr. Semibreve, Mrs. Minim, Master Crotchet, Miss Quaver, Master Semiquaver, and Baby Demisemiquaver." Furthermore, the child is initiated in a Game of Exchanging Notes, according to the respective values of the various notes.

The book also contains Elementary Ear Exercises and a special chapter is devoted to Signs and Ornaments. Other sections are Scales in One Octave, Easy Sight-reading Exercises, Easy Finger Exercises, together with little Solos, and Duets for Teacher and Pupil, and for little Pupils by themselves.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

An admirably got up little book, cleverly illustrated in colours, and entitled "My first Piano Lessons," would make a welcome present for children commencing their music studies. The author, Agnes Honoria Leeds, evidently understands the art of interesting the young people.

YORKSHIRE POST.

An ingenious attempt to make the path of very juvenile students less wearisome. . . . With a sympathetic and ready teacher, who takes the trouble to assimilate the method of this book, it may prove of distinct value.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The personalities of the different time values are quaint, and may arrest the attention of the beginner, who could not be made to care for plain crotchets and quavers; and the time-signatures are very clearly explained. Altogether the book is a valuable example of the Kindergarten variety.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

Happy the child whose music teacher puts into his or her little hands "My First Music Lesson," a book by Miss Agnes Honoria Leeds, L.R.A.M.! It is a delightfully simple and extremely attractive exposition of the elements of music by means of humorous and numerous coloured illustrations and easily understood letterpress. . . . the book may be commended to the attention of all parents and music teachers, as a simple and effective method of teaching children "reading without tears" in music.

THE QUEEN.

The book is compiled with illustrated notes, and makes the learning of music by very young children a delight instead of a toil. . . . The pictures are excellent.

MANCHESTER COURIER.

There are several capital pictures, and the methods suggested are in every particular sound as well as interesting. We have tried the book upon the best judges, some young children, and they are delighted. Most of the accompanying music is by Mr. Hubert Oke, and is well adapted for its purpose.

DUNDEE COURIER.

This is quite a novelty in the way of get up, and is intended for the use of very young children only, so many of whom weary of piano lessons on account of their dullness and dryness. . . . The book, which is beautifully printed and illustrated will, in the hands of a sympathetic teacher, be the means of eliminating much of the dullness and dryness from first lessons in the pianoforte.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

It is a really wonderful book. The idea is to put the rudiments of pianoforte playing in such an attractive way that the youngest beginner cannot find the lessons dull or dry in the least. . . . The little ones would go to this book as eagerly as to any other picture book, and get over all the drudgery quite imperceptibly. At the same time they would learn to love music instead of hating it as so often happens. It is a clever invention, and the gain to the cause of music will be very great.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Miss Agnes H. Leeds, L.R.A.M., has evolved a method by which the necessary instruction is imparted through the agency of brightly coloured illustrations and little rhymes and stories. . . . Teachers, who usually find these preliminary lessons as irksome as do their pupils, will welcome this ingenious plan of imparting the names of the notes and their time values to the mind of the child.

SCHOOL GUARDIAN.

This book is an attractive and ingenious adaptation of the use of coloured pictures for teaching the rudiments of music to very young children. It is, we think, certain of a cordial welcome in many homes and schools, and is well calculated to relieve, if not to get rid of, the tedium and dryness of the first lessons on the pianoforte. Its "production" is worthy of the high reputation of Messrs. Novello in the musical world. We commend the work to the notice of parents and teachers generally.

THE PARENTS' REVIEW.

The author has certainly succeeded in producing, as the result of her very wide experience, an entertaining and probably effectual way of introducing children to the mysteries of "Mr. Crotchet," "Miss Quaver," and the like.

THE BOOKSELLER.

The little ones are sure to be attracted by the striking cover and clever and humorous coloured illustrations, and the book should be found a very useful aid in interesting a child in the beginnings of musical knowledge—no easy first step.

THE TEACHER.

In this handsome book, the writer, herself a gifted teacher, weaves a species of family story around the notes, names, values and positions on the staves. . . . The illustrations are strikingly and beautifully drawn and coloured, the value of the book for teaching purposes being augmented by a series of tuneful duets and solos, which little fingers will have no difficulty in playing.

“IN THE SOUTH”

(ALASSIO)

CONCERT OVERTURE FOR ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(OP. 50.)

FULL SCORE AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS IN THE PRESS.

Arrangements for Pianoforte Solo and Duet, by ADOLF SCHMID, in the Press.

THE TIMES.

The contrast is admirably pointed, the themes are delightfully fresh and gracious, and their treatment masterly, although the work would bear a slight curtailment, notably in the passage where a part of the military music is textually repeated. This undue length is, however, but a very slight blemish on a remarkably beautiful work.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

We account “In the South” to be a really great and beautiful creation. . . . The fresh feeling of gladness; the gentle and musing melancholy which comes of contemplating exquisite scenes of Nature; the energy which thoughts of a great heroic past develop—all are here in rich abundance, and best of all is the artistic restraint that controlled the musician's thick-coming fancies, and made his whole powers minister to the beauty without which music is no better than a tinkling cymbal.

STANDARD.

The contrapuntal writing is masterly, and the scoring is most picturesque, and in its entirety the overture fully sustains the reputation of its composer.

DAILY NEWS.

I think it contains some of the best writing the composer has yet given to the world. . . . The scoring throughout is masterly, and, what is more to the point, it is individual, owing but very little to Wagner, Tschai-kovsky, or Richard Strauss. There is a fine atmosphere of poetry in the music. . . . The composer has never written anything so powerful as the working-out section in which the composer tells us that he has “endeavoured to paint the relentless and domineering onward force of the ancient day and give a sound-picture of the strife and wars of a later time.” The music is full of energy and picturesqueness, and makes a fine contrast to the restful section dealing with a folk-song sung by the viola.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The opening seems illumined by sunshine until an element of disturbance enters with the idea of “the ancient might of Rome,” and drums and trumpets suggest a somewhat irregular march. The resumption of tranquillity with the tinkle of sheep bells brings a melodious strain for harp, lower strings and horn, which is practically sustained until the close. Dr. Elgar's individuality in the handling of striking themes is apparent throughout, and a second hearing of the overture will be awaited with pleasure by all who were present last night.

GRAPHIC.

The music is characterised by that fine, healthy, open-air feeling which is so often to be found in Dr. Elgar's work. The splendid vitality of the opening phrases, the plaintive song of the shepherd, and the martial strains of the section in which Dr. Elgar depicts the “strife and wars of a later time,” all show him in his happiest vein, and the overture must rank among the most successful of his orchestral works.

GLOBE.

The themes are not only very beautiful in themselves, but they are also woven together with consummate skill, and the new overture is one of the finest of all Dr. Elgar's works.

MORNING POST.

The brilliant opening suggests the open air and breathes a spirit of buoyant optimism. Very admirable is the part where the composer's thoughts are aroused by the contemplation of old Roman remains. . . . Particularly charming is the employment of a popular tune, allotted to a solo viola. . . . It is undoubtedly a brilliant and interesting work.

MORNING LEADER.

It is a work glowing with life and colour, and full of spontaneous melody. The Roman section is the strongest and most virile music that Dr. Elgar has written, and the serene beauty of the section in which the shepherd's folk-song is heard will dwell in the memory.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Elgar has sought for the divine life of an Italian spring, and, for the honour of English music, he has found it. . . . Elgar fills up his score with a fine sense of mastery, while all the time he is interpreting for his hearers the secret lessons of the land which has evidently captured the remotest places of his spirit. It was natural, too, that the genius and conquest which accompanied the march of old Rome across Germany and France even to the north of England should have attracted his poetical and meditative mind. In this portion of the overture the music rises to a height which well may be called Imperial. . . . Among all the composers who have used Italy for their inspiration, Elgar has brought back most of the essential spirit of the country.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

The new overture is marked by rich imaginative play and graphic touch. In form it gravitates, like “Cockaigne,” to the “Meistersinger” type, but the atmosphere is absolutely new, and the composer's mastery of intricate line is freshly revealed.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

(Op. 37, No. 6).

"The second novelty was a tenor song, 'Eléanore,' a recent composition by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. It has melody of an expressive and thoroughly vocal character, and the orchestral colouring is charming if not almost too luscious in effect. Mr. Coates sang it with finished phrasing, and with an expression which was intimate without being in the least overstrained."—Yorkshire Post, April 14, 1904.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING
THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND
EVENING PRAYER
SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS
FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY,
RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, FINAL AMENS,
VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS
TOGETHER WITH
ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER,
APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, Ch. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

"Mr. W. H. Reed, a violinist-member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, who met with an extremely hearty reception after the first performance of his "Suite Venitienne" at the Promenade Concerts last night, quite defies our criticism by his fearlessness in writing tunes and by the cheerfulness and brightness of his work. For Mr. Reed and his music there is no need of the cheap philosophy which does duty so easily for the 'poetical basis' of so much of our young composers' music. He writes as he feels, evidently; and he writes not only well but sincerely. Small wonder, then, that his suite captivated a very large audience, which recalled him again and again. His suite is not strikingly original. But it is fresh and cheery, unpretentious and clear, and, above all, healthy-minded. In the presentment of his ideas Mr. Reed shows almost a master-hand—largely owing, no doubt, to the fact of his being a member of an orchestra; and in as great a degree as is possible his scoring, admirable and rich and full as it is, compensates for a lack of distinct originality in his thematic material. In any case, however, his suite deserves high rank among the novelties that have been produced this season at these admirable concerts."—The Times.

TECHNIQUE

IN

PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or, briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

RICHARD STRAUSS FESTIVAL.

JOHN HARRISON'S SUCCESS.

THE TIMES says:

"The first of the songs, which were sung in German, with capital expression, by Mr. John Harrison: is a 'Friedensersählung.'"

THE STANDARD says:

"The two principal tenor solos were finely sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE DAILY NEWS says:

"Mr. Harrison, the tenor, sang with a sense of dramatic emphasis one had not expected from him, and at the same time the quality of his voice was good."

THE MORNING POST says:

"Of two tenor songs, one 'The Vision of Peace,' the other from the last act, both are modelled on Wagner; the second is the more striking. The orchestration in the first is heavy, so that the vocalist has a hard fight. Mr. John Harrison sang both extremely well."

THE DAILY GRAPHIC says:

"Two of them well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE says:

"The solo parts of which were taken in first-rate style by Mr. John Harrison."

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN says:

"Two long solos allotted to the hero were sung by Mr. John Harrison, who earned great applause by his beautiful voice and method, and his sincere and refined dramatic expression. His performances stamp him as an artist of the first rank."

THE GLOBE says:

"Two tenor solos, well sung by Mr. John Harrison."

THE STAR says:

"Both were sung with conspicuous beauty of voice and expression by Mr. John Harrison, who thereby showed himself more than equal to the severest of artistic tasks."

DVORÁK'S "STABAT MATER."

"Miss Maud Santley's rich voice and her appropriately dignified interpretation of the contralto music were keenly enjoyed. The fine air 'Inflammatus et Accensus,' could hardly have been more finely sung."—Sheffield Telegraph, Dec. 29, 1903.

"Miss Santley possesses a very rich contralto voice, and her rendering of 'Inflammatus et Accensus' left no doubts as to her artistic perception."—Sheffield Weekly News, Dec. 26, 1903.

(Pupil of Andrew Black, Esq.)

Of the "Sir Charles and Lady Hallé South African Concert Tour," 1895; London (Queen's Hall) Concerts, and principal Provincial Choral Societies; Manchester (Gentlemen's) and Richter Concerts.
Also of the Constantinople Choral Society's Concerts.

"The impersonation of Rinaldo has been sustained by Mr. William Wild, whom the Choral Society of Constantinople had especially engaged from England for this production. He possesses a fine tenor voice of sufficient strength, and above all, uses it very artistically."— Stamboul Journal, March 10, 1904.

"Mr. William Wild, who has been specially engaged by the Constantinople Choral Society, is the possessor of a fine tenor voice of a very sweet quality, and entirely under command. His rendering of the important tenor solos was brilliant, while his artistic merits are enhanced by his modest demeanour."—Levant Herald and Eastern Express, March 21, 1904.

"The tenor, Mr. William Wild, who had come specially from London to sing 'The Crusaders,' proved a great acquisition to the Society. His voice is a pure and very sweet tenor, over which he has complete control. In his solo work and in connection with the chorus, he showed himself a true artist, and it is to be regretted that engagements in England prevented him from giving the public more opportunities of hearing him in this city."—Le Moniteur Oriental,

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE).
(Westminster Abbey.)

Mr. HENRY J. WOOD (Conductor, Queen's Hall Concerts) writes:—

"I, Langham Place, W., Feb. 14. 1901.

"Mr. Montague Borwell is an excellent vocalist.

"He has been most successful both at Queen's Hall, and at my Nottingham and Wolverhampton Concerts, in most difficult and trying rôles, and I consider him one of the most reliable and painstaking baritone vocalists now before the public.

"HENRY J. WOOD."

"ELIJAH" (COLERAINE).—"Mr. Montague Borwell was the bass, and it must be said that his Elijah is a fine performance. Not a point was missing—the irony of the recitative 'Call him louder' was incisively conveyed, and the heroic and devotional sides of the fierce old Hebrew were also splendidly expressed. There are supreme traditions of this part, and it can only be said that Mr. Borwell fully rivalled the best. As the last solo work of the evening, Mr. Borwell's rendering of 'It is enough' remains memorable. You beheld a tragic figure behind the music; a figure borne down by weariness and defeat. The applause at the finish of this was wholly deserved."—Belfast Evening Telegraph, March 10, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (WESLEYAN CHOIRS FESTIVAL).—"Mr. Montague Borwell as the Prophet was admirably suited to the part. He has a fine voice—very musical, and with an unusual degree of dramatic force. His sarcastic emphasis in the 'Baal' music, his pleading tones in 'Lord God of Abraham,' the spirit and dash of 'Is not His word like a fire?' and the plaintive despair of 'It is enough,' were alike admirable."—Holloway and Hornsey Gazette, Nov. 6, 1903.

"ELIJAH" (BRIGHTON).—"Mr. Montague Borwell merits unstinted praise for the masterly manner in which he gave the solos allotted to Elijah. He was grandly effective in his recitatives, and aroused great enthusiasm by his superb renderings of the airs 'Lord God of Abraham' and 'It is enough.'"—Sussex Daily News, March 18, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (CLAPTON).—"The vivid portrayal of the great Prophet's work was grandly rendered by Mr. Montague Borwell, every item of his long performance receiving unstinted applause; the clear enunciation and mellow tone of his voice being well-nigh perfect. His finest effort, without doubt, was the great invocation to God on Mount Carmel, to overthrow by the test of 'the fire' in the sacrifice of the burnt offering, the false prophets of Baal. The mocking notes of derision, 'Call him louder,' &c., were followed with rapt attention and were quite the gem of Mr. Borwell's singing. Again, in the recit., 'O Lord, Thou hast overthrown Thine enemies,' he made a deep impression, while in the beautiful air 'It is enough' he has seldom been heard to better effect."—Recorder, April 15, 1904.

"ELIJAH" (BROMLEY).—"The title-part was splendidly interpreted by Mr. Montague Borwell, and the main feature was manly devotionism. The audience was made to feel that the Prophet was a sincere worshipper. There was no trace of boastfulness, and only a suggestion of righteous irony in the delivery of the Prophet's words in the 'Baal' scene. The dramatic significance of the other portions seemed to arise out of the intense feeling of the singer. Mr. Borwell's earnestness of artistic aim and complete musical intelligence was revealed in every bar he sang. He made a great and genuine success throughout, and in 'Is not His Word' he produced a profound impression on many of his hearers."—Bromley Chronicle.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

Of the Royal Albert Hall, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, and Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, &c.

"ELIJAH" (CLAPTON).—"Miss Winifred Marwood, as is well known, has a soprano voice of singular purity; and the many difficult numbers which fell to her share were given with a musical charm and grace which won for her golden opinions. Her best effort, to our mind, was what has been said to be 'the finest soprano solo ever written in sacred song,' the air 'Hear ye, Israel.'"—Recorder, April 15, 1904.

"FAUST" (GOUNOD).—(GOLDSMITHS' INSTITUTE).—"In the character of Margarita Miss Winifred Marwood was all that could be desired, and gave the difficult 'Jewel' song excellently. She was also very good in the 'Prison' scene terminating with the brilliant trio for Margarita, Faust, and Mephistopheles."—Journal, March, 1904.

CANNOCK.—"The good impression made by Mr. Arthur Sedgley in the first portion of the programme was more than sustained in his song 'Qui s'égno,' from 'The Magic Flute.'
